BATTEN BACK FROM MOSCOW

Smut, Sex, Booze Just Subtle Ruse To Get More News

The Varsity, the undergraduate newspaper, is one of the most important features of this campus. It belongs to every student, it is read by every student (we hope) and it can be shared by every student. He can do more than just read it; he can work for it.

Each year, due to graduation as well as other causes, there are vacancies to be filled on The Varsity staff. These positions are open to you. No experience necessary; just the willingness to work. There are opportunities not only for reporters, but also for anyone interested in laying out the paper, writing features, or clipping articles from other university papers.

The pay is low—non-existent in fact—but the experience of working on The Varsity can be a valuable one. Not only is The Varsity excellent training for those who plan a journalistic career (many prominent newsmen wear The Varsity pin) but for all who work on the paper, the fun enjoyed and the experience gained will more than repay you for the time invested.

All ages — all years — all faculties are equally welcome.

So come on down any time to The Varsity office — just follow the path to the side door of the SAC building and down the stairs. There will be a special Varsity workshov and introductory meeting this Friday, Sept. 25, at 1.10 p.m. However, there will be staffers in the office all day Thursday and Friday. We'll be glad to see you any time.

UC "Frosh" Told "Get Philosophy"

The acquirement of a "positive philosophy of life," was the advice given here last night by Principal F. C. A. Jeanneret of University College at the annual fall convocation.

Some 350 students and professors attended the semi-social gathering in the West Hall of University College.

"The earlier you arrive at a philosophy of your own making, subject of course to evolution with increasing experience and knowledge," Principal Jeanneret said, "the sooner you will achieve that peace of mind which will enable you to accept the buffets of the world with some degree of fortitude and even resignation."

University President, Sydney Smith spoke briefly in welcome at the opening of the convocation.

So far as University College was concerned, he called for a greater "family spirit" among its students.

During the hour-long program a short initiation ceremony took place in which Mr. Jeanneret read to the college the names of those students receiving scholarships as representatives of the whole class.

The President of the Alumnae Association, Mrs. McFarlane, and Miss Cathy May of the Women's Undergraduate Association welcomed the newcomers on behalf of their respective organizations.

MISS FRESHIE, 1954

Captivating Miss Mar Tucker was chosen in Hart House last night as University College's Miss Freshie of 1954.

Sydney Smith Calls On Students For Courtesy Besides Courage

"Let us have no fear of deans or professors—or of presidents; let us have no fear of tests and examinations," said President Sydney Smith in his opening address in Convocation Hall yesterday. He said that fear clouded men's minds and paralyzed their ambitions. Students, he said, would perform far better if they did their work courageously.

He said that not only do we applaud physical courage, but also intellectual and spiritual courage. Yet courage is not equivalent to defiance or stubbornness. Independence is not incompatible with good manners.

He pointed out that by good manners he did not mean an elaborate code of etiquette, the outside polish of a man. "Good manners come from within," he said, "they reflect an attitude of consideration."

Good manners, he continued, show the real greatness of a nation. Quoting the English jurist, Lord Moulton, he said, "true civilization is measured by the extent to which individuals obey the self-imposed, unenforceable rules of conduct."

"In this University we are not prejudiced against teen-agers, and we do not call them by contemptuous names," President Smith said. He pointed out that bad manners are found among every class in society, not just among teen-agers. Students will be treated as reasonable, intelligent human beings.

The president suggested that in a crowd pouring out of a narrow doorway, such as that of Hart House, it is good manners to make way occasionally for fellow-students; and even for professors. Giving up a seat on a street car to an elderly person is another instance of good manners.

Punctuality in attending lectures, said President Smith, is another mark of good manners. He hoped that a combination of courtesy and courage would become typical of Varsity students. "Last year I spoke about independence," he added, "but good manners are also of the utmost importance."

Students Addressed

President of the University Sydney Smith is seen as he speaks to a packed Convocation Hall during his welcoming address here yesterday. The president advised freshmen here not to fear deans or professors—or presidents—for fear, he said, clouded men's minds and paralyzed their ambitions.

Editor Crosses Curtain Finds IUS Hope Dim But Russians Friendly

By MIKE PENGELEY

Returning from a 13,000-mile whirlwind flight to Moscow as special press observer at an International Union of Students' conference, Clyde Batten, Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity, said yesterday that Canadian participation in the organization was "out of the question at the present time."

Batten was the official Canadian University Press representative.

He said the student organization which has branches extending all over the world, showed some symptoms of Communist domination.

Batten disagreed, however, with the head of the six-member delegation from Canada — Tony Enriquez of Ottawa — who told some Canadian newspapers that university students in this country never would be able to associate in the organization.

Students representing universities in two or three other countries, including the United Kingdom, did sign up as "Associate Members" with the IUS, Batten reported.

No official statement was made jointly by the Canadian delegates after their return from the 9-day Moscow conference. Batten pointed out, and he added that Mr. Enriquez's statements, emanating from Ottawa last week have represented his own opinions.

"I think it is extremely pessimistic," The Varsity Chief said, "to suggest that Canadian universities could never, sometime in the future, see their way clear to join."

Some 400 delegates representing university students from 73 countries attended the world conference held in a flag-arrayed main auditorium of Lomonosov University.

Five huge banners with the slogan "Long Live Unity Among University Students" written in five different languages hung from the ceiling of the conference hall.

Talking informally with Russian university students Batten said the general consensus about Canada seemed to be that the average Canadian citizen wanted peace and friendship with the USSR but that leaders in this country were in effect, the pawns of Washington.

Editor Batten's comments on another facet of his Moscow trip went this way: In replies to questions put to him about the Russian female, he said, "They're massive!" The vodka was reported weak.

He was impressed with Russian hospitality but he said the contrast in material well-being between countries behind the Iron Curtain and in the western world were like "night and day".

The average Russian was not as well dressed as the average

Delay Temporary For Library Wing

The new addition to the library is not yet finished, and consequently a temporary delay in services cannot be avoided, said R. H. Blackburn, Chief Librarian, yesterday. Faculty members and students would encounter some delays, he said, but he emphasized that the arrangements were only temporary.

It was hoped last year that the library would be ready for use when students came back in the fall. However the contractor had difficulties during the work. It will be approximately two or three weeks, the Librarian said, before complete facilities are available.

Students wishing books will find most of them at the usual desk — now called the temporary Wallace Room desk — where the overnight service will be handled. However there is another desk in the old Reading room which will handle the two-week service. Overnight stack books will also be given out at the Central Circulating Desk in the Reading Room.

While work on the new wing is being completed, the stacks will not be open to students. Advance reservations are not being taken and the Reading room of the main Library will also be temporarily closed, although the University College Reading room and the Medical Reading room will be open until 9.00 p.m. each night, Monday to Friday. At present the hours for the main building are 9.00 to 5.30, Monday to Friday, and from 9.00 to 5.00 p.m. on Saturday.

Editor Crosses Curtain

Canadian, Batten said although he added that he noticed no striking contrast between conditions in western and eastern-controlled Europe.

Political propaganda fed the Russian people is of a much more subtle variety than that dished up in the U.S. As an example, Batten said that Pravda, the official USSR news agency would never report that "The Supreme Soviet today decreed . . ."; it would be, "The people have decreed that . . ."

Such care in news dissemination behind the Iron Curtain, contributed a sort of "esprit de corps", within the Republic, he said.

The Russian University student is able to discuss foreign political systems but he is unable to be objective about it. He is indoctrinated from the cradle, and feels he must crusade against the world.

Nevertheless, Mr. Batten added, the Russian political thinker still seems to look to Great Britain for leadership in international affairs.

"Russia seems to want friendship with Britain, and propaganda is directed mainly against the United States," Batten said.

Hart House To Open Coeducational Coffee Shop

A co - educational coffeeshop, called "The Arbor Room" will be opened in the basement of Hart House next week. The Arbor Room, which was previously the big lunch room, will be a men's lunchroom, each day until 3 p.m.

After 3 p.m. The Arbor Room will be open to men and women of the University until 11.30 p.m., six days a week.

"It is hoped that the Arbor Room will become the living room of the campus, and serve both men and women graduates, undergraduates and staff of the University," Warden of Hart House, Joseph McCulley said.

The Arbor Room will be opened officially by the President of the University, Dr. Sidney E. Smith, on Friday, October 1, at 3 p.m.

An amusing mural, depicting typical incidents and personalities of college life is being executed by Hugh Niblock, a graduate of this University and formerly cartoon editor of THE VARSITY.

Crests of the major colleges and faculties will adorn the walls. The color scheme of the room is green and brown, emphasizing the motif of the University Tree, which is featured in the curtain fabric, specially designed for the room by Elizabeth Hooey.

During hours when the Arbor Room will be open to female guests, access will be had through a new doorway near the stage door on the south front of the House.

Hart House was presented to the University by the Massey Foundation for the use of men. The Deed of Gift, outlining the wishes of the donors, made provision for the admission of women on special occasions.

"The opening of the Arbor Room does not in any way violate the original intention that the House should be primarily for the use of men of the University," the Warden said.

Hugh Niblock, artist extraordinaire, stops Valerie Greatrix, the new private secretary of E. A. Macdonald, from entering the Arbor Room. Entrance is prohibited to females until the official opening next week.

"Welcome Wanderers"

This week we are welcoming to the university the classes of 5T8, 5T9, and 6T0. They have come to a university comprised of federated colleges and faculties each of which retains to a remarkable degree its own identity and flavour.

We would urge the freshman not to become submerged in the life of his own particular school, but to bear in mind that they are members of a larger institution.

Although the structure of this university dictates that a student should be more aware of life within his own college, there do exist organizations, such as the Blue and White Society, and the VARSITY, in which he can get a broader perspective of life in the university as a whole.

It is well for the incoming student to remember that this finite world of books and lectures, is but the gateway to an infinite world. The world you carry with you will be formed as much in the Tuck Shop as in the lecture room.

Look well to, its formation and your years at the University of Toronto will be well spent.—C.B.

Illiteracy?

Every year about this time, someone makes the statement, (in print), that University students are "religious illiterates". This year it has been made by a recognized authority on University students, Dr. Sydney Smith. Rather than question an assumption so dignified by authority and repetition, we would ask: "Is this a bad thing?"

There are increasing numbers who, terrified by the times, advocate a regression to Faith. "There were no H-bombs in the middle ages", they seem to argue; "Let us return to them." In any time of crisis, superstition is the easy way out.

But in a university ideas are valued for validity, not comfort. Faith, accepting and defending the most fanciful hypotheses as indisputable facts, and defining itself as "independent of reason" is out of place. By glamorizing the wishes and dreams of men as the unchangeable Word of God, religion produces, not intellectual humility, but the worst kind of intellectual conceit. It is not an admission of ignorance, but a pretense to knowledge no man has.

We would agree with the religionist that human intelligence is a weak implement. We would not agree that human unreason, deified as Revelation, is better.

What Price Democracy?

Simcoe Hall has seen fit to reject the request of last year's Students' Administrative Council by refusing to authorize a $1.00 increase in the annual student government fees. This increase would raise the SAC fees from $5.00 to $6.00.

Over the past few years steadily rising prices and declining enrollment have combined to drastically reduce the buying power of the SAC's budget. As a result, many important activities of the SAC, including the VARSITY, will have to be curtailed.

Obviously the SAC's annual levy is providing less and less in terms of real money, each year to fulfill the responsibilities of Student Government. Therefore the SAC, the official representative of the students of this campus, decided that more money would have to be raised to continue its activities. However Simcoe Hall evidently felt that the tight financial position of most students did not make a fee raise possible.

We agree that most students are short of money—a condition to which the increases in tuition fees imposed by Simcoe Hall has greatly contributed. Nevertheless we feel that students will miss the right to adequately govern their own affairs more than they would miss one dollar.—R.B.

More Courage, Mr. President

Yesterday afternoon there gathered in solemn session the heads of the colleges and faculties of the University, the majority of the freshman class, and students from other years. They had come to Convocation Hall to hear the opening address from the president of this University.

While we must express our gratitude to the president for his words of welcome to the freshmen, and of encouragement to the remaining members of the university community, we cannot help but feel disappointed.

The president's remarks were timely and gave evidence of the great store of knowledge and wisdom to which he has attained. However, we feel that the position he holds justifies us in expecting more from him than a repetition of the platitudes of yesterday and a dissertation on morals.

It is to the president that we look for leadership, from him we expect to hear the words which will keynote our university experience. It is regrettable that at so crucial a time in their academic careers the freshmen should have heard from him none of the force and imagination of which we believe him capable.

We trust that the president will not be chagrined at our expression of disappointment but rather gratified that we expect so highly of him.

This hour is lost and the president's temporary lapse into his own slough of sweetness and light may be offset in some finer hour.

Our Readers Write:

The Editor,
The Varsity,

For many years now I have followed the editorial gyrations of numerous Varsity editors and to tell you the truth I'm getting

"Non Illigitimos Carborundum"

damn sick of the whole business.

Here is a suggestion which I wish to make. Please don't have any editorials about nothing. Just lots of good letters from guys like me which knows quite a bit about life . . . real life I mean . . . and important stuff like that.

If you do like what I have suggested everything will be O.K. and we will get along good together. Otherwise you know what will happen.

Yours sincerely,
Chuck Williams, O.C.E.

Contributions

The Varsity will be pleased to print contributions to this column from its readers. The letters should not be overly long and on a subject of general interest.

Prospective contributors should manage to have their deathless prose typed, either at home or on one of the machines available in the Varsity office.

Those who wish to submit letters should present them with their ATL cards to one of the Varsity staffers, in the office in the SAC building.

Statement of Policy

This is a statement of the general policies which will guide the activities of the Varsity this year. Embodied in this statement is our concept of the role of a university paper.

In the constitution of our own Students' Administrative Council, the broad general framework within which any editorial policy formulated for the VARSITY must operate is clearly and succinctly set down.

Briefly it states that:—

"The editor and his staff should remember that as students of this University they owe loyalty to its traditions, reputation and future development, and that their policy should evidence a desire to stimulate such loyalty.

"The VARSITY should realize that it has a different outlook and a different field in which to operate and that it must formulate its policy to suit its own unique circumstances."

As an undergraduate newspaper run by and for the student body, the VARSITY enjoys certain unique privileges. It enjoys these privileges only insofar as it squarely shoulders the responsibilities which they entail. The editorial policy for any University paper must be predicated upon the recognition of its unique role.

A University newspaper is privileged in that it is free from all external pressure. It is privileged in that it provides a forum for considered student opinion. It is uniquely privileged in that it reflects the recurring vitality and freshness of thought and approach characteristic of a healthy University life.

But the responsibilities devolving upon those who would accept these privileges are equally unique.

We are concerned that the news be handled in a sober, responsible, objective manner and that the paper in its very attitude as well as its finished product, should foster creative expression within the University. A responsibility to encourage all the activities on the campus to achieve a standard of maturity and excellence expressive of the highest capacity of the undergraduate is crucial to any concept of a University paper.

But the final and most fundamental responsibility of any campus newspaper is to maintain and defend that atmosphere of judicious tolerance and academic freedom necessary to the vigorous mind, without which no university as a seat of genuine thought and learning can long exist.

None of this should be construed as an attempt to confine the VARSITY to mere "intellectual" or "highbrow" activity. That a campus newspaper should be serious in its intent we believe. But we also believe that it must be crisp, bright and spirited or lose its readers' enthusiasm.

While we are acutely aware of the vast gulf between design and execution, we believe that if these principles are just, that if these policies are initiated in a confident and vigorous manner and if the mode of thought we represent is brought to its practical fruition in a mature, responsible fashion then this University will have a dynamic, forceful, and superior newspaper.

Varsity Deadlines

THE VARSITY will be published on Friday of this week, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday of next week. After that, there will be daily publication.

DUE TO A CHANGE IN PRINTERS, THE VARSITY'S deadlines this year are earlier and stricter. All campus organizations are requested to note that items for publication in the 'Today' and 'Coming-Up' columns of THE VARSITY must be in by 3:30 p.m. of the day preceding publication.

Soph's Eye View

Cartoon by PETER GRANT

art, music and drama

HH Exhibit

The Hart House gallery displays until Oct. 4th the paintings of R. York Wilson. Wilson has spent much of his productive career away from Canada. Perhaps he finds it easier to find inspiration in surroundings different in colour and atmosphere from the big buildings and barren spaces of his own country. Apparently his latest ventures have been to Morocco and Mexico whose somewhat similar sights and colours seem to be reflected in the present show.

Mexico, a place of much open-air activity and an almost festering culture has attracted and produced many fine artists. There is, I think, a marked difference between R.Y.W. and most of the painters who have been excited by Mexico. Mexico's famous "Mural Painters" especially—Rivera, Siquieros and the late Orozco. As painters of murals they are not oblivious to formal problems, but they are much more intensely interested in the people. Although almost overcome by their social consciousness they feel for and with the people in their paintings.

R. Y. Wilson, on the other hand, seems completely objective in his dealings with the colourful Mexicans, as with everything. They supply him with the colours and forms which he then organizes purely for the sake of the painting. The result is usually satisfying especially as a composition.

R. York Wilson is a highly conscious craftsman. His high consciousness of problems of composition seems to have given him to a chiefly abstract approach to the business of making a painting. There are abstract elements in the work of most great painters, inasmuch as they consciously organized the visual material they worked with in terms of triangles and planes and geometric solids, in the interests of more effective composition in a bold and often manifest manner. He integrates and relates his forms mostly by the use of lines of various sorts. Most of them are suggested by aspects of the object itself and merely emphasized but often they come only from the wisdom of the artist and serve no apparent purpose other than to break up an area, and point the composition.

I don't think it would be too imaginative to relate some of this work with a relaxed form of early cubism, because of its shallow ground, and its shortened range of colour. The paintings on the north wall of the gallery may show something of what I mean. In the large market-place painting, Wilson cleverly orders a rather large space through the use of two symmetrically placed pillars and diagonal lines which converge in such a way as to balance the distracting lilies and bind together the whole composition. There is little interest in the marketeers as people.

I found most of the paintings in the gallery rather similar but pleasing in their calm order and satisfying colours.

Les Lawrence.

JIGGING GYPSY AT CREST

The choice of a play by a Canadian author for the opening production of the season at the Crest Theatre is certainly a bold and courageous stroke. The choice has none of the nervous but hopeful appeal to national sentiment which those who would force an apparently unwilling Canadian culture into existence have learned to expect in Canadian works. The play makes no attempt to be "distinctively Canadian" or to "portray the Canadian scene." There are no hardy pioneers felling the mighty maples in the backwoods or Upper Canada, no proud seigneurs or pious monks felling the wild natives of Lower Canada. Obviously as it does not deal with any of these approved Canadian themes "A Jig for the Gypsy" is not a great Canadian play about a great Canadian subject. It is rather quite a good play which happens to have been written by a Canadian.

As this Canadian also happens to be Mr. Robertson Davies it is moreover imaginative, humorous, sometimes brilliantly witty and occasionally seasoned with a mellow wisdom. It is a comedy of character, charming, gentle and subtle but also vigorous, earthy and sometimes satiric.

The scene of the play is Walesmore, specifically the garden of a Gypsy fortune teller, Bemoui Richards and her rascally poaching companion Jack the Skinner. The plot consists of a series of skirmishes between the local representatives of the Tories and the Liberals. This gives Mr.

Davies a chance to fill his play with several delightfully comic characters: a supercilious young High Church clergyman, an enormous top of a valet, an idealistic young liberal who quotes Ruskin, a fiery little Radical photographer who suffers from a martyr complex and a hymn-singing hell-fearing Methodist shop-keeper.

The Crest has given Mr. Davies' play a splendid production. The direction of Mr. Herbert Whitaker is sensitive and skillful, full of imaginative little touches such as the opening of the second act. With his taste for wit and fine performance is matched by the mellow ruminating one of Mr. Max Helpmann as Richard Roberts. This too is a simple performance but full of dignity, charm and rich wisdom. Mr. Helpmann seems to embody the spirit of Mr. Davies.

As Bronwen, his daughter, Miss Norma Renault, gave a satisfactory impression of a prim, lady-like young woman, but in her later scenes she failed to suggest the "aristocrat of soul" which Mr. Davies apparently intended her to have. Mr. George McCowan as her would-be-lover, Edward Vaughan, gave a somewhat stereotyped performance and although it is an interesting character, he remains a pasteboard sort of figure.

Mr. Eric House gave two brilliant performances as Pugh and the Photographer and Conjuror Jones. This last is a cleverly fantastic performance in the peculiarly ending to the play which is somehow oddly incompatible with the rest of the play, being a sort of bastard phantasy. Nevertheless, his portrayal of the photographer was the better performance and showed his usual neat precision and dexterity of detail. Mr. House is rapidly becoming a minor Alec Guinness, with a growing gallery of eccentric characters to his credit. Mr. Neil Vipond contributed the most sharply satiric portrait as the precise and inquisitive cleric while Mr. David Gardner was a superbly pompous ass as "the Buchstard Earl, Jesse Fewtrell". This is quite the best thing this playgoer has seen Mr. Gardner do and the elephantine elegance of this fatuous flunkey dominated one of the funniest scenes in the play. Mr. Norman Ettlinger as Davy John the Evangelical Tory, was also commendable, although his portrait of the liberal candidate Sir John Jehson was more comical. Mr. Bruce Swerdfager was a suitable forbidding rogue and managed to enliven his short appearances with an aura of petty evil. Mr. Donald Davis gave a good performance as Jack the Skinner although his lack of control of movement prevented him from endowing his portrayal with the necessary agility. Nevertheless his performance was a nicely developed study of a character very different from those which he usually attempts.

The setting designed by John Wilson conveyed the feeling and mood of the play very nicely. All in all the Crest has got its second season off to an excellent start and Mr. Davies has shown us that Canadian authors are not incapable of writing good and provocative plays which are equally as good as many of the contemporary works produced in London and New York.

delicate satire and his feeling for light fantasy he is admirably suited to direct Mr. Davies' richly comic creation.

In Miss Barbara Chilcott he has a superb Benoui. She has a provocative, slightly sullen earthiness, and a quiet simple dignity which allow her to dominate the entire play without any meretricious or superfluous theatrical tricks. There is nothing forced about her passion and her wisdom is that of experience and simplicity. Her

"FOO" FARES FAIRLIE IN PERU

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

Did you ever start for Peru on the S.S. Cayuga? This is the way Fraser "Foo" Fairlie (Trin. 5T3) and Owen Jones (UC 5T2) began their twelve thousand mile jaunt to South America, to make a colour film named "The Golden Empire of Peru", which is being presented tonight at Hart House.

They travelled by boat, motorbike and airplane to Cali in Southern Colombia, where the donkey-trail known as the Pan-American highway begins. If you are going to drive from Texas to Chili, don't, advised Fairlie. From here they went by rail-cars, antique buses and auto-carrils (an old bus on railway tracks, which travels ninety miles an hour) to Quito, Ecuador, the second highest capital in the world, sixteen miles below the Equator. "It is a modern city in the middle of nowhere," said Fairlie, "with four seasons a day."

They travelled by boat, motorbike and airplane to Cali in Southern Colombia, where the donkey-trail known as the Pan-American highway begins. If you are going to drive from Texas to Chili, don't, advised Fairlie. From here they went by rail-cars, antique buses and auto-carrils (an old bus on railway tracks, which travels ninety miles an hour) to Quito, Ecuador, the second highest capital in the world, sixteen miles below the Equator. "It is a modern city in the middle of nowhere" said Fairlie, "with four seasons a day".

After five days there they took a two-day rail trip to the coast, during which they dropped 9,000 feet in 90 minutes. From Guayaquil to the southern border, where a 1,500 mile desert begins.

After so many exotic methods of transportation, Fairlie and Jones finally walked into Peru across an ancient unused bridge, painted the Peruvian colours, red and white on one side and Ecuador's colours of red, blue and gold on the other (Sounds as if the Queen's engineers had been there).

Peru is a police state, swarming with armed troops, said Fairlie, who had 16 police checks, nine in the first two days. "Each officer wrote out our full passport in longhand. They never heard of carbon paper," he said.

They arrived in Lima on a national holiday in time to see the whole army parading by.

They obtained a pass to take pictures anywhere, so parked across from the President and shot mules and mountain troops and Sherman tanks.

From Lima they flew to Cuzco, the oldest city in the Americas, deep in the heart of Inca land. Here the victorious Spaniards built Moorish villas on top of the fantastic stonework of Peru. But the Incas had their revenge. Every ten or twelve years there is a violent earthquake, and all the Spanish buildings collapse, leaving the ancient work of the Incas untouched, said Fairlie.

At the north headwaters of the Amazon in the gorge of the Urubamba, they came to "The Lost City of the Incas"—Machupicchu. Although the Spaniards never found it, said Fairlie in 1911 a Yale professor named Hiram Bingham rediscovered it, overgrown with jungle. Some historians believe that the Inca hid the Sacred Virgins of the Sun from the Spaniards here, and that perhaps explains why eight-tenths of the bodies discovered are those of women.

The Peruvian Indians (there are no pure Incas left) are all devout Catholics, said Fairlie, but every summer equinox they celebrate by holding Inca ceremonies. These are not as religious as they were, said Fairlie. (Shades of Yma Sumas). Fairlie and Jones found the natives very superstitious, and had to use a miniature camera to take close-up pictures, because the Indians felt their soul be stolen if their picture was taken.

Fraser and Jones have been associated for eighteen years, from the days when they produced plays in the attic to the foundation of Cavalcade Films, a professional enterprise which has made four films. In 1945-46 they performed as amateur magicians to sick children (who couldn't get away) and at the university they started an amateur society named Monarch productions, which is still working on a full-length medieval drama at Casa Loma. (this should equal the Knights of the Round Table).

After two films in England and one in Europe they decided to visit Peru because it includes every geographic feature and every season of the year within its borders.

As to the future? Who knows?

Heading northward from Lima, Peru are Fraser Fairlie (left) and Owen Jones. After a 2,000 mile trek along the West Coast of South America, they will present the World Premiere of their new Travelogue "Golden Empire of Peru" tonight in Hart House Theatre.

BLUES DEBUT ON SATURDAY

Speaking OF SPORT

by JOHN WILSON

Once again the University has opened its mammoth doors in another effort to keep our agile little minds busy over a deluge of textbooks. But that is without reckoning with the only other important activity on the campus, football.

For the benefit of the Frosh who don't already know, Intercollegiate football is usually the most colorful part of the University athletic year. But this year the gridiron scene promises to be at least twice as interesting as in the past.

The number of new features, both major and minor, is many, but Western's well-known coach, John P. Metras, has come up with a clever attack designed to throw fear into the hearts of the other Colleges. We said the league would be twice as interesting only because the new Western attack calls for two quarterbacks, and is to be known as the "Diamond T". There'll be more to say about this after the Mustangs tangle with Sarnia on Saturday.

Along with Western's venture is the possibility of a "College Bowl". The Eastern champion may proceed west for a post-season tussle with the University of British Columbia. This event would probably be played in Vancouver's brand new Empire Stadium.

More changes give Varsity Stadium the new look with steel goal-posts. Padded with a new nylon material, and set in concrete, the uprights are sturdier than ever, and the University has gone to great expense to provide them.

The outlook will always be brilliant for the Blues as far as we are concerned, but Queen's appears to have come up with a better than usual squad. McGill edged U.B.C. 8-5 last week, but we can reserve judgment there until after Friday's game with McMaster in Hamilton. Western's new backfield promises something from London.

The Blues have been hard at it for the past week in preparation for Saturday's opener against Balmy Beach. Coach Masterson put the boys through an especially rugged session last night, but was well-pleased with the result.

Varsity's hopes will ride a great deal with their pass attack which is very promising. A surer pass defence will help to balance anything the opposition can throw in our direction, including the "Diamond T".

With all that and more to come, it has to be a good year. We firmly believe the Yates Cup will come home this time, but then we always do. Let's begin with Balmy Beach on Saturday, and here's to a tremendous season for our Blues.

Varsity Offence Features Passing Blues To Meet Beaches Saturday

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity's football Blues appear to have finally lifted themselves from their longstanding rut of a ground game with the acquisition of two fine passing quarterbacks and several good receivers for their throwing. Masterson's Blues will work under the direction of Bill Stevenson or Harry Wilson, two rookies in Senior ball who excelled with John McManus' Intermediates last season.

The stroke of bad luck which deprived Varsity of the quarterbacking of Ed Skrzypek for this year may yet produce some good results if Wilson and Stevenson can improve quickly enough. Ed, a smooth and deceptive ball-handler, led the Blues to within one minute of the Yates Cup last season but was greatly handicapped all along by the weakness of his passing, whereas Stevenson and Wilson are both proven passers and remain to be tried only in their ability to run a varied offence. In last week's inter-squad match both seemed overly dependent on their throwing and didn't use their running game to fullest advantage.

Bob Masterson has no real problems with his backfield staff, the only difficulty being which of many fine men to keep. In last week's game there were good runs by rookies and old hands alike, but the big show of the game came from Steve Oneschuk who, if he can keep free of injury this year, will be one of the main men in the backfield. New to the Blues is Dave Cresswell who played high school ball with Etobicoke and who, before he was injured in the inter-squad game, ran well and earned a chance with the team.

Converted from swimming and basketball this season, George Stulac, one of Varsity's top athletes through the past three years, has put his deft hands at the service of Masterson's men. Going at end with the Blues, George teams with Fred Smale at the other end position to give the Varsity passers the receiving to make their throwing effective.

As for defensive ends, the recent loss of Ted Lansky because of a shoulder separation leaves only Don Smith and the possibility of switching fullback Bob Kimoff to the other side of the line.

The Blue line is an uncertain part of the team. Strength is there but injuries and the question of rookies coming through makes predictions impossible. The return of Ray Yakasovitch, who centred the Champion 1951 Blues, anchors the line nicely but injury to Norm Levine, a first-string tackle, leaves the front wall a good deal weaker.

Bob sends his Blues against their first real opposition of the season this Saturday at the Stadium when they take on the Balmy Beaches in a pre-season contest. The number of strong backfield aspirants has decided Bob to use 40 men in this game so as to give all a chance before the final cut is made. Varsity supporters will have their only chance to see their team play at home before the season opens on October 9, as the next game is a week Saturday in Sarnia against the Imperials.

Steve Oneschuk

Steve Oneschuk, the footballer shown above, has been a standout with the Varsity Blues through the past three seasons. Injuries have hampered Steve in every season but still he has managed to be one of the top players in Intercollegiate ball notwithstanding all his hard luck.

Knock Of Opportunity

We are making our annual announcement about openings in the sports department reporting staff. The sports staff, definitely the class of any Varsity, past or present, allows for the entry each year of several carefully selected young men of the highest intelligence and sporting abilities to work in the great task of reporting on the athletic glories of the Blue and White sportsmen. This year our staff has been depleted somewhat so that there are more openings than usual in men's and women's departments.

For interested parties there will be a short convocation at one this day, Thursday, Sept. 23, 1954. Please be there punctually.

Ryerson's In The League Rams Face Hard Season

Rejoicing is the rage at old Ryerson Tech these days what with their claimed acceptance into the Southwestern Conference of the Intercollegiate Athletic League for this season. While the Varsity has been unable to obtain any clear verification of the Ryerson claim the boys from the Technological Institute have gone the route in joyous thanksgiving for this good luck.

graphs, quotes and opinions from all the leading school figures. Ted Toogood, Director of Athletics at Ryerson, is quoted by a Ryersonian staffer as saying that "this will mean more fun for all the students." The acceptance is, according to the Ryersonian, to cover all phases of Athletic activity in Intercollegiate sports.

For the Ryersons this is the end of a three-year fight to win recognition as a power in the sporting world. Acceptance is taken as proof that Ryerson teams are at last recognized factors to be considered in the league.

In the immediate business of football, Toogood is quoted as saying that "the football league is the toughest ever." With this the Varsity can agree. Having seen the Intermediate Blues in action and also those people who may be cut by the Big Blues, we can say definitely that Ryerson will have trouble with the Bab Blues.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Though the event may call for a brief quotation, this corner does not lend itself to poetry. So may we welcome back the old timers and bid "hello" to all newcomers and look forward to a most successful season in the women's sports ranks this year.

Actually, no season is a failure when there is an all-out drive in the interfaculty field. This has never really been a problem to the campus queens because interfaculty sports have always been well represented. But last year we fell down in the intercollegiate circuit—in fact we cut it down to two wins, in basketball and tennis. So let's add that we're looking forward to a little more success in the intercol meets.

One thing that keeps interfac sports on the go is a dashing upset. Last season we had two very startling upsets, with Meds winning basketball against three PHE squads and Vic battling to a win in the softball loop. Trinity won out in the archery while PHE led in swimming hockey and volleyball. U.C. produced the racquet stars on the campus in both badminton and tennis.

Fencing for women began—outside of the classroom, while golf suffered a bad setback. We hope there will be more out to the links this fall for the annual tourney, that's if they haven't given up the idea completely. Please don't!

This year, the Women's Athletic Association has issued a neat little bulletin outlining all the rules and regulations for required physical education plus a list of extra-mural activities and activity heads. This is the sort of publication we have waited a long time to see and we strongly recommend you pick one up as soon as possible.

The beginning of the year is the best time to decide what you want to do in college athletics. Not all of us can join an intercol squad but interfaculty sport is for the average enthusiast who likes to play for fun while boosting her college or faculty within the campus. Each college or faculty has an Athletic rep who is responsible for posting lists for teams. Right now lists should be going up for softball recruits and pretty soon archery and swimming lists will be tacked up.

The fall season sees action in all these plus interfaculty tennis and intercollegiate archery and swimming.

We gave you a brief rundown on the 53-54 season but don't use this as any indication for 54-55 success. Interfac wins often change. One thing we do know—54-55 will be a success—if you make it so.

Girlish Softball

The first week in October will find the Trinity Field once more the centre of activity for the female Joe DiMaggios and Ted Williams of Varsity. This year, under the expert guidance of Joy Taylor, PHE III, women's softball will resume its annual noon-hour schedule.

Lists are going up this week in all the colleges for all who are interested in playing ball this year and everyone is encouraged to sign in order that the teams will be able to start practising at the first of the week. Following the meeting of college representatives this Saturday, the schedule will be posted.

Vic, last year's champs, are once more the team to beat as all of last year's starry squad are back, all except Mary Crowther who graduated; however, the girls from PHE, St. Hilda's and Meds are not to be overlooked in this pennant race as there are a large number of freshies in these colleges who are baseball enthusiasts. So come on girls, let's get out and "play ball."

A new 1000-circulation college publication — The Gargoyle — hit the campus this week.

Planned on a 10-issues-a-year scheme, the paper is the official voice of students in University College. The first edition appeared Monday.

Aubrey Golden, editor of the publication, said today that the object of the paper was to build a greater spirit among students at UC. He said that the paper, which is planned to appear fortnightly, was being financed by the Literary Association of UC and the Women's Undergraduate Association of the college. Additional revenue, he said, came from sale of advertising.

The editorial stated that all opinions published in the paper represented the opinion of the UC Literary Association and the WUA. A second stipulation of its editorial policy was that it would not be a "yes man" for anyone.

Appearance of The Gargoyle this year brings to three, the number of publications being printed on the campus.

Also being published is The Varsity — the daily newspaper covering all news within the university — and Toike Olke, covering events in the Engineering school.

In addition, a periodic mimeographed publication is put out by one or two of the arts colleges.

Medical Examination

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, WA. 3-9644; for Women, WA. 3-2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

ENGINEERS WREAK HAVOC

Skulemen Loot Victoria . . .

Carrying stolen chairs and a large coatstand, marauding engineers parade down the steps of Victoria College with "trophies" of their pillage. This student pranksterism followed the freshman orientation, run by the Engineering Society. The loot was "borrowed" from Trinity, University College and Victoria and was taken down to the Engineering Building.

Injure U.C.'s Registrar In Wild Frosh Rampage

A mob of 600 Engineering students charged through the corridors of University College here yesterday, tore notices and bulletins off the walls, knocked over furniture in the college's main rotunda, and injured a professor who tried to stop them.

The condition of the professor W. J. McAndrew, the Registrar of University College — was reported last night to be "not serious".

One stitch was required to mend a gash sustained on the right side of Mr. McAndrew's head.

The mob entered from two side entrances on the south side of the college-building and raced to the main-entrance rotunda.

They were met by Prof. McAndrew who had apparently been attracted by the commotion.

Mel Canton, fourth-year Pharmacy student, reported that when Prof. McAndrew attempted to halt the progress of the march, the front ranks of the 600 freshmen seemed to be friendly but in a moment or two, one or two of them became "surly."

Canton said that someone in a front rank of the mob was holding a chair in front of him while speaking with the Registrar.

Harry Watson, IV Trinity, said that he noticed two students trying to dash past the professor. "The next thing I saw," he said, "was Mr. McAndrew covered in blood."

Watson said that he had been watching the progress of the march from a balcony overlooking the U.C. rotunda.

The Managing Editor of the Varsity, Bob Brown, said that he saw Professor McAndrew directly following the incident. "His face was covered with blood and so was his coat and right hand. There seemed to be two streaks of blood on the right side of his head," Brown reported.

Two people assisted the Registrar into his office and he emerged a few moments later, Brown said, and was driven off in a car.

According to Barry Watson, the engineers were attempting to shift a large pile of furniture which they had loaded onto a small cart equipped with casters.

It was then, Watson said, that Prof. McAndrew arrived and was almost successful in persuading them to turn back.

Asked by Varsity Managing Editor Brown about the identity of those in the mob, Watson reported that some of them were wearing the typical peaked and striped locomotive engineers' caps of Engineering freshmen and that some were yelling the School of Practical Science call "Toike Oike".

Mel Canton said that some of the mobsters were chanting the Engineering song during the fracas.

Annette Salem, IV U.C., who was at a ticket-selling desk in the college rotunda when the mob came through "in droves . . .

Increase In Enrolment Probable According To Latest Figures

Registration at the University is expected to equal — or almost equal — the 10,800-odd enrolled last year.

This was the indication today from the Registrar's office at Simcoe Hall as hundreds of students in the university's 30-some faculties and schools swung into their third day of social-fun, lectures and study.

Registrar J. C. Evans said it would be impossible to give any conclusive picture on this year's probable enrolment figure but he said it would likely equal last year's.

"We were expecting that the enrolment would be down some two or three hundred this year," he said, "but an increase in the number of applications leaves us with some doubt."

An official in the Registrar's office said that no definite word on enrolment could be expected within two weeks.

"However," the official stated, "speaking personally — and I deal exclusively with applications — I can say that there are considerably more this year."

It was made clear that an increase in applications did not necessarily presuppose a parallel jump in registration.

Some 1,400 was given as the number of teachers on the University staff.

Last year, fewer than half of the students enrolled were registered in the four arts colleges, or in the teachers' courses or as occasional students. The figure was given in the faculties with a total 1,147 students enrolled. Nearly 700 students took the teachers' courses or were enrolled in occasional student work while almost 1,000 were enrolled at Victoria College. St. Michael's College claimed a total registration of 524 students last year and Trinity, 430.

Other big faculties on the campus last year — and the same relative conditions are expected when this year's figures are released — were: Engineering, 1,641 students, Medicine 1,271, and the Department of Graduate Studies, some 1,200.

President Smith's Statement

On Wednesday afternoon I spoke to the student body on manners and morals and I endeavoured to offer counsel and advice that was a keynote for them in their university work. It is deeply regretted that the high ideals that I attempted to put before the students have failed in the unhappy incident of Thursday afternoon, to find a response on the part of some of the students.

With all the force that I could command, I stated that seldom is positive law invoked at the University of Toronto. The University has looked successfully to its students to exercise self-discipline.

The raid on University College and the consequent injury of a member of the staff warrants the invoking of positive law and disciplinary action.

This incident will be investigated and steps will be taken to ascertain the guilty parties to the end that this type of vandalism, which has as its source bad manners, will be exterminated forthwith.

Needing A Room? The Housing Boom Still Goes Strong

"The Housing Service is running full blast, and out of an estimated 2,800 room listings there is something to satisfy most applicants," Miss E. Bernstein, Housing Director, said today. The Housing Service, a Students' Administrative Council organization, is run for the benefit of both staff and students of the University.

Of the 2,800 listings, 2,200 are for rooms and many of these are still available. Anyone desiring this type of accommodation can consult the listings in the Hart House Reading Room.

People wanting rooms only are quite certain of finding something suitable, Miss Bernstein said. Unfortunately the apartment situation is not as good, she added. Approximately 450 apartments were listed but there are still many students unable to find one that will suit their needs or pocketbooks.

The 150 listings that remain are for room and board in exchange for services such as baby-sitting. Miss Bernstein pointed out that many of these are still available as there seems to be many more men than women desirous of these positions, while most householders seem to believe that women make the best baby-sitters.

The S.A.C. housing service has been open for listings since the first of August. On September 17 these lists were put in the Hart House Reading Room where they are still available to anyone seeking accommodation.

Students Swear Loyalty Oath

Male freshmen and sophomores at the University of California must take a loyalty oath, which will allow them to enroll in the Reserve Officers' Training Course. This course is a requisite of the University curriculum.

The new ruling is a result of a rider on a defense bill passed by Congress, said Acting Chancellor Alva R. Davis, recently.

Previously all juniors and seniors who agreed to take four full years of ROTC training toward a commission on graduation have taken the oath, Davis said, but this is the first time it has been extended to first and second year students. The same ruling is in effect at nearly all land-grant colleges in the United States, since all require male students to enter the ROTC for at least two years.

The oath is the same as that taken by Army officers, declaring that they are not members of subversive organizations.

Ralph Ornelas, second year student, refused to sign the oath when it was put before him in registration. He was warned that failure to do so means that he cannot enroll in ROTC, and thus faces the possibility of dismissal from the University.

. And Move Car

Mob of freshman engineers block the east door of Hart House with an English make car. They engineered the car into position with elbow grease and shouts of "Lady Godiva rides again" and then left it for others to engineer out again.

Lady Godiva Rides Again

True to the commands of our lovely, but indomitable boss, we sallied forth nobly to Find The Facts about LGMB (pronounced lgmb), which, translated loosely, means the Lady Godiva Memorial Band. Having lurked suspiciously about the Engineering Building for a short time, we hailed a red-headed chap leaning out of the offices of the Engineering Society. This fellow, we later learned was Yodar Klitch, an executive member.

Supported by three of his henchmen, Yodar met us outside later and gave us the Real Story.

The LGMB is made up solely of Conservatory students, who perform to show their sympathies with the School of Science (rah! rah!). They are divided into three groups: Is Heros, first, second and third class. These gentlemen perform at all engineering functions, such as the one last Thursday, where they played quietly to accompany the freshmen vandals in UC.

Mr. Klitch continued his statement: "The bass drummer is the only Is Hero, first class, and, because of his position, is required to wear shoes. As for uniforms, we have recently purchased six top hats, five bowlers, and four smocks, without arms. They also wear red badges with black writing on them. That is all we are allowed to say." And he left.

Our hard-boiled reporter instinct coming to the fore, we immediately became suspicious. First, because Mr. Klitch had no accent, and second, because two of his henchmen were without engineering jacks.

So we cleverly checked up, but could find no evidence but that we have presented to you, gentle reader.

and just kept coming" said that the first she knew of Prof. McAndrew's injury was a girl's scream which attracted her attention.

"I looked up," Miss Salem said "and saw Prof. McAndrew walk by with a gash on the side of his head and blood on his hand."

Miss Salem reported that the incident was preceded by a "pile-up" of engineers in the rotunda.

They bulged past her table, knocked it over and sent a large quantity of money in bills and silver spilling to the floor.

"A few of them stopped after this, however," Miss Salem said, "and picked up the money and gave it back to me."

The demonstration began as a normal freshman tour of the University sponsored by the Engineering Society.

The students lined up in front of the Engineering building in "orderly fashion" at about 2 p.m., yesterday.

They marched, an estimated 625-strong to Hart House where they were greeted by Warden Joseph McCulley and addressed briefly.

Outside Hart House after a tour of the building, witnesses said that one or two ring-leaders worked the 600 freshmen into a fever pitch with cries like, "Let's go and tear down U.C. and build an out-house with its bricks".

Other inflammatory remarks, witnesses said, worked the freshmen into "exuberant activity." "They seemed to line up in one accord," one witness said "and rushed over to University College".

Besides injuring Professor McAndrew, the mob, among other things: 1. it ripped 2 large bulletin boards off a west wing wall; 2. damaged a drinking fountain causing temporary ed off with a large red curtain outside West Hall; and 4. took flooding of a hallway; 3. marched away a 20-foot aluminium ladder.

From University College the mob moved over to Trinity where freshmen were molested and their halo's taken and freshmen of the college were sometimes obliged to give up their ties.

A similar march of destruction ensued at Victoria College where the Engineers paraded through upstairs and downstairs corridors, picking up pieces of furniture on the way.

Marching south toward the main University campus, they held up traffic for at least ten minutes.

Then splitting into smaller groups, some headed for Simcoe Hall, others for Hart House, while others were discouraged when they attempted a demonstration in the medical building.

At Simcoe Hall, two cars were moved in front and behind a sight-seeing bus blocking it for 10 minutes until four constables of the Toronto University Police ordered them shifted back again.

Another group of the engineers picked up a small English car parked on a laneway south of Hoskin Ave., and carried it into the main entrance of Hart House.

A soccer game, in progress on the main campus was held up when the engineers stole the balls as they bulldozed their way across.

Bishop Nygren Will Address First Of Hart House Series

The Rt. Rev. Anders Nygren, Bishop of Lund, Sweden will preach at the opening University Church Service in the Great Hall of Hart House this Sunday, at 11 a.m. It will be the first of a series of five addresses given in Hart House this year.

"The idea of reviving church services was impaired by the fact that University Christian mission will be preached on this campus in November", said Rev. John Rowe, Chaplain of Hart House.

"The series of five services to be given in the Great Hall of Hart House during this session by religious leaders from five different denominations warrants the interest and the support of the whole University", said Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University.

He felt that students will be afforded a rare opportunity to learn more about the Judeo-Christian roots of our civilization and to appreciate better the ideals and values shared by these leaders — "ideals and values necessary for the good life in a good society."

"I feel that we need badly in this University a focal point for spiritual growth, instruction and discussion", said Rev. Rowe, and added "the University Church Services are designed to stimulate interest in the spiritual heritage of Western civilization."

Bishop Nygren, who came to this continent to attend the second assembly of the World Council of Churches, delivered a series of five lectures in Knox College.

Is This Skule Spirit?

It is almost impossible to find words to express the feeling of revulsion caused by yesterday's demonstration on the part of members of the freshmen class of S.P.S. The wanton destruction, the disregard for other's rights, the callous indifference they exhibited all earn for them the noble name of boors.

Anyone witnessing this carnage is tempted to question the right of these people to association and identity with an adult community.

It will cause great pain to those members of the school who wish to maintain a position of respect in the university to be associated, even remotely with these "boors" who have spread the contagion of their ignorance throughout the campus.

If by any weight of words these people can be reached will they reflect that they stand condemned, not by words of ours, nor by the censure of classmates and officials, but condemned by their own reversion to animality.

We ask where the organizers of this "Freshmen Tour" were during this blitz of destruction? What will the officials of the Engineering Society say for our edification? Gentlemen, we await your reply.

One More Black Eye

During recent months the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a unanimous decision which was acclaimed by people of the free world as a blow for freedom and equality. In their statement the judges condemned the principle of equal but separate educational systems for Negroes and whites.

It was maintained that the very separation was in itself an inequality and a violation of the rights of the citizens of the United States of America.

At the time the judges felt that it would be wiser to leave the details of the implementation of their decision for a later discussion. It appears now that certain schools, in the southern states particularly, are using that technicality as a loophole to escape their moral obligation.

We read in the DAILY REVEILLE student publication of the Louisiana State University, that six negroes have been refused admission because "the University is under no order from a federal court requiring it to admit negro students to the undergraduate department."

While this position may be legally justified we feel that much could be done to enhance the United States' weakened prestige, if the spirit of the Supreme Court decision were effected with magnanimity and grace.

Wanted: An Open Door.

At the recent conference of the International Union of Students, Canada was represented by a six-man team of observers. This team was "empowered to investigate . . . the possibility of a qualified relationship with I.U.S."

Through the eight years since the inception of I.U.S. in Prague in 1946, Canada has never been a member, while continuing to send observers. In this manner we have protected ourselves from misrepresentation. As long as Canada is represented by Canadians there is no danger of others speaking for her.

It is apparent that there has been a change in the attitude of I.U.S. However, this change has been so recent and of so short a duration that it is impossible at the present time to make it a basis for positive action.

If, in the future, continuing evidence is given that this change is a lasting one, then it may be possible for the National Federation of Canadian University Students, to affiliate itself in some "qualified relationship" with the I.U.S.

That this door should remain open is imperative. It may be our only loophole in the "Iron Curtain".

OUR READERS WRITE:

Hart House Chaplain Is Distressed

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Sir:

I am disturbed by the article entitled "Illiteracy" which appears on the editorial page of the VARSITY of 23 September 1954. The remarks of President Smith on the religious illiteracy of many of the students of this University are amply confirmed by the opinions expressed in the article in question.

It is plain that your editorial writer does not understand the true meaning of "faith" as used by any mature Christian thinker. In the first place, a mature faith is never motivated by fear but rather by love. In the second place, faith is never, as you seem to describe it, created by a desire for comfort.

The life of Christian faith has never been a comfortable one. Thirdly, it should be pointed out that faith is never a thing set apart from reason. Not only is anti-intellectualism never the mark of the mature Christian, but also the full use of reason is commanded by the revelation of God. A mature Christian faith always seeks for understanding.

It is distressing to note that your writer has no notion of the place which revelation occupies in the Judeo-Christian tradition. The writers of the Bible never believed that they were elevating "human unreason" to the level of deity. They did, however, believe that God had spoken to men and this they wished to communicate. This did not lead to intellectual pride and conceit. All great Christian teachers and prophets have been marked by their humility, protesting their ignorance and inadequacy when confronted by their love of God.

I feel that the purpose of this section of your editorial was to duge in inflammatory remarks at the expense of the President of this University. However, in no way did you encourage the members of this academic community to seek to understand, to test, to accept or to reject the traditional spiritual attitudes of our culture. You did not even encourage any mature investigation of religion of any kind.

For all its superstition, it was the glory of the Middle Ages that it did not run away from the eternal issues which confront man in every generation. It faced squarely, as well as it was able, the issues which determine the ultimate destiny of every man. I cannot find any spirit of such genuine inquiry in your editorial. Let all religious notions, Christian and otherwise, be discussed in the University, and let there be an end to the too-easy dismissal of the religious traditions of our society.

Yours sincerely
John Rowe
Chaplain to Hart House

Editor's Explanation

We request the indulgence of the readers of the Varsity as we experiment with various lay-outs and style combinations. It is our aim to produce a paper in which the style will be interesting and yet serve our purpose.

We have moved the editorials into the inside of the paper in order to produce a centre spread which will be a contribution to the paper as a whole.

Other differences in type style or headlines is due either to the change in printing plant or to our attempts to settle on a headline schedule which will reflect accurately the character of the Varsity.

Unfortunately only one of the editorials written by the editor in yesterday's paper was signed. This was an oversight and was not done with any idea of concealing the writer of the other editorials.

Any suggestions which may be made in a constructive vein will be welcomed by the members of the staff.

New Residence Is Fine, But . . .

By BILL SMYTH

The grand, glorious new UC Residence has, of course, its merits, but it seems to us that it is but another example of this trend to regimented modernity that infests our civilization. It used to be that the visitor to a UC residence was filled with a spirit similar to that in the finest of bourbon.

This happy air of informality was delightful; a nude rushing from room to shower, a fight with dance wax and cigarette butts in the corridor, a carefree exhibition of modern poetry (slightly obscene, of course) on the bulletin board. It was even rumoured that if you went in late enough an all male (most of the time) Virginia Reel would be performed for your benefit.

But what has happened now?

The entrant is greeted, if he is at all by silent, unhappy forms flitting from the telephone to their rooms to study, no doubt. Female roommates, of all things, sink down the halls, apparently with the intention of catching some unwary with ill-considered words on his lips. The spacious halls and rooms keep the residents subdued; in the old residences the murky crannies gave some anonymity to the activities of the then-evil minds who fostered them.

The architecture, too, follows the pattern towards complete regimentation. What could be more modern, efficient and ghastly than a large, yellow, many-windowed building with a clock on top and right-angled corners? What red-blooded UC lad does not tremble at the sight of those long rows of windows, behind which are rooms, all clean, all the same?

The old houses on the other hand, had a romantic air about them; the dust on the windows, on the floor, on one's clothes gave one the feeling of living in a subterranean dungeon. All that was needed to complete the illusion was a horde of rats and a few bedbugs, but unfortunately all that could be found were some very small mice and an orange cat named Marcus Aurelius.

But the most austere facets of the new Residence have not yet had time to take their full toll on the students; that is, the rules and regulations and the wearing of gowns to meals. A long letter to those entering the residence forbids in no uncertain terms the use of women, alcohol, or dice, things dear to the heart of good UC types. The gowns have some merit, for hands trembling from the night before are prone to spill things. But there is a catch; as always: they must be paid for. And then again, when we made a sentimental pilgrimage back to the old haunts, and saw the plumbing, we began to wonder.

"What Seat Is This?"

U.C. Men's Residence stands resplendent in the sun, a refuge from professors, a marvel of engineering ingenuity, and an addition to the university's collection of antiques.

Mixed Movies

Can't think of any way to start off this review, aside from the usual platitudes evoked by a summer of film-going of mixed interest. Seems like all the films that were supposed to be terrific, judging from their advance notice, turned out to be very nearly clinkers, and all the dark horses turned a pleasant colour. For example, Doctor in the House, of which I expected very little, turned out to be a bright trifle in the manner of Tiffith Thunderbolt and Genevieve. Ealing Studios, heretofore the producers of highly literate black-and-white comedies like Kind Hearts and Coronets and The Lavender Hill Mob, seem to have developed a new, different, but equally pleasant style. A few of their most recent efforts have been power, and Schulberg has written in colour, and make full use of that studio's stable of younger stars, like Kenneth More, Kay Kendall, Dirk Bogarde, and John Gregson. In addition, their art direction is superb, and their photography equally so.

Doctor in the House, while not quite measuring up to the sly, comfortable humour of The Tiffith Thunderbolt, or the tongue-in-cheek sophistication of Genevieve, is still a pretty funny film. Maybe I was just infected by who know nothing of its plot, its ebullient student air. For those it concerns a group of four student doctors, whose often aimless wanderings through the curriculum of a British Medical school include an utterly mad post-soccer game clash with another medical school, (and the kidnapping of our fellows' mascot, an ape named Hubert), an embarrassing heavy date with a shatteringly beautiful Kay Kendall for the shyest of the students, and assorted mishaps of the student - nurse - crashes - through-skyline - of - ferocious - head-nurse variety.

A bird of quite a different feather is Marlon Brando's latest film, at the Imperial, On the Waterfront. Written by Budd Schulberg and directed by Elia Kazan, this is an expose of the conditions at present prevailing among the longshoremen's union locals in New York harbour. That is, it's an expose of a situation which has already been well exposed, yet unhappily still remains a sore. Nonetheless, it provides a dramatic situation of great a fine screenplay which appears to compromise little with the usual facts of screen life, even creates a steady, tortured lyricism out of the foulest ingredients. Brando plays an ex-prizefighter, now a stevedore taking his place daily in the "shape-up" and getting soft working sports because his brother is a pal of the union local boss. He himself offends does small jobs for the corrupt machine which grinds himself and his fellows. It is one of these jobs which leads to the death of a friend, pushed off a roof for squealing on the activities of the boss.

The plot from this point on is quite predictable, but in Kazan's, and Schulberg's telling, it gains a grim, almost eternal point. Brando's performance is couched in his now-famous slurred accents, but the character he plays, a simple, mistrustful, essentially honest guy caught in a world a little too bright for him, comes across with great intensity. Eva Marie Saint, well known on television, makes what is, I believe, her first film appearance, as a fine-drawn conventbred girl whose brother was the friend Brando lead to his death. Her quiet, strong performance is one of the essential factors in the strange, impressive effect this film creates. Whether On the Waterfront succeeds as social propaganda or not remains to be seen. Certainly it's a fine addition to the list of films Kazan has already contributed to the cinema's archives.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO CHORUS

"The University of Toronto chorus, and the University Orchestra, are once again looking out to a lively, entertaining and industrious year," said Michael Oliver, Chairman of the SAC Music committee. These organizations are both under the auspices of the Students' Administrative Council, and are directed respectively by Professor Richard Johnston and Professor Robert Rosevear, both of whom are members of the Faculty of Music.

The chorus and orchestra are open to any member of the University, and all applications for membership are welcome. To apply, call in person at the Students' Administrative Council Office in the Observatory building.

The first rehearsal is on Tuesday, October 5th, at 7:30 p.m.

INITIATIONS : Victoria : Trinity

If you see a harassed-looking angel trying to unfangle red and black ribbons from a 12" gold halo, or fleeing across Hoskin from a horde of engineers, it is not heaven come to the campus, merely a Trinity freshe being initiated. Regulation-size boards front and back proclaim her name, course and home—all in regulation-size letters—and bells on the ends of the 2' ribbons draw attention to the whole.

The freshe must wear this till Saturday, and on Monday as well, if a vigilant sophomore catches her with any fault in the outfit. (Having the halo bent or stolen by marauding engineers is no excuse. On Monday night at the gowning ceremony she will become a truly dignified member of Trinity. Dignified at any rate till the dubbing ceremony at the end of October, the counterpart of initiations in the other colleges.

Victoria College freshmen greet their sophomores today by bowing low and exclaiming "Hail O' illustrious sophomore." No need for dull shoes among the sophs, the freshmen will shine them gladly—with a toothbrush. Also they will supply matches for the sophs' cigs. — So it appeared yesterday.

At the Howdy Hop tonight, the yellow and red tie men (the lowly freshmen) will continue with their servile duties while attempting to dance and impress the fair sex. This may prove difficult on both counts.

Monday is "constructive initiation" day at Vic. The freshe will go to Caledon Hills Farm to paint and clean up. Afterwards: refreshments and a square dance.

Who's Initiating Whom?

"Your shoes are showing, girls" say freshman by their hats. The girls are perched on a fence engineers to Vic freshies, both easily distinguishable in front of Victoria College.

Student "bible"

WHERE TO FIND IT

By ADRIAN ADAMSON

The Student handbook, or as it is affectionately called, the "Student bible" is a small, light and cheap publication of the S.A.C. to which almost everybody at Varsity constitutionally objects with a clamour disproportionate to the size of that unhappy volume. The conscientious objectors usually cry with a loud voice (or some variation): "It costs too much". It costs in fact, the staggering sum of twenty-five cents. The loud-voiced ones could surely have picked without too much effort some more unfortunate aspect of the hand book. The book, for example, cannot spell worth a Grand Coulee. Skonovitch is consistently spelled Sunnovavitch; and even worse, when some unfortunate freshman tries to telephone the published phone number of the Engineering Society's representative to the Board of Stewards of Hart House, he will invariably end up speaking to the Dean of women of St. Hilda's College.

Besides the pitfalls that can be encountered by the unlucky and the unwary there are some outstanding features. There is attached to the back of the "bible" the largest and most detailed map extant of the Queen City, (alternatively "Hogtown"), which, we understand, has been compiled and patented by the Canadian Bank of Commerce. If someone is looking for downtown Yonge St. or Ashbridge's Bay and is unable to find his way there by looking for the dust-cloud or by using his nose respectively, he must lie himself to the Student "bible" for the route. The proud father of this fine attraction, the Bank of Commerce, informs us that an advanced course in Map Reading 4f is unnecessary for this purpose.

Another magnificent feature of this fine handbook is a handy explanation of the secret symbols of the University; VCU, SAC, NFUCS, SCM, TCLI, ISS, UTDC, FROS, UNTD, RUF, etc., etc. make the unfortunate freshman contemplate suicide or defection to McMaster. Miraculously, the student handbook clears all the mist of doubt away. The freshman is informed, for example, that TCAPLS stands indeed for the "Trinity College Anti-Physical Love Society". Good heavens; it renders comprehensible even The Varsity.

The last third of the handbook consists of a calendar of excitements, events, happenings, and movable feasts. In between the excitements, events, etc. there is a small minimum of space where the alert student may keep his diary, phone numbers and Anthropology notes.

Scattered throughout the "bible" there are concise, but adequate descriptive paragraphs and executive line-ups for every organized (or disorganized) society and club on the campus. These are of vital interest primarily to those whose names appear in print, but also of use as memory work for some obstreperous freshman who cannot see the truth that the Varsity Sophomore is the highest form of animal life. It also may be of some interest to the average third year student that SHARE does not stand for some profit-making organization called "share" but for "Student Help for..."

And last, but by no means least, of the qualities of this fair publication is an autographed pin-up photograph suitable for framing of one, Sidney Smith.

BLUES MATCHED WITH BEACHES

Speaking OF SPORT

By MOISHE REITER

For the casual observer of University athletics there is only one great interest. His attention is held by the bright, publicity-illuminated Intercollegiate competitions at the Senior level, dismissing lightly such lesser facets as the Intramural activities for the students. This, however, is like admiring the apple blossoms without seeing the sturdy tree branches that support them. At Varsity the big-time sports are the growth from, and are upheld by the great Intramural programme designed for student gain in recreation and training.

The Intramural arrangement provides for the participation of thousands of undergrads in all phases of University sports from Box Lacrosse to Harrier, running championship tournaments in each sport. Often athletes of Senior standing who, because of academic failure, lack of time or other reasons, are unable to play for the Intercollegiate teams, turn out in the Intramural leagues. Often, too, players have been drafted from the Intramural to play with the big Blue clubs. So high is the quality of play in the league that certain college teams have been known to defeat Intermediate teams from other Universities and even, occasionally, our own Varsity Seconds.

In past years there have been restrictions barring players with outside teams from playing in the Intramural leagues but this year the competitions are open to almost everyone at the University. This should produce better play than ever before and raise the level of the league even higher than it has been. Perhaps we will even see Interfaculty squads beating the Senior clubs?

Those Brittle Blues . . .

Injuries, the bane of Steve Oneschuk's first three years in Varsity ball, hit Steve again in practice this week, but he's still fit for play . . . Bob Masterson is still worried about his line. Injuries and inexperience in that section aren't making prospects any better for the Blues. The backfield is still in good shape but without a strong line they won't be able to run very well. Varsity supporters should be able to judge better after the Beach match this weekend.

With football the big show on the campus now it may be hard to think of other things but interested athletes should remember that many Varsity teams begin practising now. Varsity are defending champions in Track and Field, Soccer, Tennis and Harrier as well as several other championships in sports outside of the Fall season. The trick is to keep them at Varsity this year.

Synchronized Work Stressed In Women's New Swim Season

When the women's swimming begins on October the fourth, there will be a great advance made in synchronized work. The Toronto gals, who have usually fallen back in this event are now strongly considering joining the Amateur Synchronized Swimming Association of Canada.

The reason for this may be that the outlook for achievement in this field looks bright with freshies such as Barbara Heenan entering the ranks. Barbara has been active in synchronized work at the Granite Club, and will be an asset to the coming Toronto club.

Interfaculty swimming competition is being stressed more than ever. It is open for any girls on the campus who have had medicals. It covers all fields of swimming, right from speed, through to diving and synchronized.

The swim season is annually climaxed by both an interfaculty and intercol meet, both held in early November.

Practises begin October 4 and will continue every Monday, Wednesday and Thursday until the end of the intercol finals. Speed swimming starts at 5:30, diving at 6:30 and synchronized at 7:30. All practises are held at the UTS pool and the slate is open for all enthusiasts.

Swim squads will be coached again by Miss (Freddy) Baxter who has also done intercollegiate work on the Toronto team. Last year the Toronto gals fell to a very strong McGill outfit but the year previous, they walked away with top honours, particularly in the speed division.

Free Game Sat. Big Dance After

No, it's not a trick. The Varsity-Balmly Beach game at the Stadium on Saturday, September twenty-fifth, is free. Miss Lee, in the Athletic Association Office, said because the tickets are not ready yet, the Athletic Association is sponsoring the game free. Take advantage of your student status to see this free game, because the general public have to pay. This free exhibition game is an annual event.

Nothing doing Saturday night? Come to the Blue and White Old-Time Dance at the Drill Hall from nine to twelve. There will be an orchestra, cokes and all the beautiful girls on the campus at this gala affair, said Harris (IV Forrester). Old clothes are the mode, come stag or drag. See you there?

Blues Begin Hunt For Championship Balmly Beach Their First Opponents

Tomorrow afternoon, the football curtain goes up on an exhibition contest as the 1954 Blues take on their perennial pre-season opponents, Balmly Beach. On more than one occasion the Blues have beaten the O.R.F.U. club, although last year the Beach took the game and then continued on to their league title and a Grey Cup semi-final against the Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

When the team trots onto the field on Saturday there'll be lots of new faces, but just as many old ones. Mr. Masterson's powerful backfield will be up to full strength for the tussle, with many fine-running backs to punch holes in the Beach front wall. Led by John Sopinka, an Intermediate of last season and Golden Gael of two years ago and Dick Bethune from Williams College, the rookies are out to displace last year's glory boys, Bob Pinkney, and of course the ever capable Steve Oneschuk. Add Al Riva and Ed Ksiazek to this and the half line looks, to say the least, golden.

The fullback slot presents the powers that be with a delicate problem; any one of them could be a standout on anybody's team. We have to go along with Phil Muntz, a product of Little Big Four ball, and one of the hardest running backs to prance in Varsity Stadium in a long time. Then there's Don Cheeseman, who is shining in practice, and East York's Bob Kimoff, who spent most of last season tied up with injuries. Walt Bulchak, up from the Intermediates gives these veterans a run for their money also.

son will spark a new and better passing attack, something that Coach Masterson has dwelt upon extensively and which should guarantee a wide open game for the spectators come Saturday. Bill Horton and Bruce Day, a product of last year's Mulock Cup winning SPS twelve, give added strength at wingback.

The loss of John Bodrug, a real hard worker from the Baby Blues with a bad shoulder, will be felt at centre, but Ray Yakasovich and John Wismer can spear the middle of line effectively. Bill Beamish looks very promising at tackle and may well turn into a positive threat for the Intercollegiate season. Don Johnston played an exceptionally fine game in the Blue-White tussle a week ago and will help to bolster the line at guard. Earl Ford, Baz Mackie, Alex Macklin, Santo Martini, and Bill McKenna will be holding their own against Balmly Beach's front line.

Ends present almost as big a problem as the rest of the line, but Don Smith, George Stulac, and Fred Smale will be sparking the offence.

Masterson spent some time last night on one of the most important parts of the game, pass defence. The Blues will be able to control the worst that the Beach can throw our way, and there shouldn't be any mistakes. Wilson and Stevenson were having trouble breaking the close net the defensive backs slipped around the pass receivers in last night's session.

Elsewhere on this page appears the Blue line-up for Saturday's game. This can be subject to injuries tomorrow night, but that sort of thing isn't happening this time. A light workout tonight, and the Blues will be ready for their debut. Furthermore, it's free, so let's all be there to watch them.

A Beach Invasion

Even though the Blues came out on the wrong end of last year's game with Balmly Beach, there was plenty of action for the spectators. An unidentified Blue back slithers out of the grasp of the Beach tackler above, while grim reality is written on the face of the oncoming lineman. There'll be lots more of this tomorrow afternoon in Varsity Stadium, as the new Blues set forth in search of the Intercollegiate title. The Beach game is being played at 2:00 p.m.

Lineup

Flying Wings: Bruce Day, Bill Horton, Gerry Lansky.

Fullbacks: Bob Kimoff, Don Cheeseman, Phil Muntz, Wally Bulchak, Jack Rogers.

Campus Gals Shoot High As Archery Season Opens

At some time in her life every girl has played Cupid. We all know, of course, that neither Cupid nor his arrows really exist. During the next few weeks, however, several very real archery enthusiasts will be practising hard at shooting very real arrows.

Now you may say that you have never before indulged in the gentle sport of archery — and perhaps you never have. But there's no time like the present. We would like as many people as possible from each of the colleges to come out and give it a try. Each team is comprised of two girls and several teams from each college are needed to make the interfaculty meet a success.

The official date has not been set for the interfaculty meet, but it will be sometime early in October. This means that if you are interested at all you should do something about it right away. Practices are from twelve noon until two every day at the stadium. Your college representative can let you know more about it; so why not see her to-day? We're sure you will enjoy it and you may even get to the Intercollegiate tournament on October 23 at McMaster University. You never know until you try. We'll be expecting you at the stadium.

R. L. Waddell's Thesis Wins Association Award

The Canadian Construction Association (C.C.A.) has announced that R. L. Waddell of the University of Toronto received one of the awards in thesis competition held recently. Waddell, an engineering graduate of '54, was one of seven Canadian university students who were successful in the competition. Top prize was awarded to Mr. Glockner, a graduate of McGill University, Montreal. He received $150.00 and the award of a book. The other six students from Toronto, Queen's, Montreal, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick) were each awarded $50.00 and an Engineer's Handbook.

"Factors in the Design of Earthquake-Resistant Structures" was the prize-winning thesis entered by Waddell. The competition, the fourth annual one held by CCA, concerned theses on construction subjects, and was open to senior engineering students at seven Canadian universities. The purpose of the competition is to stimulate interest among engineering students on construction problems with a view to developing new techniques.

SAC Book Exchange Sets Sales Record

Over $3,000 worth of books in three days was the record sale set by the Book Exchange operated by the Students' Administrative Council (SAC). Open from 9 to 5, the Book Exchange, located at 119 St. George, rear, offers textbooks at reduced prices to the students.

"We have the largest selection ever," said manager Henri le Sueur, III C & F, commenting on this record sale. All the books are cheaply priced according to Exchange policy.

Students who have used texts to sell are urged to bring them to the exchange. Slide rules, drafting kits, dissecting sets are also on sale at the SAC Book Exchange.

STADIUM MARSHALS

Application for Marshals may be made at the Sac Office, SAC Building.

WORKSHOP

All types interested in working in any one of the fascinating jobs which are open are reminded that the Varsity staffers will be on hand at 110 today in the Varsity office.

The office, for the uninitiated is in the basement of the SAC office in the old Observatory building across from the east entrance to University College.

There are openings for those who wish to report, to do make-up, to take pictures or draw cartoons. No experience is necessary as a series of workshops will be held to teach the newcomers the techniques employed at the Varsity.

Medical Examination

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, WA. 3-9644; for Women, WA. 3-2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

Engineering Soc Disclaims Responsibility

The Engineering Society is not responsible for the activities of the freshman after the finish of the organized tour of Hart House," said Woody Friedlander, Director of Publications and Publicity, to The Varsity last night.

He said that when the freshmen were taken on the Hart House tour, there was absolutely no trouble or disturbance. After the tour, the Society's official responsibility of the tour was ended. This was, Friedlander explained, so that the Society would not receive bills, as they had in other years, for damage to different colleges, which might or might not have been caused by engineers.

After they were through with Hart House, Friedlander told the engineers that their tour was ended. He said that they would now be taken through U.C., Vic, and Trinity. They were to remember that their conduct reflected on the rest of the faculty and that on no account were they to destroy anything. No singing was to be done except between colleges. Friedlander explained that a few upper classmen intended to walk the engineers around and take them through the different colleges.

"While I was speaking to them, about five of them broke away and ran towards U.C.," said Friedlander. "The rest followed and all gathered around the east door. There were some second year students in the crowd, and they caused the trouble."

He explained that some of the freshmen knew what had happened in previous years. "They were looking forward to raising hell today," he said. He added that it couldn't be helped; there were from 80 to 100 repeaters each year, and some always went on the tour.

Friedlander said that he and a few other upper classmen went into UC to try and break up the mob, but they had dispersed through the building. He said he warned the UC Literary Society the engineers were getting out of control, and for them to lock up all their possessions. He reported they did this and locked the door of the Junior Common Room.

All valuable belongings from the colleges have been taken inside the Engineering Building, Friedlander said. The campus police will notify the different janitors to collect what has been taken.

"Socialism 1 A" Plans Good Year

"Socialism 1a" will return to the campus with even more prominent speakers this year, said Bill Grant, president of the University CCF club. The "dynamic and interesting program" planned for the coming year will be held Thursdays at 1.00 p.m. in Room 4 of U.C.

The fall lectures will be based on CCF proposals for better government of Ontario. The first of these, "What the CCF Proposes", will be delivered by Andrew Brewin, a labour lawyer and member of the CCF party. During the spring term a series of five lectures, "The Socialist Experiment in Britain", will be held.

Cheerleader Trial Held This Monday

Cheerleader tryouts, both female and male, will be held on the field at Varsity Stadium on Monday, Sept. 27th, under the watchful eyes of members of the Blue and White Society.

All girls wishing to participate in this display of leg-waving and voice-raising are requested to wear shorts for obvious reasons. All male participants will wear clothes.

Girl cheerleaders will be selected not on the basis of their personality, charm, or intelligence but purely on their looks. Male cheerleaders will be selected.

Negroes Banned At Louisiana U.

Six Negroes were refused entrance to Louisiana State University this fall. They were turned down in absence of a federal court for admission of Negroes. State laws still support segregation.

Similar treatment has been meted out to Negroes at the University of Texas, University of Mississippi Medical School, and Meharry Medical College in Nashville, in addition to Louisiana universities. All of the above are state-supported institutions.

The rejected applicants will appeal to State Board of Education, and legal steps will likely follow, according to an attorney of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

BLUES BEAT BEACH BALMY

Blues Passed Well Blues Plunged Well Blues Are Victors

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity Blues won a football game Saturday afternoon but lost one of their top backs for half the season. The new Blue offence, powerful in every department, easily defeated a weak Balmy Beach opposition 29-12 in an exhibition opening to the Intercollegiate football season, but at the cost of John Sopinka who is out for five weeks with a dislocated shoulder.

Varsity gave a premiere showing of their latest weapon, the forward pass, a tactic which befuddled the Beach defence; pulling it apart and opening the field for the driving Varsity runners. Uncertain of where the next Blue thrust was coming from, the Beaches couldn't quite get set against the College boys.

Beach opened their game from a deep punt formation with Vince Drake back to throw, and got nowhere as the Varsity contained their every sally. When the Blues got their first try with the ball in the third minute of play they needed only three moves to score. Fullback Phil Muntz cut around end for 22 yards to the Beach 14, Pinkney came through the line for seven more and speeder John Sopinka went wide for the major.

After that the Blues opened with their throwing arm and things got really interesting. Bill Stevenson passed smoothly and steadily to bring the Blues into scoring position time after time, alternating his flinging with a strong running game. The result was a 16-0 half-time lead for the Varsity.

Much of the Varsity attack worked around low-slung Al Riva who was outstanding in a fine crew of half-backs. Riva, a second-stringer last year, caught passes, plunged and ran, doing everything brilliantly and winning loud applause from the tiny group of 4,000 fans in the Stadium. Ross Woods, young man with a powerful toe, did part of the Varsity booting and had one 49-yarder for the game's longest. Woods was also responsible for the game's flashiest play as he went high for a Beach pass, fell with the interception, rolled and slithered on the ground for extra yards.

Varsity's import, Rich Bethune, was an all-round man on the field, doing many things, kicking and carrying the ball well.

Down But Not Out

Varsity halfback Al Riva is brought down by an unidentified Balmy Beach tackler after a substantial gain in Saturday's exhibition game. Blue tackle Jack Strapp arrives a fraction of a second too late while Beaches' Bob Smith moves in to help. Riva was a sparkplug in the Blue offence as Varsity romped to an easy 29-12 victory. The Blues will have another opportunity to test the calibre of the O.R.F.U. this Saturday when they tangle with the Sarnia Imperials.

Changing Times Bring Changing Profs. To University Staff and Departments

Several appointments to the university staff were announced during the summer. W. S. Wallace, for 31 years the Chief Librarian of the main library, is now librarian emeritus, and R. H. Blackburn has been appointed chief librarian.

The appointment of D. T. C. Pollock as assistant professor in the School of Law has been announced. Professor Pollock comes from London, England, where he has been Senior Lecturer at the School of the Law Society.

Dean K. F. Tupper of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering has resigned. He is replaced by Dean R. R. McLaughlin, formerly Professor of Chemical Engineering and head of the Department.

In the Department of Political Economy, John Dales of McGill University and Paul Fox of Carleton College have been appointed to assistant professors. Dr. H. Wrong has been appointed research associate, as has H. A. Logan, retired professor of economics. R. E. L. Watson is an instructor in sociology and J. G. Eayres a lecturer.

The Banting and Best department of Medical Research report that the Superintendent of Defense Research Medical Laboratories, M. G. Whillan, has been named professor. In the Faculty of Medicine, J. C. Laidlaw has been appointed an associate in Medicine.

University College has appointed G. Sedden and H. G. Wiebe as lecturers. Trinity College has announced the appointment of A. Dalzell as lecturer and T. H. B. Symonds as acting dean of residence. In the Faculty of Arts, R. E. Deane and H. Rune have been newly appointed assistant professors. New lecturers are R. O. A. Robinson, R. Wormleighton, J.

Hunter, J. A. Page, R. Robinson, J. R. Saywell and I. S. McNairn.

Other staff changes include: D. W. Foley, formerly the assistant librarian of the Royal Military College, Kingston, is assistant librarian, while Miss Dorothea Tod has been appointed head of the periodical department.

Two other campus libraries have received new appointments. Trinity College has appointed J. W. Cole as its librarian, and the Rev. G. A. Boyle has been appointed Archivist of Victoria University Library.

In the School of Nursing, Miss F. H. M. Emory has retired and been named professor emerita. Also, in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, the retirement of T. R. Loudon has been announced. G. N. Patterson will take his place as head of the Department of Aeronautical Engineering. C. F. Morrison has been appointed head of the Department of Civil Engineering and C. H. Burgess is appointed assistant professor in Chemical Engineering.

Riot Reaction Saturates UC Banquet But Dignity of Man, Student Prevails

Effect of last week's raid on University College by an estimated 500 Engineering freshmen still pervaded the air Friday night at an annual sophomore-freshmen's banquet held at Hart House.

Miss M. B. Ferguson, Dean of Women, appearing for Professor McAndrew — the professor injured in the spectacle — called the whole thing "a shocking incident".

The raid, which began as an annual conducted tour, grew into a fun-raising frolic and was climaxed by the invasion of University College and the injury to Professor McAndrew.

Dean C. T. Bissell's comment on the U.C. registrar's absence was: "Some people, whom we all know, have technical qualifications but are moral morons."

But looking at things from a more optimistic point of view, Dr. Bissell later spoke of the university as "the greatest of all fraternities."

Ann Harris and Jack Rose were the sophomore conveners of the banquet.

Rose gave Mr. McAndrew's apology for his absence. "Some people are like elephants — with very small minds," he said. "If one stampedes, they all run along behind."

Warden Joseph McCulley of Hart House was the guest speaker of the evening. "You are a privileged group," he told the students, "but there is no privilege without responsibility and no right without corresponding duty."

"It is the obligation of the university to assert the true dignity of man," Warden McCulley said. "It is the duty of the university to produce men and women of faith, courage, and conviction."

Engineering Society Cleans Own House

By CATHIE BRESLIN

Investigation of the recent Engineering riot which resulted in the injury of Professor W. J. McAndrew, Registrar of University College, and the destruction and theft of university property, has been placed in the hands of the Engineering Society, it was learned last night.

"The students would like to solve this themselves," said J. N. Rossall, President of the Society.

The form of the investigation was not disclosed but its purpose, according to President Sidney is "that this type of vandalism will be exterminated forthwith."

President Smith, out of the city for a day or so, could not be reached for comment today.

Dean R. R. McLaughlin, Head of the Engineering school, said that he did not know the facts of the issue — that he had been ill for some time — and that the whole thing was being left to the Engineering Society to investigate.

A formal report will be delivered to the Faculty Council of S.P.S. and to the President.

CAIRO GRAD. COMES TO U. of T.

World University Service's exchange student at Toronto this year is an Egyptian, Mohammed Kalifa. In Egypt, Kalifa was a demonstrator in Electrical Engineering at Cairo University, of which he is a graduate. After he earns his Ph.D. at Toronto, he intends to return to his native university, where he hopes to become a professor of Electrical Engineering.

Unlike the U of T, the Egyptian universities are not composed of several colleges. The one central university is heavily subsidized by the government, and fees range between one tenth and one third of those at Toronto. The entrance requirements are low and hence the enrollment is high—there are thirty thousand students at Cairo University. Also, there is no initiation.

In addition to a university paper, each faculty produces its own paper. A student union regulates the activities within the respective faculties.

Concerning the political situation Kalifa said, "The country has greatly improved since the revolution. There is no unemployment. Those who normally would be without jobs work for the government, converting the desert into fertile soil. The housing shortage has been solved and food is plentiful."

Egypt at present is still under martial law, but a free election will be held two months after the constitution has been drafted. At present, bi-weekly meetings are held at which the citizens are free to direct questions at the various government ministers, many of whom are not military men.

While he did not notice any startling differences between the Egyptian and Canadian life, Kalifa was pleasantly surprised by the friendliness and hospitality of the Canadian people. He was also unaware of the close relationship between the Canadians and Americans.

Medsmen Advised on Life, Learning At Reception by Dean MacFarlane

Students benefit from being away from home during University, according to Dean MacFarlane of the Medical Faculty in his speech at a reception for incoming freshmen last Thursday night at Falconer Hall.

Over one hundred freshmen along with sophomores and upper classmen heard the dean sympathize with freshmen at home in Metropolitan Toronto under the watchful eyes of their families.

He said that at times it is worthwhile to take life as it comes. The previous generation had enjoyed knowledge for its own sake, instead of planning ahead.

Dr. Tovee of the faculty Staff and Cam Anderson, president of the Medical Society, assisted in the official welcoming of the freshmen. Bill Hunter, vice-president of the Medical Society, introduced Dr. Tovee, who related several of his own experiences in the faculty, then sent the audience off for their evening of gambling.

Campus Debating Organizations Plan Year of Wit with Wisdom

Plans are nearing completion for the first in the 1954-55 series of Hart House debates, according to George Kell, secretary of the HH Debates Committee. Traditionally, Hart House debates have been the "big league" for budding campus politicians. On October 13, the opening topic will concern whether or not Ontario has had good government for the past five years. Mr. Donald MacDonald of the CCF will be present as guest speaker, and Kell is confident that the evening will be an interesting one.

Further plans call for a total of three debates in each term under the same procedures of parliament as previous seasons. The Committee hopes to obtain top-flight guest speakers from time to time.

Gordon Hurlburt, IV SPS, chairman of the University of Toronto Debating Union, has announced that there will be a meeting on Thursday. Plans are being made for tournaments within the university. Challenge debates between Colleges during the season will certainly arouse interest. The union is adding a series of women's intercollegiate debates to the agenda this year.

The British Information office reports that it is unable to plan a British tour. Plans for a number of other tours must be cancelled, since the fees have not been raised and the budget is being curtailed.

Debating at UC is scheduled to start on Thurs., Oct. 7, when the house will decide if it prefers communism to another world war. Topics both heavy and hilarious are the order at UC, where there have been some dillies in the past, said Elizabeth Endicott, UC's women's debating rep. Their plans call for a debate in the JCR roughly every two weeks both terms, with all UC types invited to come and speak from the floor, if so moved. A loud bell will be rung at 4:00 PM on debate days.

The executive of the Victoria Debating Parliament will soon meet to draft their course for the season.

From Trinity, Barry Watson, Literary Institute President, reports plans for a series of weekly Wednesday night debates not to conflict with the Hart House schedules. Next Wednesday they will begin by deliberating "Is the high-school system of Ontario a failure?" The following Wednesday is the Frosh Debate where attendance is expected from the whole first year enrollment.

Further plans include a public speaking course for those interested but inexperienced, a guest speaker sometime each term, perhaps a staff-student debate, and certainly debates with other colleges. In this regard Watson proclaimed, "We will hold a debate with anyone who wants a debate!" Their strict Parliamentary system will continue in operation this year.

Teaching Staff Can't Tolerate Ryerson Freshmen Shenanigans

While riots flourish at the U of T, the Ryerson Institute seems to be tending to some sort of maturity. Mr. Kerr, Ryerson principal, was recently forced to break up an illegal rally during school hours. He has stated that the faculty will not tolerate initiation in its present form.

Though initiation is a headache for the staff, the frosh seem to enjoy it. "At least initiations have taught me how to Simonize cars", "Initiations are a lot of fun, even though they sent me to 'Bassell's' to collect swizzle sticks" are typical comments of the fairer sex.

The men, too, seem to have enjoyable moments. One lucky lad was given a pile of unmentionables to auction off in the cafeteria at noon. When no-one bought them, he was forced to buy them himself. He'll have lots of girl-friends this year.

The sophomores don't seem to get into the swing of things; apparently they lack the thirst for revenge and the Machiavellian tendencies so characteristic of Sophs here. Both Sophs and Frosh agree with Mr. Tumpance that initiation is 'shenanigans' and an example of 'high, youthful good humour' but whether by losing it they are losing school spirit of a form of trivial mayhem is the central question.

Perhaps this is a good question for the faculty of Engineering.

Give A Cheer Says B.&W. Soc.

Today is the big day as far as prospective cheerleaders are concerned. At 4.30 P.M. at Varsity Stadium the higher ranks of the Blue and White Society will be on deck to review all comers. There is a need for both male and female joy-jumpers to assist the big Blues, and two men will be selected and six women.

To clarify the B&W position, Gord Marshall, Stadium Co-ordinator, explained selection procedure to The Varsity. They will be on the lookout for gymnastic ability, stature, personal conduct, maturity, as well as charm, personality, and intelligence. These attributes are to be sought from both species of applicant, he added.

Premier Douglas

The Hon. T. C. Douglas, CCF premier of Saskatchewan, will address an opening meeting of the U. of T. CCF club on Tuesday, September 28, in the West Hall of University College at 4 p.m.

All members of the University's staff and students will be welcome at the event, Premier Douglas is the only Socialist premier in Canada.

"Moral Morons"

Those freshmen engineers who participated in the fracas of last Thursday have been termed, and rightly so, "moral morons" by Dean Bissell.

There are many engineers who argue that they were powerless to stop the onslaught and that they were caught up in the melee. This can hardly be considered an adequate plea.

Anyone who was in that mob was there of his own volition and must, in part be held accountable for the actions of the group. It is not likely that the freshmen in the rampage were unaware of what they were doing.

It is unlikely that they could have remained completely insensitive to the destruction being perpetrated. However, anyone who had such feelings and refused to act upon them is in the very renunciation of his own principles marked down as a weakling without moral fibre and without strength.

P.T. or Not P.T.

One phase of curricular activity at this university which is hard to justify is the insistence on physical training for undergraduates. Its achievements can be divided into three classes.

In the first of these we can place those students who, by training or inclination, are interested in athletics. These find their way into intercollegiate athletics on the senior or intermediate level or into continuous participation in intramural competition. By virtue of this they are exempt from P.T. classes.

Secondly we have those whose interest is moderate. They may take part in spheres of the intramural program which particularly interest them and take the P.T. classes to fill in the required credits. For these people the intramural program is sufficient and the P.T. program represents a wearisome necessity.

Among the third group are numbered those who have no interest in athletics and for whom the prescribed classes are a monstrous waste of time and an infringement on their liberty as well as a source of irritation to their personalities.

For none of these groups can the P.T. program achieve any lasting good.

Wisdom's Light

A disease which is unduly prevalent among students at this university manifests itself in the presence of thinking blocks and "sets". Many people come here with their ideas preformed and clutched around them like beggar's rags.

If a member of an academic community has a paramount duty it must be the constant attention to the "agonizing reappraisal" which alone elevates him from the herd. To invest any person or any institution with a sanctity which precludes genuine inquiry, is to fall captive to a paralyzing inertia. There is nothing which should be so sacrosanct as to escape the scrutiny of thinking people.

This scrutiny should extend to the life of the student himself. The power and the exercise of self-criticism is a crucial factor in the development of a healthy intellectual life on the part of the university student. He must always be sensitive to changes in his mental climate and capable of assessing these changes with disinterest.

It will surely be that this self-knowledge and its attendant light will lead us to "seek for wisdom as for hidden treasures" and we shall sacrifice, if need arise, our most cherished beliefs.

more about illiteracy

our readers write:

IN DEFENCE OF FAITH

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Regarding the editorial-article entitled "Illiteracy?", which defends so-called "religious illiterates", this much I would say. How many of them there are on our fair campus I would not venture to say. That there is at least one should be obvious to all who understandingly read the article "Illiteracy?" ... He it is who wrote the article in Thursday's "Varsity".

Directly or indirectly, the writer has this to say about Faith. Faith is a regression; Faith is a superstition; Faith is unreasonable. These three classifications indicate to me that the writer is woefully uneducated in the truth about Faith. Is it no wonder that his article defends "religious illiterates"?

He imagines that people of, and with, Faith are saying "let us return to the middle-ages when there weren't any H-bombs." Sir, that fanciful situation and attitude is a negation of true Faith, for Faith is a positive force. It is a force that dwells within believers, enabling them to courageously face and overcome their problems or fears: no matter what their source may be.

To be able to courageously face one's future because of one's Faith is a definite step forward; therefore one cannot honestly use the phrase "a regression to Faith", as you did; unless one be a "religious illiterate".

I must agree with the writer, that Faith is a superstition, for the word superstition means "belief in the supernatural"; yet I

I Agree, But ..

Editor, The Varsity.

Although I agree with your editorial comments on "religious illiterates", I do, however, feel that Dr. Sidney Smith is correct when he says that something should be done to remedy this situation.

In this day and age, in particular, it has become very important to live with and to understand one's neighbours. This, as far as I am concerned, embodies in part a working knowledge of the world's foremost religions.

Most of us are well aware of the many misunderstandings which people have regarding faiths other than their own. In turn, this often leads to prejudice, for what we do not know or comprehend we tend to fear.

In view of these two facts alone, I strongly feel that a course in comparative religions is not only desirable but is a necessity. This course could consist of an intelligent examination of the development of the world's major religions and their cardinal principles. This would be one important step by which we could cure the dangerous case of religious illiteracy.

A Fervent Plea

Men of Varsity:

We must unite. Our inner sanctum is being attacked. A sacred Tower is crumbling. We are being defeated in our own castle. For part of Hart House is being opened to women.

I make this plea not only for the good of the males but for these same daring women. As a crack is opened in a dam, the water flowing through this crack will tend to widen it. So it is with our own Hart House. Soon, not only will there be an Arbor Room, but also a co-educational library, a co-ed gym, and finally, a co-ed swimming pool. ... Ah! Imagine that?

Sincerely,
Max Balshin,
III Dental.

must disagree that this belief forms for us "an easy way out" of our difficulties or problems. Rather as indicated above, it enables us to openly face and overcome them, and so move forward on the road of life.

When we think reasonably and calmly, it seems to me that we would all agree on the type of society that we would like to live in. It would be characterized by lasting peace and contentment. Also a time when we would be able to take a man at his own word, and know that it will be honored. A time when true love will rule the hearts of all men.

Reason leads us to conclude that this would be best for all. Faith gives believers an assurance in their hearts and minds, that this time, will come to pass: therefore Faith, far from being what you say "independent of reason", is actually, "reason advanced one step."

If there be doubt in your mind about this, "come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord." Warren F. Young, Knox 2.

Illiteracy?

The Editor,

The Varsity.

I have been reading the pages of your newspaper with great interest. I have especially noted the controversy on "Religious Illiteracy."

However, I personally feel that the great deficiency that this controversy has shown to exist among the students and staff of this University lies in the field of mental and linguistic clarity.

This controversy has revealed a general lack of the elements of every day English, and a most appalling type of confused muddle-headedness among those who have already seen fit to cast their pearls of wisdom before us.

I therefore think it evident that what we are suffering from is not merely "Religious Illiteracy" but "Intellectual Illiteracy."

Yours sincerely,
(Name Withheld on Request.)

Disastrous Curiosity

The Editor,
The Varsity.

This has gone far enough. I have a public statement to make.

This is it:

After the adjournment of the 600 freshmen Engineers in front of Hart House, there was a general rush toward the U. C. Partly caught in the rush, and partly of curiosity, I entered the building together with, I suppose, the first 200 Engineers, or so. I was expecting a more or less disorderly tour of the Colleges and consider my presence there perfectly justifiable.

When Prof. McAndrew was injured, I had been on my way to Trinity College with the first group of Engineers. All the time I have acted as a mere spectator, powerless to do anything about the situation and prodded on by natural though disastrous curiosity.

At Vic, someone snapped a flashbulb and I have become "the leader of the rioting Engineers". The near-libellous pictures in Varsity and Star and statements in the latter were highly detrimental to my reputation, and the conclusions some people jumped to were simply fantastic.

I am not a murderer and riteater. I was merely one of many persons present when the picture was taken. I also happen to be a freshman Engineer, and I wish I could be proud of this.

And my crime is this: I am the only readily identifiable person in the picture. For this crime I have paid enough. Actually, the photographer who snapped the picture is in every way as guilty as I. He, too, was present, and in the same role of a spectator.

Finally, as a member of the first year Engineering class I would like to make an unofficial but nevertheless very sincere apology to Prof. W. J. McAndrew and Dr. Sidney Smith for our behaviour, if that means anything at all to them.

Filmsoc Activities

A collection of ten award-winning movies will be shown by the University of Toronto Film Society in a varied program of feature films ranging from Russia's historical pageant, Alexander Nevsky, to the American Marx Brothers' comedy, Duck Soup. The ten films have been chosen from six different countries, and were produced in the period from 1920 to 1951.

Along with these features, the Film society offers several shorts, including experimental and award-winning films, Charlie Chaplin movies and National Film Board productions.

For those interested in production, the Society offers to its members the use of movie-making equipment, including a 16mm. movie camera. In recent years three films—Caledon, Parking On This Side, and As The Twig Is Bent—have been produced. A fourth one will be previewed at a regular showing this year.

Showings take place every second Sunday afternoon in the Museum Theatre, except for special programmes. Season tickets for the price of four dollars, are now on sale.

JAZZ: Loud and Low

Last Thursday night Norman Granz' Jazz At The Philharmonic played its annual visit to Massey Hall. As far as I was concerned it was as bad as always. It is a matter of constant wonder to me that these musicians, most of whom are first-rate men capable of playing wonderful jazz, can produce night after night this parody of jazz, for which Granz has unfortunately found such a ready market, and avoid committing suicide from disgust.

This music is aimed at the lowest possible level of appreciation. It relies upon a sort of fake intensity produced by repeated notes and short phrases, honking and screaming sounds from the saxophones and trumpets, and extreme low and high notes. These devices might perhaps be justified if they were an integral part of a genuinely expressive solo, but they are not. They are used simply as noise for noise's sake. Obviously Granz instructs his musicians to play this way because he has found that this pleases the audience. Yet how sadly mistaken the audience is. If you observe them closely, it becomes obvious that they are straining mightily to work themselves up—to become emotional. They shout and whistle at the musicians who lapse more and more into the small roster of effects and devices which they have learned please the audience.

What a perversion of the whole function of music it is. The good jazz solo is an attempt at genuine emotional and sometimes intellectual expression. But the solos (with some exceptions) on Thursday night, showed little of this type of honest expression, whether played by the trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie and Roy Eldridge, tenor saxmen Ben Webster and Flip Phillips, trombonist Bill Harris, clarinetist Buddy De Franco, pianist Oscar Peterson, guitarist Herb Ellis, or drummer Louie Bellson. Though they often started out with good potential they lapsed quickly into the type of devices and effects mentioned above and, in the cases of the trumpeters and tenor saxophonists, trombonist Harris, and guitarist Ellis, into meaningless and disintegrated displays of technical facility. Clarinetist De Franco and drummer Bellson showed a general lack of energy and ideas in the case of pianist Peterson.

Happily, the remaining four musicians, vocalist Ella Fitzgerald and her accompanist Don Abney, bassist Ray Brown and the second drummer Buddy Rich performed well throughout the evening. Although I am not a devotee of jazz vocalists it was easy to appreciate the fact that Ella did not sing down to her audience but rendered her songs, some of them rather unsuitable Hit Parade material, with expressiveness and humor. She sang at times, melodic lines very similar to the effects and devices I have deplored in the solos of the instrumentalists, but she used them with honest good humor and without intention of fooling the audience. It was good music. Credit must also go to Roy Eldridge and Dizzy Gillespie for good solos on their slow tempo ballad numbers and to trombonist Bill Harris for a really excellent solo. The star award for the evening must go to Buddy Rich for his very good drum solo which was well appreciated by the audience.

A Close Shave

Beard Psychology

By JOHN MCKELLAR

This last week I have noticed a number of beards prowling around the campus. I assumed that the beards were not self-propelled, but were sported by individuals who for some reason considered hirsute adornment fetching. But what was the reason? First I thought the bearded gentlemen might be postulant in a religious order; but on observing their behaviour, I felt that the rules of their brotherhood must be very lax, to say the least. So I was thrown back on the hypothesis that the fees drained out of them in Simcoe Hall left them too poor to buy razor-blades. But this was far too mundane a reason to suit a person of my romantic inclinations, and in order to find a better one I did a little research on the history of the manly adornment of the chin. Which reason I found is the most applicable to the campus situation, I leave you to determine; here goes with reasons.

The earliest extant mention of a man's shaving occurs in the Book of Genesis, where Joseph shaved before being presented to Pharaoh. I used to think that poor Joseph was probably so nervous that he gouged his cheeks fearfully; but after reading that Egyptians shaved with a sharp stone and had never heard of soap, I decided that even a royal interview would hardly scare him as much as the prospect of shaving. In fact, the operation was so unpleasant that the law of Moses forbids any cutting of the beard at all. This prohibition was the first connection of beards with religious history—but not by any means the last.

For it seems that church councils were not always the orderly affairs they are today; and I hope I will not decrease your respect for the venerable Fathers by pointing out that to convert theological adversaries to their own opinions they sometimes resorted to name-calling and physical contact. And they all wore long beards. So it resulted that one doctrine, I forget which one, was put to a vote at a certain early council, and might not have carried if its supporters had not grabbed the beards of their opponents and pulled so hard that the owners were prevailed upon to change their votes. Eventually this sort of thing was made impossible by a canon law compelling all priests to shave, which is, I believe, still in force.

Beards became fashionable in 16th-century France when King Francis I happened to get a scar on his chin, and cultivated a flowing beard. Of course his courtiers had to follow suit or go home. Then a later King of France, who was bald, started the fashion of wigs; and beards suffered a decline.

They reappeared in full force late in the nineteenth century when, according to one social historian of the United States, "sham and cupidity were so rampant in the land that men were ashamed to show their naked faces." Lincoln was the first president to sport a beard, which he grew after a twelve-year-old girl from New York wrote him that she thought he'd look better that way. It was a sign of the times: in the strict Victorian household, a beard gave the father a more patriarchal look, and no doubt helped him vastly to keep his wife and children in becoming and dutiful subjection.

Why did beards vanish early in this century? Did the World War chase them away, or the movies, or the advent of child psychology? That would be a good topic for a thesis, so I'll leave it for some M.A. type. But almost as good a thesis topic would be, why are these persons strolling around Varsity campus with beards in the year of grace 1954? At the risk of being told to mind my own blasted business, I would exhort the bewhiskered gentry to enrich Gillette's before the first formal dance comes along; for it is my firm conviction that beards cannot for a reason rather ticklish to explain, coexist with strapless evening gowns.

Don't Be A Jerk! Do Welfare Work

Buddy, can you spare some time? Do you have an interest in people and a desire to lend a hand to others? Would you like to play a small part in a community-wide undertaking?

The Welfare Council of Toronto urgently needs student volunteers to participate in group work at Settlement Houses, in Community Centres, and Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s all over the city. Their appeal is not directed merely at psychology majors and budding sociologists—students from all faculties and courses will be welcomed with open arms.

In the past few years, many Varsity students have gained fun, satisfaction and valuable experience by giving just one or two hours a week to this social welfare work. Psychology students doing field work interested their friends in the Settlement Houses and similar community projects. Mrs. Stella Peake, Placement Secretary of the Volunteer Department, says that she has never known a student to lose interest in such service work once they have entered it.

What can you do? Well, perhaps you play the piano, or are interested in woodworking or leathercraft; you may be a mean man with a shutter and flashbulb or have some other special skill or hobby. Why not share your accomplishment with others as a group leader at a 'Y' or recreation centre? If you have had special training in ballet, drama or similar fields, you can follow the lead of a graduate in art who enjoys teaching youngsters who have a natural talent, but who need some constructive criticism to develop their skill.

You may be athletically inclined; you could act as a hockey coach, a supervisor for organized sports, or a club leader for a group of young boys who need your leadership. In recent years, engineering students have conducted Saturday morning tours to places of interest. Several groups of boys were taken to observe subway construction—and the Skulemen were doubtless able to answer all their questions! And the outdoor experience the engineers gain on their surveying trips to Philosophers' Walk will probably come in handy when it is a question of hikes!

Welfare work is by no means a one way proposition, for students can gain experience and a valuable insight into human behaviour. Many men in medicine and law do volunteer work with this in mind. Artsmen whose future is somewhat hazy have found that this type of service helps them to clarify their vision in the choice of a career. One sociology major who began by giving regular time once a week as a group leader for six and seven year olds enjoyed the work so much that she gave her summer vacations to a Day Camp programme. She is now employed in full-time social work.

Mrs. Peake emphasizes that the most effective and satisfactory policy is to set aside the same day and the same hours each week. Helpers are needed at the following times: 3:30 p.m.-5:30 p.m., Monday to Friday; 7:30 p.m.-9:00 p.m., Monday to Friday; 9:30 a.m.-12:00 noon, Saturday.

Mrs. Peake will be available for information and registration of interested students, who are willing to serve once a week, same day, same hours, in the various welfare agencies in the community. Registration for all students except those in Psych. 2B is at the Placement Service office, 5 Wilcocks Street, at the following times: Tues., Sept. 28, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Mon., Oct. 4, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Wed., Oct. 20, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Psych. 2B students register for field work at another date and place. All other registration is by appointment only at the Volunteer Department, 100 Adelaide Street West, Telephone EMpire 3-4971 for an appointment.

Your only paycheck will be the satisfaction of a good job well done, but many of your classmates have found that this is more than enough. How about you, buddy? Can you spare some time?

In The Engineering Store

In that architect's nightmare, the Engineering Building, lie the Stores, a place seldom visited by other faculties, unless disguised in T-shirts and engineering jackets. The main attraction of the stores to non-scientists is to have one look at Miss Nancy Jamieson and Miss Kathy Wilson.

These two charming young ladies were hand-picked by the executive for (so they tell us) their typing ability and ability to add. Kathy was chosen this year from 30 applicants, and though reported at first to be somewhat 'cold', is warming up admirably, that engineering spirit, you know.

Nancy will be well-remembered from last year . . . for her typing ability. Her experience at the job is illustrated by her statement to the press: "Nothing. N.C. No."

Talking to Gord Kelly, second V-P of the Engineering Society, we learned that the Stores are a non-profit business, all proceeds used to subsidize such functions as Skule nite, the annual banquet, and dances.

They sell such things as slide-rules, drafting equipment, jackets, bookends, and (typically) beer-mugs. All but the two girls work for love, which makes overhead almost negligible.

Gord explains the great number of applications to work in the stores with "If you were a girl, wouldn't you like to work around 1,600 strong and virile engineers?" Perhaps the other 29 could be distributed around the rest of the campus.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL IS UNDER WAY

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

With great pleasure we watched Phil Muntz skirt the left end for twenty yards on the first Blue play last Saturday, thus setting what could be the tone for the coming Intercollegiate season. And while everybody else was probably thinking along the same lines, we were reminded of the fact that there are other factors involved in these tremendous gains than the ability of a top-notch back. And we thought we'd pass it on to you for what it's worth.

Let's suppose that just about everybody has heard of the Four Horsemen, the famous Notre Dame backfield of 1924. Coach Knute Rockne's fame spread from coast to coast as Crowley, Layden and Co. rolled up victory after victory for the Fighting Irish. But how about the much less talked-of Seven Mules, the Notre Dame line. Without their efforts Rockne's glory-boys would never have won that lasting fame.

The point being that only by virtue of a quick thinking, fast line, are Muntz, Pinkney, Sopkina, etc., able to rack up twenty and thirty yards a crack. Sure they've got to be fast and shifty themselves, but we admit that the line blocking makes for the yards.

So you say you know that already, and then we add that for further enjoyment as a spectator at a football game, one should watch the linemen pulling from the line and making their blocks, enabling the backs to go for a first down. We remember a particular play in the league game here against Western last fall. Bob Pinkney set out for a jaunt around the left end running parallel to the line of scrimmage. Just as Pinkney started to cut up the field, Al Haig threw a tremendous cross-body block on the Mustang secondary, and Pinkney took thirty yards before he was stopped. To us, that was the whole play, and made the game that much more interesting.

We humbly suggest that you watch the linemen as well as the backs a week this Saturday when the Blues take the field against Western. Then you can see how monsters like Ted Roman and Doug Drew are disposed of.

From the Blue Room . . . Last year's Varsity captain Roy McMurtry finds time to make use of his talents as coach of Upper Canada College's entry in the Little Big Four . . . Mac-Master halfback Norm Stewart, who led the Macs to their 26-8 win over McGill on Friday gained experience on the Western Colts last fall . . . Western's star tackle Ted Roman is even bigger this year, having added some twenty pounds to his stature to go at 240 . . . The O.R.F.U. gets a real workout from the Intercollegiate this fall—Western tries their luck with the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen this Saturday in London, while the Blues play Sarnia there . . . The Varsity's own one-eyed Benny makes his return to the campus this week for another eventful season. Benny blames border-crossing difficulties for his tardiness, but is offering odds on the Yates Cup coming to Toronto this year . . . No mistakes this time, Benny.

Blues Pass, Plunge, Are Victors

with this season was greatly cleared in the game when both Bill Stevenson and Harry Wilson showed coolness and good judgment as well as excellent throwing arms in running a varied Varsity attack. Big Harry Wilson even ran with the ball once, when Beach tacklers crowded him somewhat, and went for nine yards. Mainly, though, the Blue quarters held to throwing passes, completing 12 of 29, and shredding the Beach defence with an assortment of running plays which gained 288 yards.

Bob Masterson's big worry going into the game was his line and so it remains. The great line of other years is gone and while this year's group has done adequately so far they have to match the others in the Intercollegiate, and some of those have improved greatly. The ends are coming well and did fine work against the Balmy boys.

BLUE BITS: The loss of John Sopinka may have Bob Masterson moving one of his excellent fullbacks into the big vacancy Sopinka leaves on the half-line . . . Steve Oneschuk had to miss the Beach game but will be back for the next one against Sarnia . . . No word from One-Eyed Benny on season's predictions just yet but when he does make his calls we'll pass them on . . . Frank Palermo returns to workouts this week—more strength where it's needed, on the line.

Good Year For Varsity Track

This year as never before Varsity promises to be the powerhouse of the Intercollegiate track program. Last year the senior Blues won the track championship in a walk. This year the team returns almost intact, with the exception of co-captain Larry Yiegh, whose graduation leaves a large gap in the sprint section. In addition to the returning veterans, several newcomers and members of last year's intermediate team show promise of excelling under the guidance of coaches Hal Brown and Don McEwen.

Two of the more prominent members of last year's squad have returned, after distinguishing themselves at the British Empire Games. Norm Williams, who was a freshman hurdling sensation last year, won the high hurdles in the Canadian trials, and came third in the record breaking final. Dick Herding also gained a position on the Canadian team where he ran times considerably faster than the present Intercollegiate quarter mile record.

Other prospects for this year include: Barry West and Peter Potter in the high jump, Doug McEntee, Graham Hall, and Clint Husband in the sprints and hurdles Tauno Ojalo and Bobby Hamilton. Several middle distance runners are working out, including, there milers, Dave Preston, Herb Tilson, and Gord Rintoul, milers, Bill Gelling and Bill Eckersley, and half milers, Peter Watson and Ross Linton. It has also been reported that George Stulac, currently playing football, will find time for some pole-vaulting.

This array of talent is impressive, but there are vacancies in many positions, both on the Blues and the Intermediates. Coach Hal Brown has extended an invitation to all those interested to attend practice each night between four and six o'clock at Varsity Stadium.

Diamond T Still in the Rough Sarnia Bests Western 24-7

By ART GUTTMAN

Sarnia Imperials, of the Orfu completely overpowered the University of Western Ontario Mustangs in the first half, and then added an extra touchdown in the final quarter, to whip Johnny Metras' crew 24-7 in London last Saturday.

Johnny Choristecki scored two for the majors, and quarterback Jim Lambert of the oilers, added the third, and converted all three, Cookie Gilchrist kicked a thirty-five yard field and a single, while the Mustangs could counter only with a touchdown by Getty, and the convert by Fracas. Most of the Mustangs' scoring was done in the third quarter when they managed to hold off the hard-charging Sarnia line, but they gave up a safety-touch in the second canto.

Coach Johnny Metras unveiled his new diamond-T formation, but the Imps paid no attention to the novelty. This new formation has the tailback deep as in a double-wing, with the quarterback in the regular T-formation spot. Meanwhile Sarnia, with a smooth-working T-formation, and a strong line, made the Mustangs fumble many times.

The Western forward wall held up twice, once in a goal-line stand for three downs, and then holding the Imperials in a third down attempt at mid-field.

Lambert was the outstanding player on the field of Little Memorial Stadium. Using the Quarterback option, he ran, threw, and pitched-out to his backfield with great success. The Mustangs, however, showed that this was their first really hard battle of the new season.

Sloppy play marked the first half of the game, with fumbles killing the team's chances, before they could really get underway. Only in the third quarter, when their line started playing with desire, did Western manage to show their potential strength.

Gino Fracas, Byron Young, and Bill Fowler carried well, with Getty doing most of the passing from the tail-back slot. Ralph Simmons was devastating on defense. The Imps started quickly with Gilchrist drawing first blood in the first quarter by kicking a placement and Lambert converting a touchdown by Chorestecki. Roman booted a rouge for Western.

In the second quarter Lambert scored a major on a twenty-yard run, on the option play, and then converting. A safety-touch against Western made the half-time count 17-1.

Getty scored on a pitch-out from quarter Bill Gowler, with Fracas converting in the third quarter, but the Imps came back in the last period to wrap up the game with Chorestecki getting his second touchdown, Lambert converting, and Gilchrist kicking a single on an attempted placement which went wide, making the final score read 24-7 for Sarnia.

The Mustangs meet the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen next week in another exhibition game in London.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

The women's softball season is shaping up into something short of dynamic this year. The reason for this is that the league has more talent on hand than it ever has.

Eleven squads emerged from the annual organization meeting on Saturday and the entire interface circuit was divided into the usual three leagues. There have been no changes in the placement of teams but the play-off schedule took a real going over. Before this year, gloves were issued only to the featured first basemen and catchers. This season, any player who requests may have one.

Softball is one of the most participated sports in the women's ranks and every season has seen an improvement in the brand of ball played at the University. Last year, after a frightfully dragged-out playoff series, Vic first came up with the all important win over a very strong Saint Hilda's group.

The unfortunate thing for the rest of the league, though fortunate for the Vic squad, is that all the 53 season winners will be on hand excepting Mary Crowther. Saint Hilda's is short a few of last season's runners up though they boast just as strong a crew.

Strangely enough, U.C., the largest college on the campus is entering one solitary group. P.H.E. has a team represented from every year while P.O.T., Meds, and Saint Mikes have pledged one each.

The league is scheduled to open next Monday. All games will be played, as usual, from 1.10 till 2 p.m. at Trinity field and the stadium. It would be quite a joy to see these games run the full four innings, but unless teams arrive, ready to play on the dot, it will be almost impossible to see this wish fulfilled.

There were far too many late arrivals last season which resulted in postponement of games and unnecessary defaults. So if the weatherman plays his part well and we watch tardiness, there will be no reason why the league cannot wind up by the end of October. It gets pretty cold after that you know.

Powerful Marauders Swamp Redmen 26-8

By FRED GRAY

McGill Redman, fresh from the rather dubious distinction of edging U.B.C. 8-5, opened the local football season Friday night with an exhibition game against McMaster Marauders in Hamilton. To the complete enjoyment of the local supporters Marauders dumped the invaders 26-8. A gathering of 3,000 ardent fans watched the rookie-studded Macmen, led by freshman halfback Norm Stewart, storm to victory with comparative ease.

Capitalizing on an early McGill fumble, to open the scoring, MacMaster forged a first quarter 12-6 lead with two converted touchdowns. Adding a single in the second quarter they led 13-6 at the half. McGill collected their points when veteran back, Herb English fell on a blocked kick for a touchdown converted by former Marauder Ed Parente.

Opening the second half with a determined drive the Redmen were stalled short of a major by a spirited Mac line, and forced to settle for a single by Pelech. McGill added another single before MacMaster returned in a scoring way with a converted touchdown. MacMaster completed their evening with a further converted touchdown and a single in the last quarter.

McGill showed an over-all lack of ability in almost every department.

SPS Students Riot At UBC

Vancouver, Sept. 26, (CUP) — Engineering students at the University of British Columbia were reported here last night to have chained, hazed and dunked their freshmen in annual initiation ceremonies which got out of hand.

Co-eds of the university were reported to have been placed in a set of medieval stocks and liberally sprayed with water.

A psychiatrist of the University — Dr. Edro I. Signori — called the performance "humiliating."

"The mental health of one person is worth far more than the sadistic pleasure of a group," commented Professor Signori.

It convinced non-university people that university people were in fact crazy, he said.

President of the Student Council, Dick Underhill said the affair would be taken up by the student court.

Charges of "conduct detrimental to the student body" would be laid against the culprits, Underhill said.

Freshmen and sophomores were reported to have chained one another to lamp posts.

SAC Exchange

Beautiful Book Bargains

By RALPH BERRIN

Are you planning to use textbooks this year? If so, every book you need is on sale. (at a large saving), at the Book Exchange, 119 St. George, operated by the Students' Administrative Council.

The diversity of books for sale amazes one. Packed into two small rooms is all the knowledge between covers available at the university. Every subject—medical, medieval, metallurgical, metaphysical is on the shelves; every science from Archaeology to Cybernetics is represented. The Book Exchange is a store-house of knowledge and a treasure-house of bargains.

Textbooks from Anthropology Aids to Zygote Zoology are all available at greatly reduced prices; no more than three-quarters the last price is the Book Exchange policy. There is a "Chatterton" at 10c to "Scientific Encyclopedia" at $13.50, and Gray's Anatomy ($16.20).

Though the shelves are stocked with recognized texts on all subjects for every course, there are some books for extra-curricular reading. "How to Read a Book" ($1) is one example; "How to Get a Job" (30c), another. Would the "Concise Oxford Dictionary" ($1.50) be another?

Under the management of Henri le Sueur, III C & F, the Exchange is open from 9 to 5 to sell you this year's texts and help to sell your old ones. A large sign, thoughtfully provided by the Book Exchange will help freshmen locate the rear of 119 St. George.

"We have the largest selection ever," was Manager le Sueur's comment regarding the overflowing bookshelves. "We have lots of books, but we still need more," he added, proving that students are quick to take advantage of the many bargain book buys.

If you have books to sell, bring them to the Exchange, where you can set your own price in accordance with the Exchange policy and general condition. The lowest price will ensure the fastest sale of the text and more money for the seller on "pay-day".

"Pay-day" is the day some three weeks hence when the student will receive cash for his books which have been sold. This is a merry occasion, for students in past years have received sums of up to fifty dollars.

If you can read Sommerfelds "Atomic Structure and Spectral Lines", or Russian literature, the Book Exchange has it. The profusion of French books compared to the scarcity of "Representative Poetry" should prove something to a sociologist or an pedagogist (if there is such a word).

The Book Exchange also sells dissecting sets, slide rules, drafting kits and atomic models. The latter resemble colored moth balls with holes. A bargain price for every book, text or reference, will mean a real saving; a help to your pocket book as well as your studies. If "Sex and Temperament" or "Forest Mensuration" is the text you need, the Book Exchange has it. "Economics" economically or "Socrates" at wisemen's prices are on sale.

The Book Exchange is one of the many Students' Administrative Council enterprises operated by students for students. Savings, satisfaction, service are all offered by the SAC Book Exchange. What more can one ask? By the way, what course requires a vest pocket English dictionary?

CHEST X-RAY

The Health Service, in co-operation with the National Sanatorium Association (Gage Institute), provides chest X-rays, which are compulsory for the following students: All new students, all final year students, all medical and nursing students, dental students in their first and last two years, and all students who do not live in Canada. Appointments for all male students not in Arts are made through their class presidents during the week of Sept. 27th. Arts students and all women students make their appointments during the same week at the Health Service, unless they have already done so previously. All other students and staff members may have a chest X-ray if they wish. They are urged by the Health Service to do so.

Medical Examination

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments during November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, WA. 3-9644; for Women, WA. 3-2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

Engineering Society

of the University upon its completion . . . "we hope by the end of the week," said Engineering Society President Rossall.

"We want to face the matter squarely and offer no excuses," Rossall said.

According to the Society no defence or blame can be laid until completion of the investigation.

Any action to be taken will not rest entirely with the Society, Rossall said. Generally, according to one source, in cases where discipline is required, the caput — a student-faculty body — metes out the punishment. This could be fines for those found guilty, or possible expulsion from the University.

Rossall wished to emphasize the fact that the freshmen engineers, during their conducted tour of Hart House, behaved as "perfect gentlemen". As for the cause of the sudden reversal of conduct following the tour, Rossall commented grimly, "That's what we intend to find out."

According to Marty Friedland, President of the U.C. Lit., "It is the policy of the Lit. not to hold Engineering Society responsible for the incident," but to blame the freshmen themselves. "We regret not so much the physical damage, but the moral damage to the University as a whole." Any question of retaliation Friedland considered as "juvenile" as the entire incident itself.

No Prostitution There

Europe Enlightening Girl Rep. Discovers

Dueling, handshaking, and German efficiency were among the things which most impressed Jane Farquharson, IV UC, during her recent trip to Europe sponsored by World University Service.

Miss Farquharson described her trip as a "tour of people rather than universities." One of three students chosen by WUS to represent the University of Toronto, she toured French and German universities during her three and a half months' stay. She also attended a WUS seminar in Hertfordshire, England.

Among the German universities which Miss Farquharson visited were Bonn, Heidelberg, Munich, and Marburg. German universities were in full session but Strasbourg and the Sorbonne, which she toured in France were holding only summer courses.

"Korporationen", student groups similar to our fraternities, are common on German campuses. Unlike fraternities, however, dueling is a popular sport among their members. It is taken seriously and dueling scars are a mark of great distinction.

Nazism, Miss Farquharson found, is not prevalent in Germany and would not be tolerated in a university. However, many students are veterans and Nazi songs are sung wherever students congregate, mainly because they are well-known and, of course, forbidden.

Student government in German universities is far more powerful than in this country, with more financial control. Student unions surpass ours in architecture, Miss Farquharson noted, being more modern and extreme in design.

Reconstruction in western Germany has gone on rapidly, but in East Berlin, which Miss Farquharson also visited, conditions seemed chaotic and little rebuilding is being done. "But," she reported, "the opera was much better there."

Miss Farquharson also noticed a great difference between French and German students. The Germans were more energetic and better organized than the French, who are less efficient and find co-operation difficult.

The seminar in England was attended by students from all over the world. During her two-weeks stay there Miss Farquharson met several Russian students and found them very friendly. However, she noted a tendency to base all their discussions on economics. She cited as an example of this one of her Russian acquaintances who claimed that Russia had no prostitutes because there was no unemployment there.

Police Open Fire On Western Frosh

London, Ont., Sept., 26 (CUP) —Police shots broke up a crowd of University of Western Ontario Students who were demonstrating outside a women's residence here last night.

Two or three shots were fired into the air by three constables of London Township police department.

The students made hasty retreats for flowerbeds and shrubbery and were pursued by the police after they had sung to girls in Brescia Hall here.

A promise that the incident would be investigated came from Dr. Frank Stilling the dean of Arts and Science.

According to one source, three officers who broke up the sing-song had mistaken the gathering for preparations for a panty raid.

Dr. G. Edward Hall, the president of the university called the whole affair: "serenading, pure and simply."

A joint enterprise of the Hart House Caledon Committee and the sophomores of Victoria, the work was judged an overwhelming success by all who were in charge.

"We found that a lot has been accomplished," said Bosko Loncarevic IV SPS, chairman of the committee. "The gang worked hard, but we probably would have accomplished more if we had had more boys than girls. This was experimental and, we feel, very successful. It is certainly something to be tired again in future years."

Buses left Vic for the farm at one o'clock. When the five buses arrived in the yard, they were divided into working crews for the different projects. Over each team, one or two sophs were placed as supervisors to keep the work moving. Satisfaction was expressed by both first and second year students. "They did a spectacles which have given universities adverse publicity."

As part of their initiation, the Vic frosh worked in the sunshine clearing paths, cleaning out the barn and painting and cleaning the houses. In addition they oiled the Sauna, a cedar hut for steam baths, and removed debris from the stone ruins.

"damn fine job!" said Rich Newman, soph president. Of course, any lazy frosh had been warned that they could be brought to "trial" after their initiation week.

Dick Verity, temporary freshman class leader remarked, "I am very pleased with the spirit

Student Riot Rampage Erupts Cross Country Cops Foil Snakedance

Kingston, Sept. 28 (CUP)—It took 20 city policemen—armed with billys and fire hoses—to rout 300 Queen's University freshmen here last night who attempted to break into the police station and free two students being held for questioning.

The police were able to turn back the screaming freshmen after a half-hour struggle which began with a wild snake-dance down Kingston's main thoroughfare.

The snake dance wound up in front of the city police station, when a cruiser car was pushed into the front door, breaking glass and destroying the casing.

Two students were arrested during the disturbance and lodged in cells. It was then that the 300 fellow students tried to storm the station.

The reported student upheaval at Kingston brings to five, the number of large-scale freshmen demonstrations at universities all across the nation.

In Toronto, the President of the Engineering Society, here, J. N. Rossall, said that last Thursday's riot which saw the injury of Professor W. J. McAndrew, Registrar of University College, was still being investigated.

Asked whether the Society yet knew who struck Professor McAndrew, Engineering Society President Rossall replied: "I don't think that Prof. McAndrew was struck." He added that he was "extremely anxious" to get the whole matter cleared up "as soon as possible".

Last week, student "shenanigans" were reported at the University of Western Ontario and at the University of British Columbia.

Another "riot" was reported over the week-end at the University of Alberta where students are said to have formed snake dances which had to be broken up by city police in Edmonton.

At the University of British Columbia last week, students were reported to have chained each other to lamp posts during freshmen demonstrations and to have placed co-eds in Elizabethan stocks, spraying them with hoses and pails of water.

In London, Ont., last week, police broke up a crowd of students who were singing and chanting outside a women's residence.

Yellow Sheet Really Read But Not Pink

Campus Comment has hit the stands again this year. Last Monday it started its campaign with attacks on Duplessis, on St. Laurent's attitude to the Massey recommendations, on Russian diplomacy—and on the architecture of the new UC men's residence.

"I am sure we are being widely read," said Managing Editor, J. H. Lee, "and we have 13 more issues this year." Last year Comment was printed nine times. "We will welcome articles from anyone on the campus," added Editor-in-chief J. A. Millard.

This year, all articles appearing in Comment are being signed, either by initials (for masthead members) or by names. This is a change in practice from last year's policy. "We have nothing to hide," reported Millard, when questioned on the new practice.

"Comment is not a CCF organ," said Millard, "although the members of its staff are mainly members of the University CCF club. The paper is not financed by any organization. Publication costs are paid by membership fees." The avowed purpose of the paper, according to its first issue, is to give space to the principles and ideals of democratic socialism.

The object of Comment, Millard said, was to shake the apathetic condition of most university students. All other campus papers usually give the capitalistic point of view, he said. We give the other side. We don't claim to be dispassionate observers, he added.

Blue and White Makes Fall Plans May Have Evangelist Graham Here

"The Blue and White Society plans for this fall are quite extensive," said Bill Harris, B&W president. In outlining up-coming activities, B&W has suggested that they may sponsor more cultural activities on the campus, rather than purely social ones.

Specifically, the B&W would like The Varsity to test reaction to a February visit to Varsity Stadium by evangelist Billy Graham. "Cultural enough?" queries Harris.

The Blue and White also has officially announced that the theme of this year's Homecoming Float Parade will be "Canadians".

Saskatchewan CCF Premier Addresses Campus Politicos

Firey little Saskatchewan Premier Tommy Douglas—head of the only socialist government in the Commonwealth—told students here yesterday that millions of dollar's-worth of Canadian surplus goods were being built up because of "a lack of human intelligence."

In Toronto to address the 14th session of the Canadian Congress of Labor, Mr. Douglas took time out yesterday to address the University's CCF club.

About 300 people listened to the one-time church minister's address given yesterday in the West Hall of University college.

"I hesitate to suggest this," the Saskatchewan leader said, "but I'm going to suggest that we might have to give some of our surplus goods away."

He wondered how long Canadians could sit in the heart of prosperity while 1,500-millions of people in other parts of the world starved.

Canada's best way of fighting Communism, he declared, was not by re-arming exclusively to the tune of some two-billion-dollars a year and with atomic bombs but with a better distribution of staple goods.

"People go to war, in the final analysis," he said, "because they are hungry. That has always been the way of history... men—hungry men—coming down out of the hills to plunder the fertile fields of the lowlands."

The Premier declared that food was the greatest weapon in the arsenal of democracy.

Private enterprise should get full marks for solving the problems of production, prevalent a hundred years ago but had failed lamentably in solving the distribution of goods.

Other plans of the B&W include a pre-game dance and pep rally for each of the three big home football games on the Friday night at 9:00 p.m. in the Drill Hall. They will endeavor to have Bob Masterson and the team on hand, and B&W are confident of as great a success in their pep rallies, as they had last year, when attendance averaged around 500.

Immediately after each game the Society has planned tea dances, also for a nominal price in the Drill Hall. The high point in the social week-end will be on the Saturday evenings, when the Hart House dances will be held, said Harris. On the 9th of October, after the Western game, the music will be that of Bert Niosi; on the 30th, the homecoming McGill game date; Mart Kenny will be the bandmaster, to be followed on Nov. 13 after Queens by Benny Louis.

The selection of Varsity cheerleaders was made final last night, with every promise of a lively crew from B&W officials. From 32 applicants, six were selected to fit in with a slightly altered cheerleading policy which will have increased emphasis on gymnastics.

Engineers Lose Name Plates Don't Know It

Another round of inter-faculty pilfering has taken place under the noses of this year's beginners, the Faculty of Engineering. The loss of the three name plates from the Engineering Building went unnoticed by the majority of engineers all day Tuesday, although the plates were removed late Monday evening.

Neither Jack Rossall, president of the Engineering Society, nor Bill Deeks, vice-president, could be contacted to comment on whether they had had word from the thieves as to why the plates were taken. Time will probably tell whether they were taken by UC in retaliation, or the opening gun in the Victoria Bob Apple Battle. The battle is traditionally a soph-frosh scrap but has turned into a Vic-Engineering fracas in the last few years.

U. of T. Professor Thinks He Has Found Ancient "Dorset" People

Signs of an ancient Dorset people's settlement were found in the Canadian arctic this summer. The research party was led by Professor Emerson of the Anthropological Department and William Tylor, a U. of T. graduate now doing pre-doctorate work at the University of Michigan. The party was sponsored by the National Geographic Society, the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, and the National Museum of Canada.

The site of the discoveries was on Southampton Island in Hudson Bay. Professor Emerson said that two houses, out of a possible ninety-two houses that the Sadlermuitis people had occupied some time after the Dorset People died out, were excavated this summer.

Identification of 50,000 animal bones will be undertaken by Professor Emerson. "Mostly seal, walrus and polar bear bones were found outside the two houses excavated. The objects in the houses and the bones were taken to the Smithsonian Institute for study," said Professor Emerson.

muitis were wiped out perhaps by an epidemic of typhus, in 1903.

The party left early in June and returned in late August. No further information is available until clearance is had from the National Geographic Society in Washington.

Pointing to the domestic scene, Premier Douglas waved the finger at rising unemployment and a drop-off, now, of farm-equipment manufacture. He said that surpluses built up in Canada over the past four years, would have disappeared if purchasing power were given the unemployed.

Back in 1935 when he was — as he called himself — a "green horn" on parliament hill, he made a motion that $500-millions be spent on an Ottawa-supervised working-wages program. "The finance minister arose and very patronizingly said, 'I wonder whether our young friend (Mr. Douglas) thinks that money grows on gooseberry bushes.'"

"The amazing thing," the premier continued, "is that in 1939 at the outbreak of war, someone found the bush." In two days one-and-a-half billion dollars was found to carry on the war.

During the war 96 per-cent of all available Canadian beef was being used. There was no surplus. Yet 10 years before the war — from 1929 on — there were huge surpluses, the premier declared, while the world starved.

Much of the premier's address was devoted to a description of party fundamentals and the work of the CCF government in Saskatchewan.

He gave these three basic "recognitions" of the party:

1. That it endorsed a mixed economy made up of private enterprise, co-operatives and government-ownership of business enterprises.
2. That it advocated colloquially-termed "Welfare States".
3. That it emphasized the need for planned economy.

8 Girls, 2 Men Are This Year's Cheering Team

Last night John McKellar of the Blue and White Society announced the cheerleaders for this year. The selection was favourably one-sided — eight gals with two guys.

Marnie Littlejohn, 2nd UC, and Mary Jane Champ, 2nd Music, are back this year. Tom Bell, 4th Meds, and Don Bassin, 2nd UC form the male segment.

The 50 entrants were cut down to 12 on Monday night. The final six were selected after tedious discussion. They are Pat O'Brien, 3rd, St. Mike's, Judy Francis, 2nd Physical and Occupational Therapy, Bev Millman, 1st P.O.T., Pat Elsley, 1st Physical Health and Education, Helen Mitchell, 1st P.O.T., and Jane Duff, 3rd P.H.E.

St. Michael's Inaugurates First Friday Evening Mass

The inauguration of an afternoon Mass, to be held on the first Friday of each month in the academic year, was recently announced by the Very Rev. L. K. Shook, President of St. Michael's College.

The Mass was introduced for the benefit of university students, with the permission of His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan, Archbishop of Toronto, and will be celebrated at 4:15 p.m., in St. Basil's Church. Holy Communion may be received under the conditions applicable to evening Masses — namely, abstinence from solid food for three hours to reception, and from liquids for one hour.

"All interested students are welcome to attend," added Fr. Shook. The institution of the afternoon or evening Mass has been authorized in recent times by the present Pope, Pius XII. Its purpose, according to Fr. Shook, is "to cope with certain difficulties peculiar to this age" by making possible the participation of workers whose jobs conflicted with the customary hours, and by responding to the rising awareness and interest in the Mass which has permeated the modern Catholic world.

CHEERLEADER CONTEST

Oyez, Oyez! All Red-Blooded Right-Thinking men of Varsity, Skulemen and lesser breeds — ye who deem yourselves true connoisseurs of feminine pulchritude — a contest is forthcoming this Friday which will tax your discernment to the utmost.

Appropriate awards will be dealt to wit — one cannon, though corpulent, of ancient lineage; Cleopatra's hip bone; four slightly used trophies of an underwear attack; and lastly, of special interest to Engineers, the "Kash Trophy". Scan your Friday rag for further enlightenment.

Ryerson Caretaker Is Estonian Head

Toronto (Exchange) — John Holberg, a caretaker at Ryerson Institute, last week became president of the Estonian government in exile. Mr. Holberg has been on the Ryerson maintenance staff for eight months.

Summer University Is International

I was prouder than ever before to be a Canadian," said Mary Ellen Gibson (SAC vice-president) after she and Bill Angus (SAC president) returned from the first Canadian International Summer University at Vancouver. It is hoped that the second will be held in Toronto next year.

The main purpose of the Summer University was to bring together foreign students studying in Canada and familiarize them, through lectures and discussions, with various aspects of Canadian life. The theme of this Summer University was "This Nation Canada." The students, representing a great many countries, became very enthusiastic about Canada and her potentialities.

Outside activities gave the students a valuable opportunity to know and understand each other. They toured Vancouver, attended Theatre Under the Stars, saw various national dances and went through a plywood factory.

Mary Ellen Gibson and Bill Angus were impressed by the organization and effectiveness of the conference and with the University of British Columbia.

Our Favourite Luncheon Spot

While the lunch room in Hart House is being converted into a co-educational coffee shop some of the lunch-carrying types are temporarily displaced. For some, accommodation has been provided in the lower gallery of the Great Hall. Others must use rougher, if not more pleasant surroundings in the great out-of-doors.

Once the coffee shop is open for business it will remain as a lunch room during the noon-hour and will assume a bi-sexual character at 3.00 p.m. each day.

While the weather remains fine it appears that our students will be eating in the open air. If they can see their way clear to assuring the cleanliness of the lawn it will be appreciated by all.

Office Open For Football Ducats

Tickets for Varsity football games will be sold Tuesday and Wednesday of next week at the south door of the Arena. Three student tickets may be purchased for $1.50 upon presentation of an ATL card.

The ticket office will be open from 12:00 to 6:00 on Tuesday and from 10:00 to 6:00 on Wednesday. Students may purchase tickets for their husbands or wives at regular student rates upon signing a declaration.

No provision is being made this year for sale of tickets at the south end of the campus. It will again be necessary for the students in Meds, Engineering and Dentistry to go to the arena to procure their tickets.

Officials have stated that they believe that the extended hours of sale will help alleviate this problem.

Children Fined For School Fire

It seems that pillaging and damaging of educational property are not the sole prerogative of U of T engineering students.

From Daisy Avenue public school in New Toronto comes the report that three disgruntled male students, aged seven, eight, and nine years have broken into the school during vacations and caused damage conservatively estimated at $500. The damage resulted in part from several bonfires which they lit in the middle of floors.

The boys have appeared in juvenile court where each was fined $25. In a judiciary surprise, their parents were not held responsible for the damage.

Post Mortem

Continuing last week's inaugural column, wherein I remarked that of the films seen in these parts during the summer, those with good advance notices turned out to be clinkers, and vice-versa:

Sabrina, which is just finishing up a nice long run at Shea's, arrived in town with the golden names of several Academy Award winners floating before it, to wit: William Holden, Audrey Hepburn, Humphrey Bogart, and Billy Wilder. In addition, the play from which it was filmed, Sabrina Fair, had a substantial success on Broadway starring Joseph Cotten and Margaret Sullivan.

Sad to relate, Sabrina turned out to be an overlong, over drawn set-to with high society, whose virtues were only occasional, mainly consisting in some low humour involving the character played by Holden, and some superb acting of the I'm-just-doing-this-for-a-friend variety by Humphrey Bogart. Much of the utter dullness of the plot could have been avoided by a really literate screenplay, or, even more attractive, a well-constructed one.

The latter half of Sabrina lapses into one weary, soul-searching conversation after another, all uniformly slick and superficial, all sustaining the same deadly level of cinematic unimaginativeness. From Billy Wilder, the director of Lost Weekend and the superb Sunset Boulevard, Sabrina is a sad disappointment.

Seven Brides for Seven Brothers is another film I found vaguely dissatisfying, and I still can't decide why. The songs were far above average, especially "Bless yore beautiful hide", "Wonderful Day", and "Lonesome Polecat", and Jane Powell was never in finer voice. The Cinemascope screen was well, even subtly used; at any rate, I had no uncomfortable consciousness of acres of unused screen, like so much empty parking space, as I have had when watching Cinemascope pictures like How to Marry a Millionaire and Three Coins in the Fountain. The dancing, mostly by six exceedingly agile young gentlemen, was superb, and the grand ballet, placed in the middle of the film this time, instead of at the end, was excellent fun. Nonetheless, I was left wishing the production had had a keener pace, that the sets had been more imaginative, that the construction of the screenplay had been a little neater; in other words, that more loose edges had been tidied up.

The lack of a finale which could have filled the entire screen with a little of the fine dancing and music which had gone before was especially disappointing. Guess I'll just have to wait till A Star is Born arrives here to essay a serious discussion of that fine form of popular art, the musical film.

Campus Profile

The rear end of Augustus, the and thereby hangs a tale. Although Augustus was wounded by the rascally engineers last year, he will return to the field of battle School of Law horse, has retired, a week from Saturday. But, Bill Angus (II School of Law) has given up his important position to undertake the less onerous job of president of this year's Students Administrative Council. We feel, however, that he will perform this lesser task with equal ability and foresight.

After graduation from the University of Toronto Schools he entered Victoria College, and emerged in 1952 with a B.A., all four athletic colours, and positions on the Victoria College Union and Athletic Association.

Angus promptly departed for Europe, and spent a year of graduate study at the London School of Economics, University of London.

After his return, he enrolled at the University School of Law, and upon graduation will probably go to Alberta or British Columbia for at least a year "due to the unfortunate situation existing between the two competing law schools."

"I am a somewhat fervent exponent of the University School of Law as the foremost legal education institution in Canada," he said, "and if this doesn't raise my marks, nothing will". His chief claim to fame at the School has been his spirited portrayal of Augustus at football games.

This year, in preparation for scaling the peaks of oratory, Angus, an active member of the Alpine Club climbed for his sixth year in the Canadian Rockies. He also mountaineered Britain and the Alps, but found the Rockies "spectacular".

A keen Sauna-bather, Angus was chairman of the Finnish Exchange, sponsored by Hart House, which brought ten Finnish students to Canada last summer.

When we asked if he thought that most university students were religious illiterates, Angus replied; "The University Christian Mission which is coming shortly to the campus will provide an opportunity for the student to investigate and perhaps find for himself the true basis of religion."

SAC Message

There exists on this campus a multitude of conflicting aims and activities in which the student may submerge himself, taste a bit or remain aloof. And of necessity, there is a focal point within this conglomerate mass striving to direct and initiate the pressures and forces of the moment. This centralizing agency is . . . YOUR Students' Administrative Council.

Throughout the year, we spend five dollars of YOUR hard-earned savings, labour long over the seemingly simplest of problems, speak in abbreviated terms of W.U.S., COSEC ad infinitum, and are criticized by all, from the censorious "Varsity" to the supercilious freshman.

We trust this year will be no exception. Only YOUR keen interest and profound criticism will enable us to fulfill the responsibilities of our positions.

By the way, 5—1 says our boys take John Metras and his Mustangs for the Yates Cup. The law of averages must fall our way soon!

Hart House theatre has been completely cleaned, are now a colour described as coral rose, or shock-painted and rugged over the summer. The seats ing pink, and the walls are a light grey.

HART HOUSE THEATRE UNDERGOES RENOVATION

The Hart House theatre-goer this year will have a shocking pink seat. Since 1919, when the seats were first put in, they had been an ever more sombre black, but have now been painted as part of the renovation plan for Hart House Theatre.

When the season ended last June, the old order changed to make way for the new. The old tile floor was taken up and all the seats removed. After the whole interior had been scrubbed down to the last paint job, the cement floor was painted a light steel grey to match the walls.

The chairs were taken to the decorator's fountain of youth. Resprung, recovered, and repainted they were replaced in the former seating arrangement, but in the more solid base of a cement floor.

A grey broadloom carpet was put down on the lobby floor and down the centre aisle, while the side aisle and the entrance to the theatre have been covered in rubber matting. The final touch was to add a little more light to the new decorating job. The house lights now have double the intensity.

The whole effect is to make the theatre a more agreeable place to be both before and during a play. The seats are tied in so solidly that there is no possibility of some rather large person shaking the whole row while placing herself. Also the squeaks will tell no tales. The broadloom and rubber matting are guaranteed silencers for any size step from the highest to the broadest, but are not advertised as the best cigarette butt disposals. (There is a rumour that the owner of the first butt found ground into the rug will be hung by his ears from Hart House tower for three days.)

The next part of the theatre to be renovated will be backstage. A green room will be put in on the main floor while the old one will be turned into a double chorus dressing room. Some simple structural changes with the addition of 42 mirrors bordered with lights will increase dressing room accommodation to between 80 and 100 persons.

The dates of the Hart House Season under the direction of Bob Gill are as follows: October 23rd to Saturday, October 30th, Darkness at Noon, the dramatization by Sidney Kingsley of Arthur Koestler's novel, November 27th to December 4th, The Apple Cart by Shaw, January 22nd to January 29th, The House of Bernard Alba by Federico Garcia Lorca and February 20th to March 5th, King Lear.

Vocally Speaking

By TOM VIRANY

If you have a dollar, a set of vocal chords and a smile you can go around town and country chanting gleefully — if you're are a member of the Hart House Glee Club.

Although some of these distinguished choir members are somewhat illiterate, (they can't read music) they manage to sing merrily — in unison, under the waving arms of Ward McAdam, their director.

The Glee Club battled the Assumption College basketball team to a draw in London last year. The choir was to perform for the Sunday nine o'clock society. After they arrived, they sang till four in the morning in a hotel.

It was the hotel manager who called it a draw.

All men of the University are eligible to join, and McAdam will Rehearsals are held Tuesday particularly welcome freshmen. evenings at 7.15 p.m. and practices on alternate Mondays. Those who want to try it out are invited to go along singing a song up to the Music Room in Hart House today or tomorrow at five p.m.

The Glee Club will test the acoustics of the Caledon Hills Farms at a week-end party, sing carols over the CBC Trans-Canada Network, and give a concert at Cornell University.

It will sing at a Star Free Concert, give an inter-University concert with a Buffalo and Kingston Choir, and sing Carols under the Blue and White Christmas Tree.

Who knows? Last year the Glee Club almost scared the wits out of some co-eds, when it went all around the Campus and serenaded them. It happened not long after the party raids.

"Order Please"

Tonight in Falcóner Hall the footlights will rise on another year's activities for the Students' Administrative Council. This organization is comprised of members representing the colleges and faculties of this university.

The members of the S.A.C. are charged with the responsibility of co-ordinating student activities and acting as a link between the students and the administration of the university.

Among the activities, for which the S.A.C. is responsible are the Blue and White Committee, the publication of THE VARSITY and TORONTONENSIS, as well as the operation of the Housing Service, and the Book Exchange.

Sitting on the S.A.C. does not guarantee infallibility, but the work done by the majority of the members demands the respect of the student body.

In the year which awaits us, there will be moments of success and failure but the honest effort will always be rewarded.

This Day's Mighty Holiness

With the blowing of the Shofar last Monday the people of the Hebrew faith entered upon the ten days of awe and the beginning of the year 5715 of their calendar.

During these days they are taking a moral inventory, —an inventory which will reach a climax on the tenth day of the month of Tishri which is called Yom Kippur, the day of atonement.

On that day judgment will be final and the prayer Un'Saneh Tokef will be recited in which majesty is accorded to God whose "throne is established in grace" and who is "seated in truth".

On that day also it is determined "... who shall be at rest, and who shall be wandering, who to remain tranquil, and who be disturbed".

An inventory such as these days involves need not be limited to any faith and it would be well if we should join with our Hebrew friends at this time, and take stock of ourselves in order that we may "all be inscribed in the book of long life and happiness."

Will Joe Go?

In a sixty-thousand word report the Senate Select Committee of the United States Senate, has recommended unanimously that Senator Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin be censured on two counts.

It was noted in the report that the senator had obstructed legislative process by refusing to appear before the sub-committee which investigated his finances two years ago.

A second point of censure was his "reprehensible conduct" towards Brig-Gen. Ralph Zwicker.

It is heartening to note that the members of this committee have placed what should constitute a serious check on the political activity of the junior senator.

It is to be hoped that the senate, in discussing the recommendations of the committee, will take an equally courageous stand, and the man and the "ism" will be forever divorced from American politics.

our readers write:

Executive Responsible

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Mr. Friedlander tries to disclaim any responsibility on his own or the engineering society's behalf for the havoc created on Thursday. He is quoted to have told the Varsity that he said they would "now be taken through U.C., Vic, and Trinity and to remember that their conduct reflected on the rest of the faculty, and that on no account were they to destroy anything."

What he actually said was this— "We are going over to U.C. We are going up the east hall, along the south hall and down the west hall and into the K.C.R. (at this point there was great laughter), pardon me—the J.C.R. There will be Arts men there—don't hurt them (ha, ha), (mow 'em down). There will also be Arts women there too (hurrahs) — don't hurt them either (ha, ha) and don't rip up any furniture (ha, ha) or tear down any signs, (ha, ha, ha) or rip up the place at all (at this point there was great laughter from the assembled frosh, who were obviously taking him very seriously).

From there on, we will go to Trinity (I forget what he said about Trinity— except that there were co-eds there too.)

Then we will go up to Vic. Now Vic is an Arts College up at the north end of the campus. Now it is an old building and its pretty fragile. Now we wouldn't want to ruin it (boo, ha, ha). There will be lectures going on there too—we wouldn't want to break up any lectures—now would we (ha, ha). On to U.C! (Down with dirty Arts men, and so forth). Forthwith five or six set out over the railing for U.C. and the rest trailed behind.

Now if this be any stretch of the imagination can be construed to support Mr. Friedlander's claim that he told them not to do any damage and meant it—then he is not responsible; but is it not obvious—what he was really saying to that mob was — "Let's go into Vic, U.C. and Trinity and tear the place apart."

He is most certainly responsible and should pay the damage. Perhaps it is a reflection of the mentality and the maturity of engineers that they should be taken in every year by this sort of thing.

Work Shop

Workshops will be held for those interested in learning make-up and page layout, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week at 1.10 p.m. The place of meeting will be the VARSITY office in the basement of the SAC building which is across the road from Hart House.

Simple Solution

Editor,
The Varsity.

Re the unfortunate Engineers' affair of last week, the heaped piles of moral censure seem to me to be of little value.

The sensible solution is, to my mind at least, the obvious one. Everyone knows what these bedevilled young bloods would really like when they go baying in packs about the countryside. The problem may thus be handled as follows:

Line the youths up outside the Hart House shower room and make them take a good clean soap shower, perhaps scrubbing each other. When they emerge, dust and delicately scent them, the better to hide any natural or acquired odors. Supervise the neat combing of hair, the donning of fine, clean linen and a tie.

Then assign to each a nice, plump, pretty and infinitely compliant young mistress of his own age (or perhaps a year or two younger) skilled and well-endowed with feminine sympathy. Let none of the maidens be prettier or less pretty than any other, so that there will be no jealousy. Leave the young pair to enjoy their idle hours in pleasantness and companionship, which is, after all, all young men really want.

It is, we all know, the simplest solutions which are never given their due in this world. But surely one which removes the strains and tension from the faces of our young men, and which removes all possibility of recurrent brutish outbreaks such as we periodically witness, is worth considering?

VARSITY INTERFACULTY EDITION

Speaking ^{1/2} OF SPORT

BY MOISHE REITER

McMaster Marauders defeated McGill Redmen 26-8. Queens Golden Gaels outscored the Guelph Aggies 14-1. Western Mustangs were defeated by Sarnia Imperials 24-7 and Varsity Blues had an easy time with Balmy Beach, winning 29-12.

These were just games, teams from different leagues playing friendly exhibition football, but the preview it gives of the intercollegiate football picture is an interesting one.

From these results it would seem that Varsity is the strongest team in the league this season. This is not only because they scored as many points as all the other college clubs combined but mainly because of what the other clubs showed in their games.

McGill Redmen opened their season with an exhibition game against the UBC team in Montreal and won it 8-5. The loss to Mac reduces the importance of the victory though. A point not emphasized in reports of the game was that Norm Stewart, the back who led the Mac offense, was with Western Colts last year, an intermediate team. The rest of the Mac team is heavily staffed with rookies. Considered from this angle and remembering the score of the McMaster victory, McGill can't be regarded as much of a threat to anybody.

The people out at Western came out loudly about their new formation, involving the use of a double quarterback, but its first test, in the Sarnia game, proved it ineffective. Even the heavy Western line was not as strong as they looked on paper. An interesting fact is that Sarnia, the day after their victory over Western met the Beaches, whom Varsity had just beaten, and won by only two points. If the Blues and Mustangs can be compared on this showing it looks as though Varsity has an edge.

With 30 experienced players back for Frank Tyndall's Tricolour, the Queensmen are looked upon as a powerful squad in the intercollegiate ratings. But against the Aggies they gave a performance that compares with the play of Varsity's Intermediates last year. The Baby Blues last season, won both their games with the Guelph boys, 14-13 and 24-0. Looking at the two records the Gaels seem to be on a level with the Varsity Juniors.

The trouble is that while everything looks very good for the Blues by our calculation and comparison, pre-season games give only the vaguest picture of the teams. The coaches are still experimenting with players and tactics and what we see now could be entirely changed in actual league competition. John Metras is reported to have worked with his "Diamond T" in other years but he has never used it in games that count. Last year his Mustangs lost to the Blues in pre-season play but still won the Yates Cup.

Last year too the Varsity sneered at Frank Tyndall for "sending boys on a man's errand", but the Gaels ended up in third place and could have done much better except that they were pathetically understaffed.

We feel sure in predicting the hard times to be suffered by the McGill club, though. They just don't seem to have it.

As for predictions, even our favourite savant, One-Eyed Benny, is a little undecided. Benny likes the Blues but reserves the right to change his mind before the season opens.

Interfaculty Girls' Tennis

Tennis anyone? Well grab your racquets, girls, and we're off to the courts. Activity in the net game is getting under way this week. In each college there is a list posted and all you need to do is affix your name. Games may be played any day at either the Vic courts, which are located behind the Union, or at the St. Hilda's courts on Devonshire Place.

Four players will be sent into the semi-finals by each college and these will in turn play off to select four members of Varsity's intercollegiate team. The Intercol tournament is scheduled for October 15 and 16 at McGill University this year.

Toronto's team fared very well in last year's tourney, winning 11 of their twelve matches. Queen's came second. Winner of the first singles was Mary Lynn Boys of Trinity, while Anne Innis of UC was the victor in the second singles.

And there is no reason why Varsity should not do just as well this year. Keen competition is the essence of good tennis, however; so we would like as many entrants as possible in the college tournaments. Don't hide your light under a bushel. Get out and show what you can do. But win or lose, you'll certainly have a lot of fun.

What's the Matter with Old UC No Spirit Shows Lack of Pride

What is the matter with U.C.? The so-called centre of Arts learning at Varsity has again this year been nominated as the morgue of the Toronto campus! Hold on, you indignant Arts men! Honestly, if you stop to consider the present situation, before you get too hot under the collar, you know and only you know that your college spirit is dead—buried deep in your musty walls.

Dr. Sidney Smith can well be proud that not all the colleges and the faculties at Toronto are in the same wretched condition that U.C. finds itself. It is amazing that the 1,100 students that make up Principal Jeanneret's college cannot in some way find a medium for school spirit.

The most natural way to prove to the rest of the campus that you are really breathing, would be to enter more fully, both in numbers and in enthusiasm in Interfaculty sports, but, even here, you have failed and have gone back to your dusty, dingy burrows. Don't deny it, because there are too many incidents that prove you are rotting because of your inactivity, as a college, in the life of this university.

A very pertinent example of U.C.'s lack of participation is seen in this year's women's softball league. One team is all that University College can muster; whereas, a college like St. Hilda's which is approximately one-third the size of U.C., is entering two teams. This seems to be the general pattern in all activities around the old College.

A step in the right direction has at last been made at U.C. in the publishing of the Gargoyle and a great deal of credit must be given to Aubrey Golden and his staff in this effort, but this is not enough. What is needed is a dozen more organizations and clubs like this, that will promote amongst the U.C. student body a sense of comradeship and belonging which is at present lacking.

Athletics is one definite concrete answer to the problem. Not only do team sports arouse pride in one's college, but they also make a student feel as though at last he really is a member of his school.

Come on U.C., let the rest of Varsity see that you are not on your last legs, but that you can and will take part in all phases of campus life, not only sports. Then and only then, will the other colleges and faculties be able to consider you a true and equal partner in the life and activities of this, the great University of Toronto.

Grid Preview Skule -- Irish

The Engineers, among other things, are noted for the fine football teams they produce each school year. Practice sessions commenced this past Thursday on the back campus where about thirty enthusiastic gridgers turned out.

Manager Ken Wheeland, running the players through calisthenics, commented that the Engineers should "sweep the league" this season. With eighteen regulars back in the fold from last year's championship team, as well as several aggressive freshmen, the Skulemen could well fulfil this prophecy.

There was rumour of the coaching chores being handled by ex-Varsity quarterback Ed Skrzypek, but to date the Blue and Gold are without a mentor. The whereabouts of last year's ace field general, Don Hart, are not readily discovered, and manager Wheeland remains silent upon this subject.

Last fall the Engineers went undefeated to the Mulock Cup final, and behind fine passing by Don Hart and Marv Larsen whipped St. Mike's 17-0. Right now, the boys appear ready for repeat, but we'll keep a respectful eye on St. Mike's, U.C., Victoria, and Meds.

With the arrival of Intramural football in a short time, the question arises, will St. Mike's be one of the outstanding contending teams again this year? Last year, in the Mulock Cup Finals, they succumbed to a powerful Skule team, 17-0.

Returning are the fast scat-back and pay-off man, Jude Fusco, alternating full backs, Kurt Russell and Dick Koterski, wing back, Bill Priestner who has been an Intermediate for two years.

Although St. Mike's might appear weak because of the loss of their sharp-shooting quarterback, John Burns, half "Bull" Dave Winters, and tackles Larry Corcoran and Ed McKenna, an All Star last year, they are amply aided by the return of last year's second-string quarter, Bud Fletcher, glue-fingered ends Tom Ahearn and Ollie Babirad, Dan Driscoll at tackle, and Dave McIntyre at centre. Filling in at the guard positions will be two hard-hitting newcomers, Mike Vasko and Jim Sullivan.

The St. Mike's coach seems undecided as to the formation, he will use this year, but with a line averaging over 200 pounds, he should have no trouble selecting one. There is an overabundance of modesty and silence in the St. Mike's camp which seems to indicate they will be tough to beat.

Football Roundup

By DOUG GEEKIE

Let's take a look at the Blues with reference to individual positions. A great deal of attention is given each year to the quarterback who directs "Big Bob's Blues", and this year is no exception.

In order for the "T" formation used at Varsity to operate effectively the quarterback must be a good passer, a good ball handler, and a capable field-general. He has to have complete command of the 100-plus plays that the Blues use as well as the variations to each play. He must also be able to pick out weaknesses in the opposition's defence while trying to rotate the ball-carrying duty from one back to another. It's no wonder they go grey at twenty-five, is it?

Next let's have a look at the Wingback, or "Fifth Wheel". He must be able to block like a lineman as well as catch and run with the ball like a halfback. In the "T" formation he is continually required to block defensive ends and linebackers—the toughest job in football.

He is also the key to most of the pass plays that the Blues use, generally acting as a decoy to spread out the defensive backfield allowing the following halfback those wide open spaces in which to gather in the leather. Furthermore, he is generally called upon to fill the outside linebacker spot on defence, which is one of the most important in the 5-4 defence that the Blues use extensively.

The Blues have three "converts" at wingback, Bill Horton, a former end, and Gerry Lansky and Jack Rogers who starred on the half line with the Baby Blues last year. All three are good boys being short only in experience. Horton is an old hand at linebacking, but after the departure of players like Al Haig you should expect a slight decrease in the "Fifth Wheel" production sheet.

Predictions you say? There can be no doubt about it—the Yates Cup will return to Varsity, if the rookie tackles come through with flying colours.

After Agony and Cold, Cold Water

St. Hilda's Halls Stay Undefined

St. Hilda's was visited Monday night by sixty men, who serenaded the girls to the tune of "Metagona stephanos" (literally translated: with agony my brothers).

Several unsuccessful attempts were made to scale the wall of the female cloister and to get in the front door. Failing this, some boys held out handkerchiefs under the windows and told the girls to jump.

The boys demonstrated football techniques, jumped over the hedge, and serenaded, but failed to persuade any of the girls who were watching from the darkened windows, to come down. They sang "Old Toronto" with a kick line, and "I'm a big, bold desperado."

Further attempts to reach the second story windows were greeted by bucketfuls of cold water. This discouraged some who sat or lay down on the lawn while others danced disconsolately by themselves. They left at 11:45 saying "I'll get you in the morning."

A later party arrived to investigate the situation and offered to search the house for men. It was not found to be necessary.

Medical Examination

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, WA. 3-9644; for Women, WA. 3-2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

FINANCE, VARSITY AT SAC

Cut Pending For Varsity SAC Threat

In the report of the Finance Committee of the S.A.C. at last Wednesday's meeting, it was announced that the proposed fee raise had been turned down by the Board of Governors of the University.

This faces the S.A.C. with an acute financial problem. Last year two budgets were drawn up. The first of these was based on an increased fee and called for a surplus but the second was based on the present $5.00 fee and proposed a deficit of some $750.

When the fee raise was refused the comptroller's office of the University of Toronto said that the budget could not be passed while showing a deficit. The Finance Committee drew up a budget to remove this debit.

In the new budget the expenses for the Varsity were reduced by 1,000 and certain grants were removed which brought the budget to a surplus of $500.

Copies of the new budget were not available so discussion on the budget was deferred to the next meeting.

Should the new budget go through the Varsity would be curtailed to a maximum of 82 editions for the year. In the 1953-54 session the Varsity bud-

Secondary School Sexy Nudism Necessary Now

That nudism is the only solution to the problem of High School Education in Ontario, was a suggestion applauded by Trinity College Literary Institute. It was made by Ron Price, visiting member of the Hart House Debates Committee, at the Trinity College debate, held last Wednesday night.

Speaking on the resolution "The High School System in Ontario is a Failure", which was defeated 29 to 43, Price stated that it is only through the medium of nudism that sex will be adequately taught, and the multitude of social classes abolished. With the institution of nudism in High Schools, only a glorious two classes will remain, he said.

Barry Watson, leader of the government, pointed out the lack of religious and moral education in High Schools, and criticized the Schools for their failure to provide adequate technical and guidance facilities.

As second speaker for the Opposition, Martin Hunter said, "Surely no one believes that the High School system has anything to do with education. Its sole purpose is to inspire interest and to be old enough to work. This it does quite adequately. A vocation cannot be taught in schools. This can only be learned as an apprentice (Continued on Page 8)

Chancellor S. Beatty Will Officiate At Hart House Arbor Room Opening

"The Arbor Room", the new coeducational coffee shop in Hart House, will open officially today at 3.00 p.m.

Chancellor Samuel Beattie, Mrs. Beattie, President and Mrs. Smith will follow the Blue and White band to Hart House. There they will be received by Warden Joseph McCulley.

The opening address will be given by the President and the Chancellor will cut the tape opening the room with a pair of golden shears. Then the room will be opened for students.

One free doughnut will be given with each of the first five hundred cups of coffee and the first two hundred lady-guests will receive a free rose.

A novel feature of the Arbor Room will be "The Picture of the Week". This picture will be on display in the West Alcove of the Arbor Room.

The Art Committee of Hart House will choose the picture every week from either Hart House own collection or from the current exhibitions in the Art Gallery.

A written commentary on the picture and the artist will also be on display each week. The first picture to be displayed will be Tom Thompson's The Pointers.

Provision has been made to supply music in the Arbor Room. The machine, operated by the Seeburg Company, will contain a hundred records ranging from popular to classical.

The room will be used exclusively by males — the members of Hart House — as a lunch room and coffee shop until 3.00 p.m. every day. After 3.00 p.m. both sexes will be admitted within the hallowed halls of Hart House. It is expected that the room will find great popularity as a co-educational hangout during the late afternoons and evenings.

Textbook Trouble

PROFESSORS HAVE RIGHT TO LIVE

Yesterday I happened to meet an Arts freshette who hails from my home town, and asked her how she was enjoying life as a University woman. Usually she is the sparkling, bubbly kind of girl, but just then all the starch seemed to be drained out of her. Before long she "gave sorrow words" and confided to me that she'd ruined her academic career for good.

It seems that in one of her classes the professor had made some statement, and she informed him that "the book" said something different. He asked which textbook she was referring to, and when she told him, he warned her not to take it seriously. "My opinion of the author's scholarship isn't very high," he explained, "and I should know. After all, I wrote the book." And for the first time the horrified maiden noticed his name on the cover.

The poor girl was feeling the shock we all feel when we come to college and meet face to face with men and women who write textbooks. In high school, "the book" is a kind of deity which must be placated by ceaseless attention. But high school students recognize two authorities about knowledge: the textbook and the teacher. And they soon realize that it is quite possible, and shrewd politics as well, to play one authority off against the other.

But what can you do if teacher and author are leagued against you because they are the same person?

There are some other facets of the author-professor identity which perhaps I should explain so freshmen won't barge into them. Let me give an example. A few years ago, I had to adjust myself to life in a small town; so to help with the adjustment, I took a course in Gossip 1a, which was taught by Prof. Magenta. It was a fine course, and the only compulsory reading was in two texts: Elementary Scandalmongering, by Magenta, and Spying on the Neighbours, by Magenta.

But when I tried to sell the books the next year, I found that Dr. Magenta had been hired in the U.S. to teach his courses by no less a person than Senator McCarthy. So the course was taken over by Prof. Vermillion, and the texts listed were Over the Back Fence, by Vermillion, and Artistic Character Vilification, by Vermillion. Both professors urged the class to get varied viewpoints on their work, and then proceeded to suggest more writings by the aforementioned standard authors.

Let me cite another example, which happened to me at another university. The professor of Old French had compiled an anthology of mediaeval French poems, complete with notes and vocabulary, which she used in her classes. If a student complained that he couldn't find a word in the vocabulary, she'd reply, "Oh, it must be there, I'm sure I remember entering it, but it may be under another letter."

Once she excelled herself. It happened to translate a word, and she asked where I ever got such a meaning. I named her vocabulary as my source with an air of injured innocence. "Well," she explained, "I thought it meant that when I prepared the book, but now I've changed my mind, and I think it means something else..."

Moral: If you're in a course where the prof wrote the text, better change courses. You can't win.

Varsity Needs Subverter Bad

At 1:10 p.m. in the Underground Headquarters of The Varsity, the subversive anti-engineering rag, there will be an important Workshop meeting. All those who are so debased that they will consider working for this unspeakable, unpardonable excuse for a newspaper are requested by the commie spies that run The Varsity to come down the side steps of the SAC office (another subversive organization) and join the rest of the rats already down there. The SAC office is located in front of Hart House, which incidentally is probably subversive too.

POT Freshies Tortured By Delta Tau Delta

Greek letter societies on St. George St., competed for the honour of initiating POT freshies on Wednesday night. Delta Tau Delta, in accordance with the Sophomores request, put sixty of the girls through an evening of torture.

Beginning the evening by blindfolding them, stamping their foreheads with the frat's insignia, they then threatened to brand them. The ice-cubes they used produced much the same sensation as a branding-iron.

Next on the agenda was an introduction to the President. John Wilson, IV SPS. Incidentally, the girls, who were instructed to kiss him, got the impression that he was holding a piece of raw

The boys thought the girls would appreciate a Shower to cool them off. The ice-cubes they used certainly accomplished the purpose. This was the finishing touch for the freshies, who treated the boys to the same.

Thoroughly cooled off, the girls went through a quiz. The penalty for a wrong answer was of all things, an egg dropped on their heads from an upper story.

When Delta Tau Delta was finished with them, the POT's left, picking up their shoes from the Newman Hall fence as they went.

Brewin Advises

"Ontario, instead of being a brake on the economy, should use the bargaining power of the tax-rental agreements to force the federal government to undertake needed programs," Andrew Brewin, C.C.F. National Council member, told a lunch hour meeting of "Socialism 1a" yesterday.

Speaking on the C.C.F. program for Ontario he stated that it was "Democratic, Detailed, Socialist and 'conservative' in that it was not proposed irrespective of cost. To illustrate his argument, he pointed out that Ontario alone could not bear the cost of a complete Health Program but needed federal aid. Ontario's economy needs "planning, and where appropriate, public ownership", he said.

Norm Chalmers, club program director of the University C.C.F. Club, announced that the next one o'clock meeting would be Thursday in Room 15 at Vic.

NOTICE
Three brass plaques have been removed from the Engineering Building. These plaques cost approximately $100 each.
Therefore a total of $300 of University property has been unlawfully taken. Will the persons responsible for removing these plaques return them at once to the Students' Administrative Council Office. No questions will be asked, or names taken. It is hoped no further action will have to be taken to recover this University property.

Are You a "Religious Illiterate"?
There is much ado about "religious illiterates" on our college campuses. The term has been taken to indicate a lack of knowledge about the Bible and Christianity. But the test of religious literacy must be broader than that. It is not enough for us to inform our youth only about one book, one sect, one religion.
Unitarians believe that everyone should have some knowledge of the great faiths of today and yesterday. To be religiously literate requires an understanding of Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam as well as Christianity. So we teach our children the creation stories of India, China, Africa, Greece. Our youth study the lives of the great teachers, Moses, Jesus, Socrates, Zoroaster, Buddha. The faiths and cultures of the present are studied by book, and where possible by personal visitation.
Unitarians reject the rigid concept that teaches only one doctrine, believing that a religion adequate to this historic hour requires a broad universal outlook.

So Long Fellows

A pyjama raid planned by Middle House of Burwash got quite an upset from these stalwart defenders of Annesley Hall. The girls formed a reception and farewell committee for the fellows, who didn't get quite the trophies they expected. In fact, they didn't get anything at all. The rain damped the ardour of the boys, though it seems not to have bothered the girls at all.

Council Picks Tommy Seymour To Fill Chair

Tom Symons, formerly chairman of the N.F.C.U.S. committee of the University of Toronto, has agreed to fill the post of chairman of the Students' Administrative Council for the coming term.

Symons was the representative of Trinity on the S.A.C., for the years 1949-50 and 50-51. While he was on the campus as a student he was active in many organizations.

In 1951, Symons won the Maurice Cody Memorial Scholarship in Canadian History. Upon completion of his M.A. work at this university he joined the staff and is at present acting Dean of Residence at Trinity.

The appointment of Symons as chairman was made upon the unanimous recommendation of the Committee for the Nomination of a Chairman, which was headed by Jane Farquharson, representative of U.C.'s women on this year's council.

The committee also recommended presentations to Gordon Gwynne-Timothy, chairman of last year's S.A.C., and to Professor R. M. Saunders, former staff adviser to the S.A.C.

SAC At A Glance

The Students' Administrative Council last Wednesday, besides hearing The Varsity blamed for the bad riot publicity the Engineering Society received and approving a Co-ordinating Committee for Dates.

—approved a cheer-writing competition for a new U. of T. yell with a prize of a free ticket to a Western or McGill week-end;

—officially invited N.F.C.U.S. President Tony Enriquez to Toronto on Oct. 13;

—will send only two or three observers to the W.U.S. conference in Hart House Oct. 15-17 to avoid offending smaller and out-of-town universities;

—appointed Pres. Angus and the local N.F.C.U.S. Chairman-elect as delegates to the N.F.C.U.S.

Everyone Welcome Here

A Welcome party will open the yearly round of activities of the International Student Organization, said Wally Eze, III Meds., president of I.S.O. The dance, he said, will be held tonight, at 8.30 p.m., in the Music Room of Hart House. He stressed the fact that all students, Canadian as well as foreign, would be welcome.

During the year, Eze said, I.S.O. party-nights will be held on the first Friday of the month, with themes to suit every occasion. On every first and third Sunday of the month, I.S.O. is planning coffee-hours and discussion groups. The theme for the fall will be "Comparative Religion"; members of the organization will discuss their own faiths with others.

I.S.O. was founded as a result of the experience of Canadian soldiers overseas in the Second World War. These soldiers, Eze said, were aware of what it was like to be a stranger in a foreign land.

Council Proposes Co-Ordination of Campus Functions

A proposal to co-ordinate the dates of all events on the campus is now before the Student's Administrative Council. The forming of a committee to prevent conflicting dates for campus functions has been suggested.

It was originally proposed to call the group the "Dates Committee". However, it was suggested that this might cause some confusion, therefore the name was changed to the "Co-ordination Committee."

All colleges and faculties of the university, all clubs and other organizations on the campus, would submit a list of their proposed activities during the year, with date and place, to this committee. University activities and athletic activities may be considered as well. The committee would be responsible for informing all organizations of conflicts in their scheduled events and would attempt to provide a solution to such conflicts.

"This experiment is not actually brand-new," said Ron Gould, IV UC, when he proposed the committee to the SAC last Wednesday night. "McGill now has one; Toronto once did, but it didn't flourish to well."

The benefit of such a committee to the SAC and the students generally was questioned by the Engineering Rep, Gord Hurlburt, IV SPS. He stated that it would take an almost full time stenographer to keep track of all the information.

"Such a committee would prevent financial loss for the organizations concerned", Gould replied. He pointed out that it would avoid situations where a campus-wide function was planned for the same night that a small club had intended to use. "For such a committee to succeed", Gould said, "co-ordination must be used, not coercion".

It was also suggested that the new committee should enter a column of coming events in The Varsity. This would take the place of the present "Coming Up" and "Today" columns. Organizations would submit, to the committee, notices for the column, which would list events for the day and one or two following days.

The proposed committee would be handled by the Public Relations Commissioner. It would be responsible to the SAC at all times and would only be overruled by a majority vote of the SAC. The resolution introducing the committee was tabled for consideration till the next SAC meeting.

conference here on Oct. 18;

—learned from Engineering Rep. Gordon Hurlburt that the Engineers will keep away from the goalposts. "Perhaps", suggested U.C. Rep. Ron Gould, "the Engineering Society is trying to back out of something — the poles are of steel and greased this year."

"Harts and Arbors"

This afternoon at Hart House there commences a new era in the history of that famous building. For the first time, the new co-educational coffee shop will be in operation.

Called the Arbor Room and decorated throughout in that motif derived from the motto of the university, the room should make a great contribution to life on the campus.

There can be no doubt that this coffee shop is needed. Situated centrally as it is, it will provide a focal point for extra-curricular life. Here faculty, students, and extension course students can meet as members of this university.

It is hoped that this innovation will not only be used for the lighter side of student activity but that here there will occur that meeting of trained and untutored minds without which the university cannot properly fulfill its function.

There does remain a twinge of regret that the idea of a students' union appears to have been finally dispelled and that Hart House should have been forced to fill this great gap in student life. We sincerely trust that this will represent no fundamental change in the nature of this house operated under the aegis of the lonely Hart.

School Spirit

It is encouraging to note the signs of increased school spirit of a constructive nature.

There has already appeared at U.C. the first edition of their new college paper the U.C. Gargoyle. The expressed purpose of this publication is the fostering of school spirit at the college.

Victoria College has carried out a successful "constructive initiation", and other colleges and faculties have had tremendous response from their freshmen years.

There will be opportunities for carrying this college spirit into the wider sphere, of university activity. We hope that this will be the case.

The Complete Man

With the beginning of this academic year we have seen the first of the proposed appointments under the terms of the Harry M. Cassidy Memorial Research Fund.

This fund, established in memory of the late professor of Social Work at this university is aimed at the initiation of research in the field of human resources.

For several generations now the world has been experiencing a tremendous growth in the knowledge and techniques applicable in the fields of natural resources and material expansion.

This progress has long since outstripped our understanding of the individual upon whom we are dependent, in the final analysis, for the implementation of our technological improvements.

We trust that this program of research and Grants-in-Aid will make a significant contribution to the understanding of the "whole man" which is so vital to the continuing existence of our civilization.

musings over a textbook eating, drinking - - and monsters

The Alsop brothers, noted political analysts, writing from Washington voice cryptically-expressed concern, over the incidental effects of nuclear experiments. They quote Lewis Strauss, Atomic Energy Commission chairman, to the effect that "after every test we have had, and the Russian tests as well, there is a small increase in 'background' radiation". They add the warning of Dr. E. B. Adrian, distinguished British physicist, that "repeated atomic explosions will lead to a degree of radioactivity which no one can tolerate or escape."

It would seem that the continuous firing of thermonuclear devices will, in the foreseeable future, so charge the atmosphere with radioactivity that not only individuals exposed to direct radiation, but genes in germ cells will be injured. We can await with horrified certainty, the Alsops inform us, the production of numerous human monsters.

Of course, the more advertised fear resulting from the atomic experiments is that of complete human annihilation. So long as military experts in the United States and the U.S.S.R. are convinced, that the primary way to win the Cold War is to build more efficient bombs the atomic armaments race will continue.

Since international control of atomic weapons seems at present a moral pipe-dream, we are faced with the prospect of increased production, on both sides of the Iron Curtain, of bigger and better methods of universal genocide. Now an H-bomb of 15 megatons power can easily destroy most of Metropolitan Toronto. But, of course, the Alsops soothe us, even though bombs ten times as powerful can be made, their destructive power is really only twice that of smaller models; most of the energy is dissipated upwards. Only one million people would die as a result, not 2,500,000! With this awesome destructive force in mind, we can only hope that the trigger-happy madmen will be too scared to press the crucial button.

The wait for a break in international tension may be long. Meanwhile, perhaps we should more fear the less spectacular, more subtle side-effects of the hydrogen-bomb tests. Slow physical disintegration seems horrible enough but at least there is hope that populations as a whole will be unaffected.

Quære, though, what are the social and psychological implications of an atomic armaments race? While we madly produce bombs—and monsters as fast as we can dig pitche-blende from the ground, what happens to a democratic society? How long can we stock-pile the bombs in secret hideouts, waiting for the hideous explosion, before the strain of waiting cracks the will to be free?

A nation under political strain will submit to increased authority. How long will it be before the political strain fuses with the social to demand a strong man to find a way out? A blustering McCarthy may receive a wrist-tap of censure, but a demagogue more subtle may follow. In contrast, Dr. Oppenheimer, disturbed by his nation's concentration on survival rather than its tradition of concern for human values, is publicly damned a "security risk". The bomb has claimed its first American victim.

On the psychological level, what will be the effects on the individual personality — the citizen's morality, his ambitions, his attitudes? Society is a huge complex in which no event anywhere is entirely without effect throughout the entire structure. Subtly, almost imperceptibly the long wait will leave its mark on the personalities of entire nations.

It is consistent with the gland-handing philosophy of national merchandising that in this field the psychological effect of the "atom-charged" cold war has first been examined. The examination was cursory, granted, but, to this writer at least, significant. Walter E. Hoadley, Jr., economist with the Armstrong Cork Co., told a recent meeting of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce that the hydrogen bomb could contribute to economic growth by "increasing the tendency of many individuals to adopt a shorter term outlook on life." Mr. Hoadley continued, "Consumers will now proceed to increase their living standards substantially over the years ahead, worrying more about increasing their comfort than securing their futures."

Thanks, Mr. Hoadley, we'll eat, drink, and be merry—for tomorrow we'll be slaves, monsters — or dead.—S.A.S.

University of Toronto.

Dear Bill:

On behalf of the Engineering Society I wish to apologize to the students of the University for the disturbance caused by our Freshmen on Thursday afternoon.

We deeply regret the adverse publicity directed towards the University as a result of this situation and we will do everything in our power to rectify this matter.

Yours sincerely,

CREST THEATRE

The Man Who Came

After the somewhat dangerous move of opening the season with a native-born Canadian production, the Davis brothers have come up with a play boasting universal appeal. Now on the stage at the Crest is Kaufman and Hart's THE MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER. Everyone may not have seen this play, nor even the following motion picture, but virtually everyone feels that little thrill of familiarity on hearing the title. Murray and Donald Davis should stand, therefore, to make a nice return on this production.

The play stands or falls on the performance of The Man himself, and in this role Max Helpmann gives us a spotty, but generally satisfactory piece of acting. The Man is an irascible monster and a celebrity to boot — a world-famous radio personality in fact. Thus far the role is obvious, but The Man is also required to show a well-hidden decency beneath his self-centred exterior. Here Helpmann is largely successful. His monstrosity is tempered with an immensely pleasing laugh which he delivers throughout in a manner certain to reassure all the members of the happy-ending school. His slight tendency towards marble-mouthedness is an occasional irritant to the spectator who does not feel that he should have to listen to lines in a comedy as he would to those of an undergraduate production in French. This lapse from clarity may, however, be excused on the basis of the very large and very assertive beard which is the stock in trade of every man who comes to dinner.

The plot, if it bears recapitulation, concerns the selfish and completely disruptive machinations of a celebrity confined over the Christmas season to the house of a small-town Ohio manufacturer by virtue of a broken hip. The Man throws the household into a state of frantic chaos and manages, by long-distance telephone to do the same to the narrow world of international personalities.

It is here that signs of age can be detected. Hence, the play must be rewritten to a large extent every few years. Christine Jorgenson and Liberace appear on the list here, thus demonstrating that someone has overhauled the script quite recently.

Although the success of this play depends to a large extent upon the title role, it nevertheless requires a great deal of its supporting characters — here some twenty-odd in number. As might be expected in a young group presenting a cast of this size, the performances run the gamut from Excellent to Lousy.

Barbara Chilcott as the great man's secretary and general factotum gives a performance which rates the Excellent. She carries herself well through the few serious moments in the farce — a none-too-easy task — and provides an excellent and spirited foil for the great man's wit.

Betty Leighton, as the Kansas City bred theatre queen — affectionately known as 'hot pants' — slips easily and with immense comic effect from the darling of two continents to the broad from K.C. in one of the high spots of the show. Peter Mews appears in a brief but strenuous role as a Red Skelton with a shocking case of palsy. He gyrates upstage, downstage and in every other conceivable direction with a somewhat overpowering effect. He tends, perhaps to fill the stage with his swoopings to the detriment of the progress of the production. Mr. Mews does a more satisfactory job in his earlier walk-on role as the Einsteinian professor delivering a colony of cockroaches. George McGowan as the local newspaperman and playwright and one-half of the romantic interest falls considerably short of the mark and is, in fact, an almost constant source of irritation.

A constant stream of bit-players, entering and exiting, add much to the good humour of the piece. Amelia Hall as the nutty sister of the manufacturer and the pivot point of the denouement adds a great deal in her flitting and bizarre appearances. Miss Hall seems equally capable in the ingenue role and this present one of the thirty-year-faded flapper. Another entertaining bit of support is provided by David Gardner as the attending physician with literary aspirations. Norma Renault as The Man's constant butt flutters overmuch throughout the play, but comes through all right in the end; she was treated to an ovation on her exit by the otherwise remarkably dead Wednesday Night bargain rate audience of which this play-goer was a conscientious part.

Familiarity is the note in this play. The large cast does not become confusing because it is composed, with virtually no exceptions, of familiar caricatures. The important lines are universally of that heavy-handed sarcasm which passes for wit in all corners of contemporary North America. The action, with minor variations, is satisfactorily similar to that of all the works of the Charlie's Aunt school. Only one problem remains for the reviewer — that of the chicken and the egg. Being of callow years, I cannot determine whether the familiar characters and dialogue created the play, or whether the play created the now-familiar character and dialogue.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Not So Magnificent

Magnificent Obsession, at the Odeon Toronto, left me with the depressing feeling that despite the bitterness of the pill inside, this film's sugar coating was pretty nice, in the cloying manner of sugar coatings in general. This was a depressing feeling because, as a critic, I am supposed to view with only the highest standards in mind, and if, in the case of this version of Lloyd C. Douglas' best-seller, I didn't, this was because I have absolutely no sympathy with the ideals of Mr. Douglas as exemplified in the film. So I settled down to enjoy a good womanly weep with a certain personal satisfaction, though my inner spirit revolted. Speaking in strictly film terms, Magnificent Obsession is quite a passable movie. The set design is admirable, at times even imaginative, since each set seems to express in some way the character of the action which takes place within it, a thing which film sets do not customarily do. The locations are chosen well, the technicolored visuals are as slickly creative as a fashion photograph, and the camera work, though a little static, suffices.

The aforementioned womanly weep was occasioned by the travails of the character in the film, which are pretty awful, all things considered. For example, Rock Hudson is a playboy who inadvertently causes the death of a revered community doctor by occupying his inhalator after a needless accident when the doctor needs it during one of his periodic attacks. At a subsequent stage in his career, Hudson (also inadvertently) blinds the doctor's widow and hurts her feelings by trying to make a date with her. He thereupon adopts a deep disguise, showers her with riches of whose source she is, of course, unaware, and pays for a consultation with the usual Swiss neurosurgeons in an effort to make her see again, and to vindicate his early selfish actions. When the consultation fails, he wants to marry her, but such is her delight at this turn of events that she runs away with a faithful nurse (so help me!) and the avowed intention of never coming near him again. He immerses his sorrows in work, becomes a great physician, and, when he discovers her dying in an obscure hospital in New Mexico, operates on her brain, saves her eyes, restores her to life, and generally makes recompense for any inconvenience he may previously have caused her. Oh, well. By the way, a quick browse through Lloyd C. Douglas' book last night convinced me that this plot bears little if any resemblance to the original.

But, as I remarked at the beginning, the thesis which Mr. Douglas concocts to explain all this tomfoolery, and which is postulated in entirely non-religious terms, despite its inherent import, is in my opinion, rather thin intellectually. Proceedings on such a tragic level are really justified only when a sufficiently important idea informs them, and believe me, these are not the ideas.

Easy As Lying

The most appropriate way, I suppose, to discuss Wolfgang Grunsky's presentation of an illustrated address on music for the recorder consort, and on the instruments themselves, would be to offer some paraphrases of his own remarks. This address, which was given in the Royal Conservatory of Music Concert Hall, took place on Wednesday evening.

It was aimed largely at familiarizing those of his audience who were not acquainted with the recorders, and the facility with which any moderately musical person may acquire a technique, if he practices steadily, within a few months.

Mr. Grunsky spoke of the movement towards the enjoyment and understanding of the music of the "pre-classical" era — dating from before 1750. He showed how recorder-playing is the most effective way in which this movement can spread, because they hold such inestimable advantages for the unskilled music lover.

They are of all instruments the easiest to play, the cheapest, and require the minimum of musical knowledge.

Apart from the original music of the 16th and 17th centuries, much music of that time has been arranged for the recorder and composers of our own time are writing music expressly for these instruments. Paul Hindemith, for instance, has written a recorder quartet.

The music that Mr. Grunsky chose to illustrate his talk was mainly drawn from the English, German, French and Italian schools of the 17th century. About the music and its performance little need be said, as the address was of the first importance rather than the recital. Mr. Grunsky emphasized the fact that several of the players had only comparatively recently come to play on the recorders.

The performance, however, did show how his taste and discretion had gone to weld a group of relatively inexperienced players into a sincere and musical little band.

"Tis as easy as lying: govern these ventages with your finger and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music."

AISLE SEAT

Dial M For Murder

It is always more difficult to review a play which is frankly entertainment and eschews all pretensions to the name of drama or of art. If the situations are well-constructed and the actors convincing, the "purely entertainment" play affords a pleasant evening for people who like that sort of thing and there the matter ends. It is difficult to discover the future of Canadian theatre in the presentation of a farce or to construct a code of dramatic aesthetics based on a melodrama.

The only problem which leapt to mind after seeing "Dial M for Murder" last night was the vexed question of the live stage versus the movies. The lady on my right was afraid that Hollywood thrillers are so real and spine-chilling that our imaginations, which must perforce exert themselves on the behalf of the prosaic stage, have become dulled from lack of use. Can live theatre, she said, be as really frightening as the movies? Presumably it can if the actors and the playwright are successful in combining to create an atmosphere of suspense which never falters or suffers interruption. Anything can and will jar the rapt attention of an audience: a slight inconsistency in the text, a weak performance, the omission of some slight detail. Obviously, if one wishes to convince an audience that it is in the same room as a murder, one must see to it that nothing about that room is contrary to the audience's experience of rooms per se.

There were several strikes against the play to start with: the clue whose importance was never explained; occasional slips in lighting and noises off; and probably most serious, Bruce Jewell's performance as Max, of which one would say that he was continually slipping out of character, if he had ever established what his character was. The most exciting moments in last night's play, as I think, in most thrillers, occurred when the stage was blacked-out and became indistinguishable from the auditorium.

"Dial M for Murder" is a fairly good thriller, if one likes thrillers, and is being given a largely satisfactory performance at the Royal Alexandra. I especially liked Denis Green as Inspector Hubbard; he created a man who was obviously the type and essence of all good British policemen without sacrificing any individuality and without wasting a line of his not very rich part. Christianne Felsmann as the much-persecuted Margot Wendice was decorative and perfectly convincing; she did as much with her part, I think, as anyone could. Donald Woods, as her husband, was a more doubtful quantity. The characterization that he built up was so strong that it blotted out the man behind it. It was the sort of portrayal of which one says, "That sort of man would do that sort of thing", forgetting that no one is any one "sort". To be a human being one must of necessity embody many contradictions, compensations for one's vices and drawbacks to one's virtues. In real life, no one but a madman could have first married and then murdered for money with the childlike assurance which Tony Wendice brought to his activities — and Mr. Woods gave no indication that he was portraying a madman. If a little more thought and imagination had been bestowed on that part it would have been more true to life. Whereupon, of course, comes the consideration that real life is not wanted on the stage, but in the mind of the audience, and that the balance between a real man and a type must be very carefully struck.

BLUES TEST IMPERIALS SATURDAY

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

The first game of organized sport ever seen by a famous French general, was a soccer match played in London, England's mammoth Wembley Stadium. Said the unimpressed soldier, "This is a lot of foolish nonsense—100,000 people watching eleven men. Real sport is eleven men watching 100,000 people." Perhaps the underlying purpose of inter-faculty sport is best expressed in those words.

Participation is the key to all forms of intramural athletic activity; team, tournament, or individual. Participation by every undergraduate of the University makes Toronto's system one of the finest on the North American continent.

Under these circumstances, it is fortunate that the Intramural Sports Committee, whose function it is to oversee Interfaculty activity, is composed of men who are able to appreciate this purpose.

The first ruling handed down by this committee was with reference to an amendment made possible through the work of last year's committee. The rule change involves the eligibility of Senior Intercollegiate letter-men for inter-faculty play in the sport in which they won their letter. The rule previously prevented all such athletes from any inter-faculty participation, however the new outlook allows for their playing after a one-year lay-off. To clarify this point, it was brought out at the committee's inaugural meeting yesterday afternoon that the term "Senior Intercollegiate" refers to all Universities, those in the United States, and those other than McGill, Western, Queens', and Varsity too.

In addition to this, both Meds and S.P.S. made application for permission to enter a Senior and Junior team in Mulock Cup competition. This is all very well, but the rule calls for the senior team to be from the third and fourth years of the course, and the junior from the first and second. Low turnout from the upper years makes these faculties' teams weak, and their request was for permission to choose their teams on the basis of ability. Since not being able to do this would in effect cause both schools to enter only one team each, the committee wisely decided they were furthering the purpose of Interfaculty sport by granting Meds' and Skule's request.

Thus the Intramural Sports Committee fulfills its duties from the very first as Interfaculty "watchdogs". We expect that they will be every bit as efficient as their predecessors in ruling Interfaculty sport.

From the Blue Room . . . The Varsity rugby team goes into action to-morrow afternoon on the back campus against the Nomads . . . Our own uncle-Benny has turned his one good eye on the future and comes up with the following for to-morrow afternoon, unconditionally unguaranteed by the sports staff of the Varsity . . . Queens'-20, Balmy Beach-11. . . . Kitchener-Waterloo-17, Western-8 . . . MacMaster-16, McGill-5 . . . Varsity-15, Sarnia-11. We agree, Benny.

Intramural Tennis Opening 81 Netmen Now Entered

Tennis has been in full swing at Varsity since the men of the court began placing entries at the Intramural Office last week.

Trophies up for competition are the Victoria Tennis Club Trophy which is awarded to the college or faculty whose top four men have gained the greatest number of points, one point being given for each game won. The F. Y. McEachren trophy will be awarded to the singles winner.

Gerhardt Muhl, who captured this event last year will not be back to defend the title.

Wednesday's matches were postponed a day due to weather but the draw is going on as scheduled. Results of the Open University Tournament are used as a basis for the selection of players for the Senior and Intermediate teams.

This year the Senior championship tourney is being operated daily at the Toronto Lawn and Tennis Club, but the Junior tournament has been dropped. Sixty-two men have entered the singles and 19 doubles teams will be participating.

There were no upsets on the first day's play. Robin Logie, seeded No. 6, easily defeated J.

Orde of S.P.S. 6 love, 6 love.

Harry Hall of Meds., seeded No. 3, has been forced to withdraw from the early part of the tourney because of a football injury to his right hand. J. E. McCutcheon, in charge of intramural tennis, said that the cast will be off in time for Hall to challenge in for a place on the Intermediate team.

Vic's Ken Lawton who was unable to participate last year for the championship trophy is back again this season. He is seeded No. 1 and has been given a try into the second round this year as was men's Arnold Robin, seeded No. 2.

Conclave John

There will be an exceedingly important meeting of all members of the Varsity Sports staff at 1.15 to-day in the Varsity office.

It is imperative that all those who signed up to work on the Sports staff this year are present, as make-up organization, assignments, and sports coverage will be settled. Will the photographers who spoke to either of the editors please put themselves in attendance also.

Masterson Shuffles Backfield Line Weakened With Injuries

Struggling bravely under a heavy load of injuries, Varsity's Blues travel to Sarnia for a game with the powerful Sarnia Imperials tomorrow. These are the same Imperials who, last Saturday, crushed John Metras' Western Mustangs and with them his latest brain-storm, the "Diamond T" formation of the doubled quarterback. Tomorrow the Blues, weak along the line, go in their first test against really good opposition.

Bob Masterson seems, at this time to have the most effective team in the Intercollegiate league, but his injury troubles are draining much of its strength. For to-morrow's match the Blues must go without John Sopinka who will be out for some three weeks more, but Steve Oneschuk is back for tomorrow and after watching Steve go in last night's practice he'll make a big difference in an already mighty half-line. Subbing for Steve will be Al Riva, the stubby speedster who was such a bother to the Beach tacklers last Saturday. Returning to the half line-up is Dave Cresswell, out since the inter-squad game, and a good ball-carrier.

Wally Bulchak has been switched to half, and Jack Rogers over to wingback, leaving the Blues with only three full-backs, Muntz, Cheeseman and Kimoff. In practice this week Cheeseman met in a slight collision with quarter Stevenson, both needing stitches to close slight cuts around their eyes after it. But they're right back in play without so much as a puff about the eyes. Hardy fellows these Blues.

Out for the season is guard Don Johnson, his left wrist in a cast. Other injuries, one to Norm Levine's shoulder, another to Al Watt's back, cut the numbers at tackle making it a big job for Bill Beamish and Alex Macklin. Frank Palermo made a brief return to practice this week but took another bad turn on his knee and is out again for awhile.

Bethune

Above is a training-camp shot of Varsity's agile new halfback, Rich Bethune, whose profile appears below. Bethune is expected to continue his ground-gaining ways to-morrow afternoon when the Blues travel to Sarnia to play the Imperials. For the next week and during the regular season, the Varsity will be publishing profiles daily of all the Blue players.

New Blue Halfback Yank Grid Veteran

A talented, twenty-three year old husky half-back, who rejects offers from Canadian professional football clubs must have plans for the far-distant future. Such is Richie Bethune who passed up offers of Frank Clair and Carl Voyles in order to enter the first medical year at Varsity. And, since he is going directly into an advanced year he is eligible for senior intercollegiate ball.

A product of Hamilton Westdale Collegiate, Rich has been playing for the last ten years, and for the past four seasons has been the individual standout at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass. Last season he scored five of his team's fifteen touchdowns, two on ninety yard runs. He was also the team's regular kicker. At Varsity he will not only kick and run, but also will serve as a defensive half.

As further indication of his versatility is the interesting fact that Rich played three years of college hockey and was the leading scorer of his team. He also has played lacrosse, basketball, and has participated on his college track team. These activities occurred at Williams College where he was a scholarship student receiving honours every year. Rich would like to play more at Varsity, but unfortunately, because of the medical course's heavy grind, will confine his activity to football.

During his stay in the States Rich played half off the split-T, and is just now becoming accustomed to the straight-T with all of its variations of double and single flankers of the sort that Bob Masterson uses. When he is asked to compare the American-

Canadian brands of play Richie is strictly pro-Canadian. He feels that Canadian ball with its restrictions on down-field blocking "brings out the individual merits of each ball player." He has, however, a strong conviction that unlimited down-field blocking will soon infiltrate Canadian ball, and, at the same time, hopes it does not.

Rich is a team man, too, who states vigorously that the Varsity squad's ability and calibre of play has not been surpassed by any other team he has played for. He is fast, agile, and rugged. Add these to his determination to win, and you will find a powerful asset to the Varsity club.

Vic Rebuilds Strength As Team Trials Open

Spirit and determination will play a large role in the rebuilding of this year's Vic football squad. Out of last year's regulars only three have returned. They are: Fraser Kelly at tackle, Norm Albion at centre, and Ian MacPherson at end. Twenty-five inexperienced men are closely competing for the other positions.

Gone is half-back Norm Williams, whose accurate passing and swift-footedness sparked the Vics to their major victories last year. In spite of Vic's loss to St. Mike's in last year's semi-final game, Norm proved himself to be one of the offensive standouts in the intramural league.

This year, however, Norm intends to concentrate on track and field. Norm is considered one of the best hurdlers in Canada, and holds a Dominion junior record for the 120-yd. event. It is said that his trip to the B. E. games influenced his decision.

Similarly, Vic will be weakened by the loss of guard Don Johnson to the Blues, and quarterback Pete Potter who will probably stick to basketball.

Consequently, Vic will be depending mainly on the talents of North Toronto's Bill Williams (Norm's brother) at half and Jules Benson, a former guard of the Intermediates. Quarterback duties will be undertaken by Lawrence Park's Pete Alexander. Vic is not promising anything, but didn't last year when they reached the semi-finals.

Quality Squad For Woodsmen

Caovorting around the back campus these dark nights are a group of men and women who number fifteen strong. These are the die-hards of the green and white football team, Forestry. The theme of the woodsmen this year, at last, is quality, not quantity.

Fred Gray, a fellow staffer on the Varsity, puts it modestly. A veteran on the team, Gray points out, "We have nothing, no line, a big zero". But we know Fred's jesting, and things are beginning to brighten for the Foresters. Bill Kosky, former Queen's player, arrived to take over the coaching duties on Wednesday night.

Last year's semi-finalists might try using a "split-T" formation this year with quarterback Bob Armstrong a possibility at the helm. Jim Waddell and Jim Andrews are two stalwarts at the end positions. Among the ten gridders back from last year's squad are "Big" Bob Berger at guard and Ed Marcus at fullback. Kosky has the boys running through plays in preparation for the season which is just around the corner.

Many Freshmen To Compete In Outdoor Track Season

Next week will mark the beginning of the outdoor track season, with the first meet taking place on Thursday afternoon. Known by the new name of "The Interfaculty Championships", this meet is open to all athletes who have not competed for one of the Intercollegiate Track teams.

Since many of those competing will be freshmen, the outcome is something of a mystery, however some of the candidates have been outstanding in practice. One of the most promising is Bill Gelling who hails from British Columbia, where he used to run for Bruce Humber's Victoria Y.M.C.A. team. Bill is joined in the middle distance field by three well known Toronto secondary school runners, Bruce Hughes, Paul Scofield and Gord Heuston.

The discus event will be made interesting by the presence of Rich Cairns and Eric Ramselle, both of whom are working with the Intermediate Football team.

Coach Hal Brown has stated that there is still room for more contestants in the daily practice sessions at Varsity Stadium. If possible come out and compete, at least don't miss seeing this meet, Thursday, October 4th at Varsity Stadium.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

This writes a finish to the annual pre-season warm-up. At last we're ready to "play ball".

Opening day for the softball season is Monday. And although the squads have had little chance to practice, teams are forming and getting in shape for the big season ahead. We suggest you drop over to Trinity field or the Stadium sometime next week to see how things go.

Tennis has been in operation all week with elimination trials for the intercollegiate team. Match times are posted in all colleges and faculties.

Another "coming-up" for the next week is the beginning of swim practices for the interfaculty meet. Lists have been posted in the colleges and anyone who wishes is invited to come out to the U.T.S. pool, Monday at 5.30.

Archery practices began this week and are being held at the Stadium every afternoon from 12 noon until 2 p.m.

Now comes a more serious note in the form of a very sad tale. Last year, a rather unknown little lass played concerning the part taken by Mr. Woody Friedlander, Engineering Society Publicity Director in the Engineer's conducted tour a week ago yesterday.

Skule Rampage

Rossall spoke of the letter as "inflammatory" and prejudicial to the investigation and anything arising out of it.

He referred to an Ontario Supreme Court case earlier in the year in which a publication had been found "in contempt" for sensationalizing the facts before the trial.

Said Rossall: "It was an unfortunate affair (referring to the Engineering riot) and we are ashamed of what happened; it was a disgrace. We admit it."

"But I still consider it poor publicity. After all, in a court of law this kind of publicity would be considered contempt of court and this is going to court — the caput is the court of law in this university."

Rossall ended his remarks by saying: "We thought the publicity was slanderous — near slanderous — it was libelous, or at least near-libelous."

Editor Batten stated that, "We would have been remiss in our duty if we had not printed the letter." He said the failure of the letter to appear signed, was a typographical error.

Dentistry School representative Joe Slogan spoke of the "humility" with which Mr. Rossall had come before the SAC and he wondered about a reported scuffle between the University and the Toronto Star over photographs.

"The first question which comes to my mind," Mr. Slogan said, "is about the photographs which got into the downtown papers . . . if the Star went and pilfered the photos, they should be held responsible," he said.

Publications Committee Chairman Scott explained that "a downtown daily" had been given certain photographs by a student free-lance photographer and that The Star felt itself entitled to the same photos.

Scott went on to state that he felt the University was a public organization and should show no bias in turning pictures of events within the University over to the Telegram, Star, and Globe and Mail.

After considerable discussion over the whole Engineering riot meter, Michael Shoemaker, Trinity College representative, moved that "the SAC publicly go on record as appreciating the position of the Engineering Society Executive and the fact that they have presented their case so humbly".

The motion carried unanimously.

Said Victoria College representative Don Stephenson: "I hope there's a definite stand from the Engineering Society President Rossall promised the full investigation would be reported "by the end of the week".

fice to a skilled craftsman."

John Webber, second speaker for the government, criticized High Schools for their failure to foster and develop creative thought, to hold the interest of the student, and to give less prominence to the place of physical training. "A major purpose of the High School, since it can't educate, is to produce good citizens. Do we see anything of this idealistic plan? Definitely not!" he said.

Peter Russell, leader of the opposition, said that if the High School system is a failure, we who are its products are also failures. Its standards are higher than any other High School system on the continent, and while there are faults, they are not such that the system should be branded a failure. Ethics and religion, said Russell, cannot be taught in the school like mathematics.

Settlement House

Architect's Project

A great inspiration has come to the School of Architecture on this campus and is expected to give the lead to all other faculties in the business of Freshman Initiation. Al Bernholtz, Second Year President, in charge of Freshman reception at the School, announced to-day that there would be no conventional hazing of or, as has happened, by the Freshman. Instead of worthless nonsense for the new men, the Architectural Society has planned a project of a full two days work on the repair, repainting and redecoration of the University Settlement House — on Grange Avenue.

Bernholtz gave three reasons for this new approach. Describing it as a "move to offset the bad publicity given the Engineers . . . as a good work—a constructive initiation . . . and as a practical application of Architectural training", he attributed the idea to second year student Jean Nichol, who first thought of it while up at the Dorset Sketch Camp last week. Those in charge of the Initiation immediately took it up and plans were laid before the Architects returned to the city.

The Settlement House is 125 years old and well-worn, sagging more than comfortably at the foundations.

Plaster is falling from the walls and ceilings in a constant rain of knock-out gobs; doors hang carelessly in their frames, never quite closed, and walls are covered with murals of soot and cracking plaster. The Architects intend to fix as much as they can and to replace the plain walls with humorous murals and caricatures to make the place more pleasant for the children using it.

The project will take two full days of work and will be carried out this coming Thursday and Friday, timed so as not to interfere with the students' classes.

Emphasizing that this was not an exclusive enterprise, Bernholtz said that all faculties and individuals interested in working in it were most welcome to sign on. This raises the possibility of it becoming a student project for the whole campus, and The Varsity feels that it might be worth the time and work.

Sarnia 29, Blues 18

At Sarnia game Saturday fans saw some thrilling action at the forty yard line. Sarnia's Eric McKeever here evades being tackled by the Blues. Number 90 for the Blues, Walt Bulchak cuts in, for a fast flying tackle as Jack Strapt (42) races up to assist on a tight play in the fourth quarter of the Sarnia-Varsity fiasco.

Life Magazine Will Feature Blues' Weekend

Kingston — (CUP) — When Toronto Varsity visits Queens University on the weekend of Oct. 16 it will be known throughout the world. Life Magazine wants to report the party at the Queens-Varsity game.

Life is looking forward to the pep rally the night before the game, to the snake dance after the rally, and a medical formal to be held in the gymnasium celebrating the Faculty's centenary.

The Life reporters and cameramen will probably arrive at the same time as the Varsity students on Friday, Oct. 15, to begin work on the Canadian university weekend which the Queens Journal calls the best of them all.

Freshmen and Fresh Fruit Bury Old Victoria Strand

An ominous cumulous cloud rolled north above University Avenue towards Victoria College. A bold engineer sat perched half hidden on the top of the Park Plaza. A fire smouldered ominously near a greased pole on the Vic football field, still trying to cremate the remains of last year's fight. Both nature and the engineers were in harmony with man. This pathetic fallacy ushered in another Bob Apple battle.

What is the Bob Apple Fight? Oh! my best beloved, in the high and far off times when Victoria College was quite young, there was a young janitor of most amiable nature. He felt that as a part of initiation each year the sophomores should entertain the Freshmen. Among other things he had the bewildered Frosh bob for apples; thus the eighty-two year old event got its name.

Since that time however, the nature of this event has been changed radically. Now the idea is for the Freshmen to bob up to the top of a greased pole to win their apple. The hospitality of the Second Year men has remained unchanged, as they provide the First Year with ample supplies of fresh fruits and vegetables. But some of the Sophs felt that their hospitality had been imposed upon when the Freshmen broke all tradition by walking off with the symbolic Apple, a Vic beanie.

The main features of the battle have been adequately described elsewhere in this paper. It is worthy of note, however, that the Frosh showed presumptuous self-confidence; one member of their group even went so far as to wear his best grey flannels; and, after the battle, their leader Dick Verity expressed the hope that there would be "more competition next year". It is also worthy of note that after a full twenty minutes of huffing, puffing and roughing, wheezing, seizing and easing, throwing, crowing and having time out, the pole was vibrating no faster than the arm of a metronome marking time for Handel's Largo.

Bonfire With Serenade Men Residents Antics For Co-Ed Amusement

The University of Toronto Campus, recently the scene of much excitement, had another streak of the back-to-school fever last week when a group of University College male residents decided to liven things up a bit. Beginning at a party in Wycliffe College to build up their spirits, the U.C. men then proceeded on a tour of the campus at large.

Bountifully supported, they arrived at Victoria College and there their attention turned to women. Seizing on one pretty young co-ed, Elinor 'X' of — House they abducted the struggling girl, bearing her back with them to their home grounds.

On the way, spirits bubbling over, the warriors broke into a lively Virginia Reel along Hosking Avenue heading towards Whitney Hall. The co-ed, set atop several U.C. residents' shoulders, had a rather shaky time of it all.

There the rampaging residents constructed a bonfire of old newspapers and bottle tops, source unidentified, to cast some light on their activities. With the fire blazing to give a romantic setting, the males were inspired to serenade the co-ed-filled windows of Whitney Hall. Except for a few unknowing young freshies in Falconer House who shouted back at the boys to go away and pelted them with old newspapers, the residence girls kept silent and safe from the boys outside and the officials within. Nothing fazed, the boys just added the newspapers to the bonfire and continued their musicale.

Dean Ferguson of the U.C. Women, asked for comments, held that it was a very small thing. She said "I saw that they were being very careful and that they didn't go away until the fire was out." Miss Ferguson saw no likelihood of official action being taken. The co-eds, already bothered by a hot and stuffy night, saw little entertainment in the males' antics.

CCF Club Class Lacks Freshmen

A total absence of registering freshmen was reported last week in the lecture series titled "Socialism la". This "course" is sponsored by the University CCF Club.

Shortage of room space on the campus has forced the Club to commute between Victoria College and UC, for this year's lectures. This Thursday Sam Clasky, will lead a discussion of the proposals of the CCF for economic planning in Ontario in Room 14 of Vic at one p.m.

Welcome Women As Arbor Opens

Left, The First Lady of the University, the wife of Chancellor Samuel Beatty, receives the first of many cups of coffee to be poured in the newly-opened Arbor Room, the co-educational tuck shop of Hart House.

To the right, gallant Al Gordon presents the charming Mance Carbery with a rose in honour of the occasion, reminding us the shining armour has not lost its last gleams yet.

The new tuck shop is expected to prove a popular institution, since it is the only shop of its kind with a distinctly "universal" character. Moreover, it is the only readily-accessible coffee shop in the center of the University campus that provides night service.

The mural by Hugh Niblock, according to some reports, is likely to provide some comment, since certain university types find themselves too readily identifiable. Also prominent among the Arbor's features is the "Picture of the Week", which is equally likely to provide comment to go with the coffee.

Public Blamed For Armament Stockpile But Politicians, Scientists Are Absolved

On Saturday evening in the Royal Ontario Museum Theatre the Society of Friends had its monthly open meeting with the guest speaker being Kathleen Lonsdale. The Society, an international group which has concerned itself for many years with the problems of maintaining world peace, chose a speaker who has been known as a champion for world peace all her life.

Mrs. Lonsdale is a research worker at the Royal Institution in London, England, and has become a famous lecturer and public speaker. She is head of the Department of Crystallography at University College, London, was one of the first women elected Fellow of the Royal Society, and was one of the party of seven Quakers to visit Russia in 1951.

She is now en route home from a visit to Australasia and Japan, where she spoke on Christianity and World Peace.

She strongly condemned in her talk governments which pay large amounts of money for the procuring of armament stockpiles. She absolved scientists, military men, and politicians from all blame, but she accused the public of being guilty, for it gives the mandates which authorize these expenditures.

"How much better the money would be invested if used to help develop backward areas, ease the world's food problems, raise health standards, or try to solve minority problems," she said.

Mrs. Lonsdale questioned whether God wished us to follow principles such as peace through armed strength, preserving truth through lies, or preserving justice through the use of weapons which make no distinction between the guilty and the innocent. She spoke of our present double morality: our good behavior as individuals versus our horrible action when we act together as nations.

She stressed that "we must work in the ways of God. We must speak up for our ideas, and then difficult problems will become easier to solve. Each individual has a responsibility to see that he is morally honest with both his associates and also with himself."

"like a sonnet"

Chess Chat

By JACK KAGETSU

"Blessed be the memory of him who gave the world this immortal game. For the price of a taxi-cab ride or a visit to the cinema you may possess a world of illimitable adventures. It is the very water of Lethe for sorrow or disappointment, for there is no oblivion more profound than that for which it offers you solace. And what satisfaction is comparable with a well-won mate? It is different from the joy any other games may offer. A perfect mate irradiates the mind with the calm of indisputable things. It has the absoluteness of mathematics and gives you the victory ennobled by the sense of intellectual struggle and stern justice."

"There are mates that linger in the memory like a sonnet of Keats." (A. E. Gardiner, In Praise of Chess.)

Chess was not the glorious and grand concept of a single mind. The diversity of move is too ingeniously contrived; the game maintains its tempo too smoothly, the varied moves mesh into each other beautifully. To quote William Fiske: "It seems to me that chess grew as music grew, as poetry grew. I believe that it sprang from rude beginnings and gradually added one beauty after another until it ripened into chaturanga."

Modern chess is the logical and lineal descendant of a game called chaturanga, played in India in the sixth century. The game spread to Iran as a result of commercial and cultural intercourse between India and Persia. The Arabs invaded Iran in A.D. 641 and soon took over the game.

In the eleventh century chess entered Europe from the Moslem world by way of Spain, Italy and the Balkans. By the end of the century France, Britain and Germany had been introduced to the game.

Chess as played in Europe in 1200 was indistinguishable from the Arab game. During the next 400 years many changes were initiated and concluded till the 1600 chess had crystallized into its present form.

By the middle of the nineteenth century chess centres had appeared in every large city on the continent, and in England and the United States.

In modern times chess may be considered an integral part of our culture. However, there is a curious bar to the spread of the greatest game in the world, its alleged difficulty. It is indeed beyond the powers of any mortal to master it completely. But this very complexity is the source of its fascination.

Some people think that one has to be a mental giant to learn chess. The truth is that anybody can learn to play in half an hour. That alone is sufficient to enable him to derive some pleasures from the game.

Two excellent books for beginners are: Chess the Easy Way, by Reuben Fine, and Invitation to Chess, by I. Chernev and K. Harkness.

The inexhaustibility of chess can be seen as follows. The numbers of possible ways of playing the first four moves only on each side is over 300 billion. If then anyone were to play without stopping at the rate of one set of four moves per minute, it would take him more than 600,000 years to go through them all.

The number of possible ways of playing the first ten moves on each side is over 16 x 10.

Kasner and Newman estimate the total number of variations in a game of chess to be 10 to the power of 10.

Luckily, only an infinitesimal proportion of all possible moves possess practical significance. The attempts to analyze the game systematically have never been wholly successful for in chess as in all activities of living beings, there is always some residue which eludes definition and analysis.

DOUBLE Your Reading Speed

Enjoy Your Reading More — Improve Your Study Habits

Many people feel that an increase in reading speed will reduce your understanding of the material. This is far from true. While the Reading Institute can double and sometimes treble a person's reading speed, there would be little sense in doing so if there was a loss of comprehension.

Below are a few questions which are most frequently asked by students before beginning our training. You may have other questions you would like to ask.

Q. Is it true that a "slow reader is a good reader?"

A. NO. Studies at Ohio State University, Harvard, the University of Chicago, The Reading Institute, and other institutions have proved that with proper instruction comprehension increases as reading speed increases. To illustrate. Students who read at 300 words per minute with 70% comprehension have improved to 600 words per minute with 80% to 100% comprehension.

Q. How does comprehension grow with speed?

A. Improved reading speed embraces the reading of logical thought units and phrases rather than words, or piece-meal units of thought. For example, in assembling a jigsaw puzzle, it is more difficult to assemble many little pieces than a few large pieces. In reading, it is similarly easier to understand when you read in large phrase units.

Q. Why is individual instruction so important?

A. We have found that no two people have exactly the same reading habits; nor do they improve at the same rate. With individual instruction attention can be focussed on individual problems, thus assuring maximum improvement.

Q. Does improved reading speed reduce enjoyment of reading?

A. NO. During the first two or three sessions attention is focussed on the reading process rather than on the contents of the book. During this short transitional period there is some loss of both comprehension and enjoyment. After this initial stage both comprehension and enjoyment increase beyond their initial level.

Q. Are these new reading skills permanent?

A. YES, unless you give up reading entirely. Good reading mechanics and an ACTIVE approach to reading are skills which once acquired become stronger and effortless with use.

Q. Can technical reading also be done faster?

A. YES. If your current speed on average material is 250 words per minute, chances are your technical rate is 150 to 200 words per minute. By improving your average reading rate to 500 words per minute or more, your technical rate will double proportionately to 300 to 400 words per minute.

Q. What are the hours for training?

A. Since all instruction is individual you set your own hours. However, there is such a demand for evening instruction by business people that students who wish to take advantage of the student rate should plan to take their instruction between 9.00 A.M. to 4.30 P.M. If your time table makes this impossible we will try to make special arrangements for you.

Q. What is the cost of this training?

A. The student rate for the entire training is $65.00. If you were to take the training after graduation it would cost you 50% more. Should $65.00 be more than you care to pay at one time, you can arrange to pay the fee in instalments over a twelve week period so that you may begin now to enjoy the life long benefits of proper reading.

Q. What is the next step?

A. Telephone or come to the Institute and ask for Mr. Lee or Mr. Duff and arrange for the initial testing, or to have reading improvement training explained more fully to you at no obligation.

Big Tours Planned By Debate Union

The University of Toronto Debate Union is "stressing a considerable tour program" this year, said UTDU chairman Gordon Hurlburt, IV Engineering. Tentative plans also include an Inter-Faculty Debating Competition, a bigger Mock Parliament in December, a debating tournament to choose the debaters for the tours, and an Invitational Tournament for women debaters, he added.

UTDU is also co-operating with Hart House to invite a team from Harvard University or West Point to Toronto for a special Hart House debate, Hurlburt said.

Although the SAC budget cut is "a considerable shock", Hurlburt is trying to fit in as many tours as he can. The first date probably will be the December 10-11 Annual Cross-Examination at the University of Pittsburgh. There Toronto will have the chance to meet both Yale and Oxford. They will probably debate on the national topic: "Resolved that the United States should extend diplomatic recognition to the Communist government of China."

The Inter-Faculty Debating Competition will run from November to February. UTDU is dividing the colleges into groups by campus location and into teams of men and women who will hold Parliamentary debates to be judged on individual merit and group work. The month of February will see a tournament to find the best team.

Anyone interested is asked to leave their name in the SAC office.

Hurlburt described the Invitation Tournament for women debaters as "an attempt to knit Toronto University debating into the Inter-University Debating League." Miss Juliette Adams, St. Michael's College, women's representative to UTDU, is finding out what plans other mid-western colleges have for women debaters. If schedules fit, UTDU women may hold an Invitation Tournament.

Wobbling Woman Possibly Drugged Hunts Shoes by UC

A 24 year old woman, reportedly an inmate of Mercer Reformatory, caused quite a disturbance at the new UC residence on Friday night before police arrived to take her to the station.

Evicted from a taxi just north of the residence on St. George St., the woman found her way into the proposed dining hall in the north wing. The noise attracted the night watchman, William Hill who took her into his shack.

A crowd of UC residents had gathered by this time. They watched as the woman wobbled her way down by the dining-room, "hooting and cursing", as one said, "at the top of her lungs."

Several men managed to hold her down until a taxi came. She refused to get in and the taxi driver called the police, while Walt Petronishin, I UC, Jim Heal and Harry Zahouk, 60th II UC, tried to calm her.

The opinion of some of those who saw the woman was that she may have been drugged. She was wearing a skirt and blouse, and had lost her shoes. She was still without them when led away at one o'clock.

Sage Sophomore Has Advice To Help Innocent Freshmen

As a third year man on this campus, we feel it is our duty to warn the innocent freshmen of the perils that await them. It is a matter of observable fact that women are dangerous. One look at the number of glazed eyes around the university is convincing proof.

We propose, therefore, to outline a five-point program guaranteed to protect you freshmen from the tantalizing effect of big blue eyes, or the hem of a skirt.

First, arise at 6:00 a.m., take a cold shower, run around the block twice, and take a cold shower. This will soon reduce the virility rating (VR) of even the hardest souls. A light sprinkling of salt petre, the wonderful effects of which are well known, on the breakfast bacon won't hurt either.

Second, on your way to school, stand up and let everyone else sit down in the bus or streetcar. Particularly lovely young ladies. It is surprising how quickly hatred will arise in your heart this way.

As soon as you get off the bus, start counting the number of steps you take getting to each lecture. Try to take less steps each day. Keep a chart of your progress. Bring a stop-watch and calculate your average velocity (this can be done in the time you have saved getting to the lecture).

During lectures sit in a corner and look fixedly at the professor. Not only will this keep your mind on academic matters, but it will tend to shorten your lectures, and better your time getting to the next class. Arrange a scoring system, based on how early you arrive at each lecture.

If, by chance, you still wish to associate with the female species, then take out the most glamorous girl you know (if you know any). Take her to a dance and dance only the waltzes. Discuss the Change in the Conception of the Philosophy of Renaissance Art in the Light of Modern Theories of Symbolism to the exclusion of anything else.

If we notice a good response to this program on the campus, we will publish a short book in the near future enlarging on it.

St. Michael's Co-operative

St. Michael's Co-op is in newer and more spacious surroundings since the opening of Carr Hall. The co-op has had a varied and interesting career in its years of operation. The latest move puts it on a par with the Vic. Union and the Arbor Room. VSP by Ed Hoshkiw

St. Mike's Co-op. Bigger and Better Than Ever

Among the modern monstrosities of architecture that have recently raised their bricks upon the campus, is the St. Michael's College Centennial Building, known as Carr Hall. To the alumnae this meant a contribution; to the faculty, a little breathing space; and to the rest of the University, another controversy. But to most of St. Mike's, it meant that the College Co-operative affectionately known as the Coop, had come to roost.

The Coop was born in the spring of 1946, and found its cradle in the basement of House 49. Its inauguration filled the gap that exists ipso facto, in any college suffering from the lack of its own tuck shop. But to the students of St. Mike's, the Coop was more meaningful than a common pool of coffee and conversation; it was a unique campus enterprise, owned, operated and cherished by the students themselves — in one word, a co-operative.

The earliest Coopsters stumbled down wooden stairs to a collection of three rooms (the largest measuring twelve-by-twelve) and three tables (cast-offs of the college, impartially distributed one to a room). Life in the Coop was a dim, dank, and somewhat cramped affair in those days, but its enthusiastic founders relished it.

In time, House 49 succumbed to a well-earned though lamented demise, and the Coop moved into the basement of Teely Hall to pass its adolescence. The celebrated surroundings of its infancy passed into legend, and with it much of the romantic aura. It's difficult to stir the same emotions over cold cement walls and a stone floor that shrieked at the chairs and refused to look clean. But the same need for the Coop existed, and the same co-operative enterprise promoted its survival. Even within the walls of the dungeon haven and its attached Gloom Room, the coffee and conversation continued to flow.

Now the Coop has come of age. In its long-awaited place of prominence and polish, erected over the remains of House 49, it claims a large Common Room with rugs and leather lounges as well as the tuck shop tables. Foremost among the counter improvements is an automatic coffee-maker, producing a brew which is, if nothing else, consistent. The wages of the working class behind the counter have been raised from 40c to 65c an hour, and a new uniform provides the added attraction of an ankle-length apron, draped in the style of the hobble-skirt. According to its enterprising manager, Bill Daly, "the Coop aims to supply everything for the student interest", from Bromo-Seltzer to the economy size of Cheer.

Reaction to the new move has, of course, been favorable. For the first time the College can claim a Common room and student union adequate to its need. "It's gracious and charming," commented one young damsel. "Like a touch of home."

The question has been raised as to whether or not the Coop has lost its old flavour in the transition. "Lost?" queries one student, "the only thing we have lost is a fog of smoke from the waist up, a sea of butts from the knees down, and a collection of dirty football jerseys slopping coffee behind the counter. What we have gained is a Coop of which we can be proud."

And has it paid its price in atmosphere? "Absolutely not. Atmosphere is people — not places." In that sense at least, the spirit of House 49 survives.

The City of God

The incident of the week before last in which the members of the School of Practical Science were involved has initiated a violent reaction.

Every organization is going out of its way to avoid any suggestion that they are anything but "model" university students.

While in a measure this reaction is well-founded, it has an inherent danger. The danger arises when the university and its students become so concerned with what society thinks of their activities that they become incapable of vigorous action.

There is a tendency to consult too freely the opinions of the community with regard to university activities. This university appears to be attempting to prepare its graduates for adjustment to society.

This is mistakenly interpreted as "our duty to society". We are in fact doing it the greatest disservice.

There was a time, and we trust that it will come again, when the academic community was in the forefront of the march to the bounds of the wastes and "on to the City of God".

"Bread and Circuses"

One of the by-products of our society's determination to define "democracy" as the absolute equality of men, manifested itself on Friday last at the opening of the new Arbor Room.

We do not know who was responsible for arranging this "circus", but we do resent having the chief officers of this university lowered to the level of chorus girls and beauty queens.

To open the Arbor Room, the Chancellor and the President of the university in full academic regalia, were driven in a baby-blue convertible (complete with a chauffeur attired in gown and mortar board), preceded by the Blue and White band to the newly constructed entrance to the Arbor Room in Hart House. There they were met by the Warden of the House, also in academic dress.

The indignities reached a climax when this group of officials were photographed after the ceremony gathered around the juke box.

It is becoming increasingly evident that our society cannot tolerate the suggestion that there are people who should be accorded a degree of respect commensurate with their ability and their position in society.

A prostitution of the democratic ideal is producing a "Flatland" of grey formless shapes where the compulsive conformities of a mass democracy submerge all human individuality and dignity.

For God's sake let us rescue some vestige of nobility and aristocracy before we are all consumed in a Hades of indistinction.

There will be an important meeting of all Varsity Masthead members today at 5.00 p.m. in the Varsity offices in the basement of the SAC Building.

The Masthead members are meeting to plan more subversive measures for the overthrow of Sidney Smith, the Engineering Society, and the Constitution. Marilyn Monroe will also be discussed.

our readers write: Coeds, Coffee and Consternation

I see where the last vestige of the male university has finally gone co-educational.

Hart House has, over the past years, slowly been edged off its functional perch to which it was originally elevated, namely that of seeking to provide for 'all' the activities of the male undergraduate's life outside the lecture room, (a Homeric task, and one which the founders should have seen 'a priori', or at least, right off the bat, was a negation of Freud) by fraternities and the ever-increasing pulling power of the Coed.

Coeds as a species of femininity are quite unique. Suspended in a very select and privileged environment, they manage to contribute amazingly little during their three or four years at university, while emerging one of the best examples of an age whose most peculiar characteristics are insecurity, anxiety, and standardization.

Now I'm not at all anaesthetized to the esthetic delights to which a sweet young thing's trim ankle portends, as a matter of fact, the topic of beauty in women for me, borders on the religious! But a coed — well, that's going altogether too far!

Grossly Unfair

The Editor,
The Varsity.

This letter is being submitted along with the accompanying letter of Mr. J. O. Hart, Ist. Emmanuel, in order to clarify the position of Mr. B. I. Friedlander. It is our sincere belief that Mr. Friedlander did make this concluding statement:

"Your conduct reflects on the Faculty and at no time are you to destroy or damage any property."

Whereas the Executive now realize that the lighthearted manner in which Mr. Friedlander was speaking to the group previous to his concluding remarks did not help to impress the Freshmen with the seriousness of these concluding remarks, we are firmly convinced that Mr. Friedlander had no intention of giving any force to the type of violent demonstration that resulted.

To single out in the columns of The Varsity one person for responsibility concerning the Freshman demonstration while the whole matter is under investigation is grossly unfair. The Engineering Society has taken the responsibility for the incident and as such is endeavoring to clear the matter up.

W. G. Deeks.

With the cutting of a blue and white ribbon with a pair of golden shears, The Arbor Room, new co-educational coffee shop in the basement of Hart House, was officially opened by Chancellor Samuel Beatty at 3 p.m. last Friday.

President Sidney Smith, who addressed the crowd gathered for the opening, said that the room would provide "another binding link and unifying force to transcend college, school and faculty bounds. May it provide good fun in conversation, and good fun in discussion, to compare, though not entirely, with the work within the classroom." He concluded, "May it grow like a tree and like a university."

The Arbor Room's opening day was a busy one. The green and brown adorns the room from end to end for its share of favorable opinion the music from the organ. The mural wall, covered with Niblock, a former Varsity star, aroused a great deal of interest students, who appreciated the artist has heaped upon the artist his deft brush.

Milk shakes and hot dogs are the most popular items from a variety of food cold in the new in the Arbor Room are slightly charged in the old lunchroom replaced.

Now I truly believe that the campus activity should suppress the twinge of over his use of such.

Oh, and incidentally, I am interested in a refreshing change of himself outside of the campus of the big department companies about five o'clock. It's a revelation!

From the very first day that the coed begins her regular 'cursus honorum' of taking up bridge and smoking, she passes through the usual phases of 'rushing', football games, dances, falling in love, interspersed with the nasty ordeals of tests and exams. Her emotions are evaporative and ever the same: timidity, curiosity and wonder, rebelliousness, disillusionment, apathetic cynicism, and then release.

The high point of her university career usually occurs in the middle of her sophomore year when she loses her virginity and she discovers, with small triumph, that she is just as respectable after as she was before anyhow. And the whole business is then topped off after graduation with marriage, or a quick tour of Europe and then home — to marriage.

The coed's entire career at university is a sort of suspended animation during which nothing of any consequence is accomplished — after a lot of non-cerebral activity, she is released to face the

Explanation

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Re my letter of the twenty-fourth, there has been some misunderstanding as to the words in the brackets. The huzzahs, boos, down with Arts-men, and so forth were not the words of Mr. Friedlander but as was stated in the postscript, were meant to portray the reactions of the crowd of assembled freshmen. The failure to publish this explanation has led to a great misunderstanding.

In no sense should my letter be construed as a condemnation of Mr. Friedlander. I wrote it originally in answer to the report that was given to The Varsity, the gist of which was that the Engineering Society was not taking responsibility for the affair. I am now led to believe that this report was unreliable, ill-conceived and irresponsible.

Yours truly,
John Hart.

"A conscious effort has been made to express the fact that this is an all-University project in which all members of the University may feel at home," said the Warden. Later Friday evening Warden McCulley expressed satisfaction with the new Room and said that he was certain that the Arbor Room would serve the function for which it was intended.
The opening of the Arbor Room marks a new era in University life. For the first time, an on-campus, co-educational, university-wide meeting place and restaurant is available.

The Arbor Room is also intended to provide the all-male membership of Hart House with facilities for the entertainment of lady guests.

In a printed letter that was given out to the first patrons of the Arbor Room, Warden McCulley said that, "It is our hope that students in residence on the campus and other students living nearby may find the service a real convenience. . . . A cordial invitation is extended to students in extension courses, patrons of the theatre and other visitors to the campus to join with the members of the House in good fellowship."

The Arbor Room will serve exclusively as a lunch room for Hart House's male membership from 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. each day. It will be open in its co-educational character from 3:00 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. every day from Monday to Saturday.

rules of the game

Beat the Ticket

With the opening of the new University College men's residence a new sport has come to the Toronto campus. It's called "Beat The Ticket."

Before explaining the rules of the game it must be pointed out that until the new residence cafeteria opens, all resident students must eat at Hart House. As a result, each student is given three meal tickets each day, which he takes over to Hart House and exchanges for food.

BUT there are several strings attached!! Each ticket has a maximum value; breakfast cannot exceed forty cents, lunch fifty-five cents, and the maximum allowance for dinner is sixty-five cents. Also, tickets cannot be saved and used at another meal, nor can the balance left over from one meal be carried over to the next. This means only one thing. The student must get the maximum amount he can out of each ticket.

Out of this fact arose "Beat The Ticket", or "A Game for the Enterprising Resident Student." The general idea of the game is to get a maximum amount of food and a well-balanced meal for the price of your ticket.

Points are deducted when food amounting to more or less than the value of the ticket is purchased. Points are also deducted for purchasing surplus food. (This rule was introduced when one student was discovered leaving Hart House with seventeen one-cent packages of soda crackers.)

The game is not nearly as easy as it sounds however, because some sinister staff member made up the value of the tickets so that it is almost impossible at most meals, to get food adding up to the exact value of the meal ticket.

Usually the student finds, much to his frustration, that he is either three cents over or under the value, (this being where the surplus food rule comes in), and, unless he wishes to lose even more points, he cannot go back and exchange or pick up any food whatsoever. (This rule was introduced in order to test the spur of the moment ingenuity of the student, and also out of consideration for the Hart House staff.)

Now try your luck with the following Hart House menu. When you feel that you are fairly competent at the game, add a twelve cent piece of pie and start all over again. Juice—05; Soup—08; Baked Ham—50; Cheeseburger—40; Bread—05; Ice Cream—07; Other Desserts—10; Milk—08; Tea and Coffee—10.

You have a fifty-cent meal ticket . . . Go ahead!!!

ARBOR ROOM

The name — Arbor Room — comes from the University of Toronto's motto — Velut Arbor Aevo.
Translated — May She thrive like a tree through the ages.

"Coffee and a Doughnut, Please"

Among the first coeds to be served in the Arbor Room on Friday were these charming students. The first two hundred girls to come to the room were given a free rose. Free doughnuts were given to the first five hundred patrons. The coffee and sandwiches had to be paid for.

crests and crusts

Medieval Salad

For those who spend the greater part of the academic year lining up to eat in the Great Hall of Hart House, it is essential to know something about the assorted crests and crusts which adorn the walls.

The seventy-five painted crests were chosen in 1914 to represent the principal universities of the Allied Nations in World War I. Commonwealth universities will be found on the south wall; the allies are distributed across the north end with complete disregard for the vagaries of subsequent international affairs. This peculiarity was the cause of a slight improvement in East-West relations, when the Russian ambassador to Canada visited Hart House last year. He was surprised to find that the emblem of his own alma mater, good old Warsaw U., had survived the combined forces of Western decadence and the cold war.

Despite ardent pleas from foreign universities, there have been no additions to or subtractions from the original number of crests. The University of Tasmania is a possible exception, since it was originally unable to find the price of legal registration with the College of Heralds in London. When funds were available in 1938, the Tasmanians (who are supposed to be extinct, anyway) finally got into the Hall. The University of Montreal hasn't yet made the grade; it was considered too small to warrant attention in 1914, when makes things rather embarrassing on Carabin weekends.

Most of the crests are in the familiar colorful, formalized medieval style, looking edible enough to put the average Hart House salad to shame. A notable exception is the crest of Kyoto University. Our agent in Kyoto reports that it is not an obscure example of Oriental calligraphy, but a combination of the English initials for Medicine, Law, Jurisprudence, and Science.

The glazed crests in the great south window are the family devices of notable early Canadians, such as Eagot, Ryerson, Baldwin and Bishop Strachan. Of the eighteen stone corbels supporting the roof beams, six are portrait busts — three members of the founding Massey family on the west, and the two architects of the House opposite. The sixth is a uniformed soldier, commemorating a time when the Hall was used for drilling officer candidates and the theatre beneath was a machine-gun range. All the others are gargoyles, who refused to give their names.

IMPS BEST BLUES IN ROUGH GAME

Speaking OF SPORT

By MOISHE REITER

I had the rare honour of an invitation from One-Eyed-Benny to attend a funeral with him at Varsity Stadium on Saturday last. Benny, who has bet rather heavily on the Argo double Blue this year, was not at all dejected as he watched the apples of his eye trampled under the Alouette hooves.

"Who cares about these pros," chuckled Benny, "when next week comes the biggest deal of the year. That, of course, is when the Varsity Blues come home from their preseason capers and show the hometown people how football should be really played."

I reminded Benny about his fantastic losses when the Blues bowed in the Yates struggle last November, expecting him to be just a little shy about plunging on them so soon after. But Benny just soorted at my faint-heartedness.

"Those Westerns get lucky once and beat the best club they ever saw, and you start chickening right away. Really Reiter, where are your guts. The Mustangs are ripe for breaking and it's our Blues that are gonna do it to them."

"Just look at that team. They're taking on the best in sight and beating them while some of their best men sit around with injuries," and with that he pointed several rows ahead to where five (5) of the Blues' finest sat watching Argos shrink under another Alouette drive.

"Imagine, good fellow, if you can, what's gonna happen to those Mustangs when such as you Alan Watt, Ray Yakasovitch, Frank Palermo, Dick Risk and Norm Levine are back in the battle. Myself, I shudder with glee just thinking about my non-taxable profits."

On the field Big Doug McNichol walked through the Argo line to nail Nobby Wirkowski for a big loss. "What I could never figure", puzzled Benny, "is why such a good one as that McNichol goes to Western when its clear he looks better in Blue than purple. Without him Metras could never beat the Blues two years ago, and old John P. don't have him now. So how's he gonna stop the Blues this time. The answer is obvious — he ain't gonna."

At this point some newspaper types swooped down on him, begging for quotes and odds, but Benny just laughed at them, pleading pitiously on their knees.

"You guys want the dope, eh?" quoth Benny, "Well you'll have to read the Varsity for it. These boys treat me right and don't mention when I boob, so I'm givin' 'em exclusive rights to my crystal ball and whatever comes out of it, so you guys can just go peddle your papers. I ain't talkin to nobody but the Varsity."

In order to protect ourselves against scalping and to avoid upsetting the odds on Varsity games, thus endangering Benny's wagers, we will be unable to release his predictions until next Friday. Grab a paper then.

Blues Blow Sky High In Third Drop 29-18 Decision At Sarnia

A muddy field, and a series of disastrous fumbles in the third quarter combined to aid the Sarnia Imperials to a 29-18 win over the Varsity Blues last Saturday in the oil town. The Blues, exhibiting their famous passing attack, packed by powerful running by Phil Muntz and Steve Oneschuk, outplayed the Sarnia team from start to finish, only relaxing for a few minutes in the third frame while the Imps tallied three converted touchdowns.

Quarterback Bill Stevenson, who left the game late in the second quarter with a bruised back, sparked the Blues to a first half lead of 12-11, throwing touchdown passes to Al Riva and Fred Smale in the first and second quarters respectively. Oneschuk converted both scores. Sarnia answered with majors in both periods, but missed one conversion.

The Imperial line, one of the toughest the Blues are likely to meet this season, got suddenly rougher in the third quarter, and the Varsity attack fell apart for three costly fumbles. Sarnia recovered all these and made the breaks work for them turning the Blue errors into a touchdown.

Minutes after this, the Imp line broke through to block one of Oneschuk's kicks, then fell on the loose ball behind the Varsity line for another score.

Sarnia's import halfback, "Cookie" Gilchrist gave the oilmen their last major, late in third quarter, snagging one of Harry Wilson's passes on the Varsity twenty yard line to romp over unmolested.

Going into the final frame trailing 29-12, the Blues fought back gamely, but their scoring punch died as Oneschuk swept the end, cutting his way through the five Sarnia tacklers for the major. Bobby Waugh threw a key block on the play.

Stevenson's injury appeared to be not too serious, but to date nothing more can be learned. Ross Woods and Al Riva picked up bruised legs while doing extra work in the Blue backfield.

Steve Oneschuk was back in form turning in a fine two-way game, scoring a touchdown and converting all three Varsity scores. Fred Smale shone at end, especially in the first half, snarling several of Stevenson's passes for big gains.

Gilchrist was the outstanding Sarnia player, leading his team to their second exhibition victory over an Intercollegiate team.

The Sarnia win leaves little room for speculation between Varsity and Western when they meet in next Saturday's league opener. The Imperials whipped the Mustangs by three touchdowns a week ago in London.

Steve Scores

Varsity's able halfback, Steve Oneschuk, romps over the Sarnia goal-line for the last Blue touchdown, in the fourth quarter of Saturday's contest up in Oiltown. Out of the picture to the left are the five-odd Sarnia tacklers that Steve eluded for the major. Oneschuk was a spark-plug in the Varsity offense, scoring one touchdown, and converting all three of the Blue scores. The team will be preparing all this week for their league opener against Western this Saturday in the Stadium.

Blue Rugger 26-0 Cleanup Scots Lose

In their first game of the season, played on the back campus, the Varsity rugger Blues rampaged over Toronto Scottish II for a 26-0 victory. The Blues, looking their strongest in years, kept Scottish pinned on the defensive for the greater part of the play with a fast, mobile scrum and a prompt-passing three-line in which newcomers Butt and Burger played like veterans.

Although the game could hardly have been cleaner, it was marred by Bob McFadden of Scottish suffering a dislocated left shoulder mid-way through the second half. In spite of this loss of one of their most forceful players, Scottish rallied to prevent scoring from then on until scrum-half Roy Campbell broke through for a try in the last seconds of the game. The try was converted by Fayle.

In the first half, eight minutes of mid-field play ended with a beautifully executed scrum-wheel five yards from the visitors' touch line, with Baines carrying the ball over for the Blues; however, the convert attempt by Fayle fell just short. Two minutes later, Dunsmuir picked up a loose ball and slithered over in a play that can be described only as a piece of rank opportunism.

The Blues attacked strongly for the rest of the half, with the excellent inter-passing of the three quarters paying off in a try between the posts by Butt. Baines scored again after neatly receiving a pass at the end of a 15 yard run by Ham. As all three tries were converted, the half-time score was Blues 18, Scottish nothing.

Trinity Team

The dark-horse team in the intramural league this year is Trinity College. They have one of the fastest backfields, and, if by chance they are successfully aided by their light line, they undoubtedly will reach the playoffs.

At one of the half-back positions Trinity has Pete Gordon, chosen all-star last year. The ability to run, catch, and kick made him a triple-threat and one of the top scorers in the league. The acquisition of Jim Loukes, a former Dents' full-back now in residence at Trinity, is another reason for rating Trinity as dark-horse. His blocking will give quarterback John Whyte enough time to throw.

On the line are guard, Dewey Farquharson, and centre, Max Sanderson, both of whom played for Varsity Intermediates. Two returnees, Mike Shoemaker and Aldy White, at guard and tackle respectively, should make Trinity's front wall impenetrable. In fact, the only factor not making Trinity a favourite is their lack of depth. Nevertheless, with the enthusiasm the players have shown at practice, and with the team's display last year both taken into consideration, Trinity should be tough to beat.

Finals Today Decide Intercol Tennis Team

The University of Toronto held the semi-finals in the annual Intramural Tennis Championships at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club last Friday, October the first. There were few upsets as top seeded players dominated the tourney. The finalists will play for the Intramural Championship today and the winners will represent the University of Toronto in Intercollegiate competition.

Top seeded Ken Lawson VIC defeated M. Kutt 6-2, 6-1 to remain the heavy favorite to win the tourney. R. Arnold, Meds., the second seeded player defeated B. Hicks, VIC 6-1, 6-0. W. Grove had a little more difficulty in besting R. Cowich, Pharmacy, 6-3, 3-6, 6-1. R. Sonley, PHE, won by default from D. Legate. Robin Logie, SPS, bested Bob Smith 6-3, 6-2. H. Brown, SPS, upset eighth ranking P. Ketchum, Trin., 6-2, 6-2. Alexander, SPS, defeated Reynolds, Pharm., 6-2, 6-2; after first having defeated Nimchuk, UC, Varsity's third ranking player. Tattle, SPS, eked out a win from Woolcott, SMC, in the last match of the day by the scores of 6-2, 7-5.

In the doubles competition there were two upsets. Smith and Brown combined to beat Ketchum and Lawson, Trinity, the fourth ranked team, by scores of 6-4, 6-2. K. Lawson, VIC, and R. Logie, Trin., defeated the team of Ebenhardt and Johns, VIC 6-0, 6-0. Dixon and Cummings, SPS, defeated the third seeded team of Sonley and Grove 6-1, 6-3. The draw for today's matches for the finals is as follows: Second seeded team of Hall and Tattle will meet the team of Dixon and Cummings at twelve-thirty and at two-thirty. Lawson and Logie are pitted against Smith and Brown.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

It looks as if Vic has the softball team to beat this year. The reason we say this, is that outside of two players the personnel has not changed since the gals won the league "pennant" last fall.

Marg Ann Gemmell will be pitching her third season with the squad, seconded by Mary Foster, last year's most outstanding rookie. Coaching duties have been taken over by Eric Reid but outside of that, the squad remains intact.

Fifteen aspirants turned out to the UC practices last week, and, according to Mary Craw, head of the group, Sally Waigle and Caren Wooleys are the gals to watch. No doubt, the team is beavelling the loss of Di Connacher who graduated last spring, but with Mary Siegle holding the coaching spot, they should make a fair showing.

POT has had more out to practices than ever before. Rosemary Marsh who has been playing in a Toronto league all summer should help push these phys others through the season quite well. Mary Marg O'Neill is back for her third season with the squad while second year Betty Payette shows great promise.

The squad that gave Vic 1 such a hard time last year, namely Saint Hilda's, is having trouble getting a good squad together. Mary Winship and Heather MacPherson are the strongmen returnees for this group.

As usual, the rookie squad of the year will be PHE 1, the squad made completely of first year blood. The only trouble with this crew is that they all want to pitch, so you can see, there will be a 'fair' amount of spirit around the club.

HH Table Tennis Boosted 2 Floors To Debate Room

The Hart House Table Tennis Club has received a big boost this year — of two floors, to be exact. Play has been elevated from the former Lunch Room (now The Arbor Room) to the inspirational atmosphere of the Debates Room. It was felt that with the possibility of a social group elegantly sipping coffee at each end of a table (table tennis table, that is) it would be difficult — nay, almost impossible to give the game the attention it deserves. In fact, it was agreed that players might completely forget the old sports rule of "Keep your eye on the ball", although no basis for this argument was presented. Further advantages are offered with the protection of table surfaces from coffee ring stains and the leisurely prospect of strolling downstairs, instead of toiling up after a hard night's play.

The open meeting of the 1954-55 Term will be held this Monday, Oct. 4, at 7.30 p.m. in the Debates Room. Tables will be set up for play, with all equipment supplied. This year, players are requested to wear RUNNING SHOES in order to protect the wood floor. Membership in the club is $1.00, with play being held every Monday night. Individuals compete for the club championship, which is recognized by the presentation of a trophy to the winner. All Hart House members interested in joining are invited to attend the Monday night meeting at which refreshments will be served.

Baby Blues Begin Hold Shaw Trophy

While the big brothers, the Varsity Blues, are going after the eighth cup, the Varsity Juniors will work out for their fourth straight Shaw Trophy in the Inter-collegiate Intermediate League. Coaching changes saw Jack Kennedy, formerly with Bobby Master-son and the Blues replacing John McManus at the helm, assisted by Jack Roberts, to coach the line.

Though many of last year's Baby Blue champion club have moved up to the senior squad, Jack will field a very strong outfit, which must be favoured to retain their crown. This, despite impressive rebuilding by such clubs as Ryerson and Western, would seem to be a safe bet for another Varsity title.

With both quarter-backs of the Baby Blues, Harry Wilson and Bill Stevenson, now up running the Blues, Kennedy has replaced them with two former teammates in high school ball. The two are Larry Joynt and Tom Hamilton, both of the U.T.S.

These are augmented by Larry Turner, from Fort William, at the left half spot, and last year's team captain, Al Wong, back at right half. Other holdovers give lots of strength on the wing line. Back are Pete Polechone at centre, Walt Schmid and Mac McKelvey at guard, John Rowney returning first string centre, and John Iglar at tackle.

An impressive group of rookies includes Izzy Pastushak of Bloor Collegiate, who played in several exhibition games with Blues, and Ted Lotocky of Oakwood Collegiate.

REQUIRED PHYSICAL EDUCATION MEN---1954-55

By order of the Board of Governors each man proceeding to a Bachelor's Degree must participate in the required Physical Education programme during the First and Second year of his attendance at the University. The Physical Education requirements include a Swimming Test which must be taken before November 1st by all First Year men and by men admitted to the Second Year from other Universities. Swimming classes are compulsory for all students who fail to pass the Swimming Test. First Year students are requested to complete this test immediately.

For the current session the Board of Governors have seen fit to make the attendance of ex-service men in this course optional.

At the same time the University Health Service and the Department of Physical Education — Men, wish to emphasize the importance of recreational exercise and athletics. The course as offered in this University provides a means for all students to maintain some measure of physical fitness.

Physical Education credits may be obtained by participation in inter-collegiate and intramural sports and instructional classes as noted below.

Vic Frosh Get Works But Also Bob Apple

For the first time in the sixty-year history of the annual Vic Bob Apple Battle, the freshmen emerged victorious on Friday afternoon.

Seventeen sophomores faced an overpowering majority of assailants in their defense of the coveted scarlet-and-gold bloop, nailed to the top of a heavily greased pole. The half-hour battle began with a rapid and well-directed barrage of sophomore "ammunition" which ranged in variety from tomatoes to pears, but whose condition and age were consistent.

The offensives attempted to attack with the unusual weapon of a long rope, but prompt action of the defense served both the rope and the strategy. The force of numbers and enthusiasm, however, finally resulted in a successful assault. Hand to hand battle beneath the trophy forced the sophs to resort to such tactics as mud, greasy rags, cantaloupes, grapefruits, and squashes.

Despite this last desperate stand, the freshmen retaliated in like manner and succeeded in capturing the prize. A hearty rendition of the Vic song crowned the unprecedented freshman victory, and abolished any ill-feeling on the part of the vanquished.

In previous years the violence of the Bob Apple Battle had often exceeded the present one, and last year the intruding engineers made off with the trophy. A timely notice from the Engineering Society which appeared in Friday's Varsity may have resulted in the conspicuous scarcity of skulemen on the scene of the battle. One Vic bystander commented, "All the glory is gone — no engineers, no barricades, no spikes."

To the freshmen in the grimy, tattered, stinking robes of battle, however, the glory was quite sufficient.

no skulemen, please!

AT THE GALLERIES

14th Century To Seagram

End of summer exhibitions now on view at the Art Gallery of Toronto include European painting, from the fourteenth century to the present day, a survey of Canadian painting from Krieghoff to contemporaries; also upstairs, a show of contemporary Americans. The Canadian and European shows are from the gallery's own collection. The Seagram collection of paintings of Canadian cities is on view in the sculpture court.

First, the Seagram collection. The paintings seem to me to be the work of competent artists and not much more. The paintings are all quite creditable representations of the subject matter, but none of them, at least for me, goes far enough beyond this to justify their inclusion in any other collection of work by Canadian artists.

The show of European painting, from the fourteenth century onwards, gives a fascinating picture of the development of the art of painting in the western hemisphere. My attention was held by these pictures as I moved from gallery to gallery: Peasants' Wedding, by Breughel the younger, carefully composed, colourful, gay; a masterful portrait by Van Dyck; the quiet Mrs. Partridge of Sir Joshua Reynolds; the misty pictures of the French Impressionists, in particular the green landscapes of Pissarro; in the next gallery Renoir — The Concert, with two plump, pink, and humid maidens; also in this gallery the wonderful sculpture by Rodin of Jean D'aire, one of the burghers of Calais; also, in bronze, Grand Arabesque by Degas. Further, there are paintings, and some sculpture, by notable Canadians, Britons, and French up to and including the present day. Of special interest to me were Woman's Head in bronze by Picasso, the Marquesa Casati by John.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Green Scarf

That great basic of American movie-making, the 'gimmick', is a device well-used by the English producers of The Green Scarf, a thriller now at the Towne Cinema. Taking the lead of Hollywood's Johnny Belinda, the English film people have gone a bit farther, making their hero not only a deaf-mute but blind as well.

Worked in the standard 'thriller' pattern, even to having the 'butler' doing the murdering, The Green Scarf yet manages to escape the weighty emptiness characteristic of the routine melodrama. Its people, even the senseless hero, who is really an intellectual giant, are believable and real, if the situations and action are sometimes not.

The Green Scarf is assured of great audience sympathy with its abundance of heroic types, three in all, one being for the young men, one for the young women and one nice old gentleman for everybody to like. The plot is simplified by having them all on the same side, then mixed up again by having them, each in his own noble folly, obstructing one another.

Jaques Vautier, the handicapped hero, is accused of murdering a clean-cut young American tourist on board an ocean-liner and refuses to defend himself, seemingly quite prepared to die for a crime which the audience just knows he couldn't have committed — such a handsome young man, Deliot is the stunned old fellow appointed to the case, a self-concerned lawyer would touch, and Solange Vautier is Jaques' wife, a lush morsel who has done him wrong but still loves him truly. So goes the story.

Michael Redgrave, as Deliot, makes the picture and makes it a good thing.

Though filmed almost entirely in the static setting of a Paris courtroom, The Green Scarf bolts about with unpredictable dramatic action, leaving its pattern in imaginative twist's making things interesting. Happily M. Deliot does not suddenly become a Cicero in his courtroom oratory, but remains his somewhat befuddled self, mumbling shyly, a little embarrassed, into his long shaggy beard. The Green Scarf turns a bit syrupy in spots but it's mainly good stuff. I liked it.

Ducats Sold Noon Today Arena Doors

Student Football Tickets will go on sale today at 12.00 noon for the three intercollegiate games that the Blues will play in Varsity Stadium this year.

The tickets — in books of three for the three games — will be sold at the South door of Varsity Arena (opposite the museum) today from 12.00 to 6.00 p.m. and tomorrow from 10.00 a.m. to 6.00 p.m. The price is $1.50 for a book of three, and only one ticket will be sold to each student. ATL cards must be presented.

The Blues home games this year are:

Western Oct. 9
McGill Oct. 30
Queen's Nov. 13

No special provision is being made this year for the sale of tickets at the South end of the campus. It will again be necessary for students in Engineering, Meds., Dents., etc., to go to the arena to get their tickets.

Officials of the University Athletic department said that they believe the extended hours of sale will help alleviate the difficulties that the South-end students have in obtaining tickets.

Tony Enriquez Is Journalist

Without any hullabaloo or even a press release, Tony Enriquez, the president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, has joined the staff of the University of Ottawa Weekly, The Fulcrum. In a recent issue of the paper received in The Varsity offices, Enriquez's name was found buried in the lower masthead of the paper.

In recent weeks Enriquez's name has appeared in several Ottawa dailies in connection with statements he made about the International Union of Students and the problem of Canadian membership in an organization which has been dubbed Communist-dominated.

Women Enter Hart House For Culture And Coffee

Although Hart House is a men's Club, women are admitted to the House at times, said Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden.

Some of the Library evenings are declared Special Occasions by the Hart House Board of Stewards, for the purpose of admitting women. The first of these will be the Library evening tonight at 7.30 p.m.

During the week, coeds may attend Wednesday afternoon, music recitals which are held every second week.

The new Arbor Room is open to women from about 3 p.m. until 11 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Upon invitation of a member of the House, women guests may attend Sunday evening concerts, held every second Sunday. The first of these will be held on October 24 at 9 p.m. and will feature Pierre Sauvren, pianist.

Professor Presents Philosophy and Poetry

The University's Philosophical Club is due to swing into another year of activity tonight when Dr. Fulton Anderson, head of the Department of Philosophy takes the floor of Croft Chapter House at University College to lecture on "philosophy and poetry".

The towering, wry-humoured department head — known from coast to coast as much as a dry-fly salmon fisherman as a philosopher — explained last night that he would investigate "the kind of knowledge that poetry conveys and whether it is governed by the same rules that channel scientific knowledge."

Dr. Anderson is not as wholly an intellectual devotee as one might expect of one who has been admitted to the highly restricted inner-sanctum of the Royal Society.

He makes no secret of the fact

Victoria Staff And Students Join In Praising Bob-Apple And Constructive Initiation

"Victoria College's initiation this year might well serve as an example to the whole University campus", said Dr. Bennet, Principal of Victoria College, in his address to the VCU last night.

Dr. Bennet was speaking to the group on the problems of the administrative staff, and in particular on the rules and regulations as seen from the principal's office.

The Victoria College Union, which originated before Dr. Bennet's return to the staff in 1932, has immensely improved co-ordination of all extra-curricular activities. With the advent of this new organization came an incidental fee to be collected and used for the betterment of the students union. This fee was to be under the control of the Victoria College Council.

The Victoria College Council, under the leadership of the Principal, is the staff organ for the regulation of the life and work of the students.

"In the years of co-operation between the VCU and the Council, there has not arisen a difference of opinion that we have not been able to settle amicably," said Dr. Bennet.

An outstanding example of the truth of this statement is this year's initiation, which at the request of the Council was supervised by the VCU. Due to the excellent efforts put forth by the class of 5T7 and the VCU, this year's initiation activities were applauded by staff and students alike.

As part of the U of T. Victoria must enforce certain rules. One of these, in connection with initiations, is to the effect that no student may be forced against his will to participate in the activities. Dr. Bennet said he was pleased at the way the students had co-operated with him in this regard. "Vic has gone far in establishing an all important harmony between staff and students," he said.

He remarked in conclusion that he wished to see an extension of the excellent staff-student collaboration, and a continuation of the stabilization of soph-frosh relations. He added, in reference to the Bob Apple Battle, perhaps even the engineers learned a lesson.

Massey Visited New Arbor Room Praised Paper

Yesterday afternoon the Right Honorable Vincent Massey, C.H., Governor General of Canada, made an informal visit to the new Arbor Room at Hart House which opened last Friday. Warden Joseph McCulley showed him around the room and pointed out the many facilities of the new work shop.

The Governor General had to cut his visit short as he only had a short stop-over between trains. In a brief conversation with Clyde Batten, editor of the Varsity, he congratulated the paper on its promptness in news coverage.

The Governor General's interest in Hart House arises from the fact that he founded the building in honor of his son, Hart Massey, who was a graduate of the U. of T.

University Minds Will Explore For CBC Television Production

A Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television program called "Exploring Minds" returns to CBC-TV network screens next Sunday, it was learned last night.

The first three television programs of the series will be conducted by the University of Toronto.

Professor E. S. Carpenter, of the Department of Anthropology will handle the three University of Toronto programs.

The three weekly programs being presented beginning this Sunday will discuss "Man in the Future". Dr. Carpenter will be narrator of the drama-production which will take a look on successive weeks at 1) physical changes expected in man 2) social conditions in the future and 3) changes in language.

Another University of Toronto production will deal with the development and use of the electron-microscope.

The CBC-sponsored series will be taken up five weeks from now by the University of Western Ontario, the University of British Columbia, and the University of Montreal.

The University of Toronto will return to the CBC camera spotlight later in the season to wind up the series with two final programs.

Ernest Watkins To Address IRC First Meeting

Ernest Watkins, news commentator for the British Broadcasting Corporation, will speak on "Bi-partisan Foreign Policy in the United Kingdom," at an open meeting to the International Relations Club in Falconer Hall at 4.10 p.m. tomorrow.

A solicitor by profession, Mr. Watkins is an assistant editor of The Economist, and editor of the London Newsletter.

His publications include a book dealing with Canada which will appear this fall, The Cautious Revolution, Credit Buying and two books on Iceland.

During the war Mr. Watkins worked for the War Office, and later went to the Army Bureau of Current Events as editor of War.

The meeting will be the first one held by the IRC this year.

School Sports Over-Emphasized

by RALPH BERRIN

Why do you enjoy watching sports? Why do you enjoy participating in sports? Was your answer to the first question "It's thrilling!", to the second "It's fun"? Thrills and fun are not all to be appreciated in the world around us. School sports all-too-easily misdirect the students' interests from the more important and more essential activities. However, there is nothing wrong with sport "per se", only with its over-emphasis in school life. Three factors, mainly, account for this: the halo around professional sport, the halo around sport itself, and the disinterest given to worthy organizations.

Professional sport is envied and imitated in the schools. Primarily, this "industry" exists only because people want to be entertained,—not by the emotions, but by the thrill of men trying to beat each other. This is but a step, well, a fairly long step, from the Roman Arena where Christians were thrown to the lions to thrill the not-so-ancient mob.

It must also be remembered that the players are not playing for the honour of the city (or what have you) but for money. Unfortunately money plus sport seems to equal gambling. The harsh zeal the players show in being able to win is a grim determination to keep their jobs by beating the other fellow. This type of "sportsmanship" should be neither copied nor idealized in our schools.

Sport by itself, as I have said before, has without doubt good qualities; but what must be objected to are its over-rated virtues and gross over-emphasis. Strong bodies with strong minds is the principle of a physical training program which gives athletic credits for playing in the band.

The passing of a man, called

B. Ruth, with trick reflexes which enabled him to hit a ball off a bat the farthest ever, was mourned by a whole nation. How many will mourn as deeply at the death of A. Einstein? The child's hero-worship of cowboys, firemen and air (now space) ship pilot is soon lost; but never lost in the case of sports stars. These are examples of the over-estimation of what we call sport.

There are few lasting results in sport. The athletic trophies won do not compare to the achievement in obtaining scholarships and fellowships. We should not build stadiums when more classrooms are needed.

I'm a person of imagination and thought. Who wouldn't be when he meets a nice undergraduate girl, like Gummie?

On Tuesday I phoned her. "Oh dear!" she said, "I'm just so all wrapped up in things - -". So, I phoned her on Wednesday, and she said she couldn't possibly get away.

When I phoned Thursday and she said she was tied down to her work. I got to thinking.

Suddenly I realized that this was a big problem. How many students, besides Gummie, have come to the rugged stretches of Toronto Campus, tragically unaware that it is dangerous and distant withdrawal from reality, which must not be encouraged?

Straggled by the knowledge that it was my duty to save Gummie and the rest of you, by imparting facts and instruction in the art of gradmanship, I descended stealthily into the coffee shop at Vic to call up the ghosts of past easons. As I trod downwards I thought of the other Aeneas and his epic journey and quest into Hades.

The first grad I interviewed there was the mother type. She shifted her family to the other arm and frankly admitted that her formula for success in the cruel after-Varsity world was two parts pabulum to three of milk with finely squashed vegetables and orange juice on demand.

Suddenly there loomed up before me an apparition from the Normal School art classes. It was so frustrated as to be unable to give me any rules of gradmanship at all. I caught a whisper that no coffee or cigarettes until after 4 p.m. had something to do with the case.

"Sure I'll oblige. Get this". The office worker looked towards me earnestly. "Big business is nothing but politics. To be success you merely maneuver (and you should have seen the way she can do it, even on a coffee shop chair!) yourself into a good position (taw — ther! Arf! Arf!) with a pay check and then you keep them from taking over your position". She shoved me off her chair. "Any work done is incidental." She smiled, and I thought so too.

The next shade that drifted up was the journalist. That cigarette holder and German trench coat sure had changed her from her undergrad days. Puff, puff, whew! "It's it's it's so hard to express myself," she said. "But I feel now I am ticking. I can hear it. I am rotating. I can feel it." She put her hand artistically upon her head. "Tell them that — to listen for the ticking." Puff, puff, whew! And she faded away.

I dropped a few tears, that settled the smoke and cleared away the ghosts, and reascended. I'm very sad, but I do feel good about doing my duty by daring to tell you undergrads, (poor Gummie), the true facts about what's ahead in the cruel world after.

The Red Feather Campaign starts at the University of Toronto next week. It services sixty-eight agencies in the metropolitan area, which do vital work. It covers work among all age groups, and gives urgently needed help. Much work done is done by volunteers who give both time and skills. Much still remains to be done, however, and can be done with your help. Our co-operation is necessary for this campaign to succeed.

Snoop Gets Bloop Scoop

By SANDRA SKY

Of all the complex and confused rules and regulations that confront a Varsity freshman as she makes her debut into university life, perhaps the strangest and most perplexing is the one made by her hallowed upper classmen, requesting that she purchase a Bloop!

With no further explanation offered, pity the poor fresher's plight, as she frantically tries to discover what sort of strange animal a Bloop may be.

From the sounds of it, it could be anything from the noise made by a dripping faucet, to the latest weapon invented by the Atomic Energy Commission. Is it animal, vegetable, or mineral? Is it to be donned, devoured or dusted? Apparently, neither Mr. Webster or the Oxford scholars had the words to describe it.

It wasn't to be found on the menu of such fine eating places as Mac's or the Elm. The dusty depths of an antique shop produced no Bloop, nor could it be found in any chain or department store. A quick wire to Schiaparelli, Dior and Fath brought no clue as to the identity of a Bloop. An investigation of pet shops and the Riverdale Zoo threw little light on the mystery.

Finally, in desperation, the frenzied frosh telephoned the Shopper's Information Service to seek help. But the operator, although she had listings for sloops, coups, soups, and drupes, could find nothing on Bloops!

With her private investigation a failure and her ingenuity exhausted, the freshman knows she has but one alternative. She must reveal her ignorance and take her problem to the most learned class on campus . . . the second year men.

Seven consultations and seven dates later, the frosh has her data complete. The entire "Bloopography" has been unfolded.

It seems these Bloops are objects of extraordinary ability.

Dr. C. Sanderson Will Speak On Reasons To Read

Dr. C. R. Sanderson, Chief Librarian of the Toronto Public Library, will speak on "Why Bother to read?" at a meeting to be held in the Hart House Library, on Tuesday evening at 7:30 P.M. In accordance with the ruling of the Board of Stewards, ladies are welcome to attend.

Dr. Sanderson, who is a graduate of the Universities of London and Toronto, has lectured at these Universities, as well as at summer sessions in the universities of Heidelberg, Florence and Bruxelles. He is currently editing a publication called "The Author Volumes".

Having had their birth somewhere during the year 1950, they have since grown and multiplied to assume an all-important place in the ranks of Varsity tradition. There are several divisions of Bloops . . . ranging from the popular blue and white variety, to the assorted ones of the individual colleges.

In keeping with the true democratic spirit, a Bloop harbors no prejudices towards any race or religion, and demands but one characteristic of its bearer . . . that he or she be a loyal student of the great institute of learning, of which it is a part.

Bloops also have the talent of arousing kinship and spirit. Though primarily a trademark of freshmen, a Bloop has often been seen accompanying senior students to football games and various and sundry other college activities.

Because of the tradition it has built up for itself, a Bloop has become a much sought-after possession by other universities and there have been cases in its history where it has been kidnapped on out-of-town week-ends by rivaling colleges.

But no matter where it resides, a Bloop remains true to its founders and birthplace, — as a symbol of friendship and allegiance to its beloved school.

Several Elected At Vic Assembly

Elections were held to fill several offices of the Victoria College Union at their meeting last night, following a dinner at which Dr. Bennet gave a talk on the difficulties of administration.

Jim Carter, Bruce Stewart, and Barb Smith were chosen as Union Activities Committee.

Of three nominees for the office of graduate chairman, Donald Landon was chosen. The five new members of the Constitution Committee are Nora Wilson, Dick Newman, Bas Moore, Sue Causland and Vice-President Ray Atkin.

Pinhead Convenor, whose job is the ordering and distributing of VCU pins, is Dave Baird.

The Picture hanging committee of the VCU (which fulfils an important function at art concious Victoria) is now composed of

The student representative on one of the Wymilwood committees is Jim Carascallen.

A constitutional amendment to the effect that men's and Women's residences should have a representative on the VCU was turned down by a comfortable margin.

A Committee for the betterment of student-faculty relations was formed. It is composed of Liz Langford, Dick Newman, Val Spence, Ray Atkins, and Joan Bond.

A new parking fee has been levied this year for students, who were required to pay $5.00 per month for parking. Tonight a recommendation was made that two dollars would be sufficient for the monthly fee. It was also decided that a $10.00 annual rate would be adequate.

This recommendation is to be passed on to the Board of Regents of Victoria College.

We Stand Condemned

We are fortunate in Canada that our country has not as yet been crippled by a chauvinistic nationalism—a nationalism such as has hampered the workings of the UNO many times.

When the world was large and forbidding in its magnitude, men could afford to be small and parochial in their outlook, but now that it's dimensions have shrunk within the compass of twenty-four hours man must become big. There is no time in our age for self-interest and bigotry, for we stand like Marcus Aurelius, surveying the destruction of our civilization.

The weapon to prevent its destruction lies in our hands. It is a two-edged sword which can cut with equal force into our enemies or into our own marrow, and that weapon is truth.

Every businessman, every student, every politician, every housewife, every labourer, in short every citizen of our country who refuses to follow without reservation the white whale of ultimate truth, is condemned to life in the caves, "condemned by his own incapacity to conceive the divine."

Allies or Neutrals?

Appearing on this page is the report of Tony Enriquez, president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, and head of the Canadian delegation at the conference of the International Union of Students which was held in Moscow last August.

It must be remembered while considering his attitudes that the people of the countries of Asia and Africa especially expect much from our federation.

To many of them we represent a balancing link in any international organization. We have a reputation for being cautious but reliable allies, and constantly vigilant in the fight against discrimination and social injustice.

This reputation is too precious to be lost. It may well be that we will lose it by refusing to associate ourselves with the organization which at present is doing the most in concrete measures for the alleviation of oppression in these countries.

A Word to the Foolish

Tolerance has by now become a catch-word, a self-evident principle backed by the authority of church and state and whatever other authorities a man will allow.

The tolerance that is talked about is various; tolerance of white by black, tolerance of Jews by Baptists, tolerance of Jehovah's Witnesses by Catholics.

There is even tolerance for stupidity — "Wise men suffer fools gladly". But among all this tolerance there is little tolerance of intelligence. Intellect and imagination are too often regarded with skepticism and the suspicion of being phony.

It is perhaps easier for the wise to suffer fools than vice-versa as it is easier for a man on the twentieth floor to appreciate the viewpoint of a man on the tenth than it is for the man on the tenth to comprehend the view from the twentieth. But this only calls for a greater measure of tolerance.

Let fools suffer wise men gladly too.—W.M.

The International Situation

By TONY ENRIQUEZ

The National Federation's International Activities Commission has grown beyond all expectations in the last few years. As a result of this year's activities in Istanbul, the NFCUS has been voted to the nine nation Supervision Committee of the International Student Conferences, a Committee that is the top guiding body of a 43 nation organization in the absence of an Executive.

This top election, added to the representation of your Federation on several committees of this organization, its representation at the main meetings of National Unions of Students in Europe and the United States etc., are tangible results of the confidence students in other parts of the world come to expect from Canadian students.

The main activity in the International student field is carried out by two organizations. The International Student Conference, commonly known as Cosc, and the International Union of Students. The situation in the international student field reflects faithfully the world tension since the Second War, and, as is quite natural, the student community is at present divided into two main camps: East and West.

No present situation can be fully understood without a brief knowledge of the past, and to this purpose it might be worthwhile to devote a few lines to the history behind the two above-mentioned International organizations.

At the end of the Second World War, students of many countries, including China, India, Russia, England the U.S.A., expressing the common sentiment of the time, to meet in England to form an International Union of Students that would unite students of all the world.

Headquarters of the newly-born International Union of Students was settled in Prague, Czechoslovakia with the blessing of all allied governments and the high hopes of the student community. The I.U.S. began its activities with great zeal and a good deal of co-operation from all student communities.

It was not until 1948, with the Communist coup in Czechoslovakia that the grand Communist scheme became clear and shocked Western students into a tardy sense of reality.

The incidents, such as the unconstitutional expulsion of the Yugoslav Union of Students immediately following the break of Yugoslavia's Tito from the Soviet regime; the failure of the IUS to raise any protest over the most arbitrary expulsion of hundreds of teachers and students from Charles University in Prague; its blatant propaganda against "capitalist warmongers"; germ warfare; interventions in North Korea etc., etc., clearly followed the Cominform policy of the time.

It was then clear to Western National Unions of Students that no possibility of co-operation and purely practical, non-partisan activities could be undertaken within the IUS, and thus, under the initiative and hospitality of the Scandinavian National Unions of Students, a Conference was held in Stockholm, in 1950, to decide the means and ways in which Western NUS's and those of other interested countries could continue to work on students' behalf. Out of this meeting, attended by 23 NUS's, mostly Western European and North American, came the plan of co-operation and list of practical activities which has grown and expanded yearly through the International Students Conferences.

Thus the International Student Conferences, starting as a temporary and loose-knit means of co-operation, has consolidated and expanded through its four years and four meetings existence until at the last meeting (Istanbul, January 1954) it counted 42 NUS's in its membership (more majority representing than the IUS) and a program of activities ranging from International Seminars, Experts Conferences, Seminar, Travel to an International Delegation to Investigate student conditions in Africa (schedules to leave in October, a Canadian being one of the five nation group) and aid to Colonial countries.

Lately, however, at Warsaw in 1953, to be exact, the IUS, following the world policy of the Soviet countries to soft-pedal abusive propaganda and attempt to make overtures for coexistence and peace, (further strengthened by their victory at the Geneva Conference) have reversed their former insulting attitudes and speeches and have reverted to a role of milk-and-honey towards the Western student representatives.

This attitude went as far (relatively speaking) as to accept a suggested Western motion to the effect that the IUS should modify its Constitution, allowing a new clause of membership: Associate - Membership. This change would, so it is published, make it possible for Western NUS's who find the IUS partisan statements unpalatable co-operate in practical fields while, at the same time, disassociating themselves from any policy or statement they might not find to their liking.

The NFCUS policy has always been one of studying any new changes carefully, though these might be obviously nonsensical, and thus it should not be surprising to the reader that his Federation adopted a motion at its October 1953 Annual Meeting mandating its National Executive to investigate the offer of Associate - Membership made by the IUS.

The investigation carried out by the NFCUS Executive was extensive and thorough. The result of the inquiries are being compiled and collated by the NFCUS Executive, and shall be presented to the Annual NFCUS Conference being held in October at Toronto University, along with its conclusions and recommendations.

The results up to the present time are not complete, but the one clear result available comes from the three person delegation of Observers to the IUS Moscow Council last month.

Coed Character

The Editor,
The Varsity.

This is being written in reply to yesterday's letter concerning coeds in general and the opening of the Arbor Room in particular, and in anticipation of others like it.

Re Mr. 'Cavalier of the Streets' very cavalier remarks concerning the coed character, it is rather obvious that his faculty for distorted generalization is exceeded only by his bad manners. Since nothing I can say will improve either I can only regret that his circle of female acquaintances has been so very narrow.

Hart House was built when women on this campus were in a very small minority. As Hart House has increased its services to its members through the years, this minority has increased also. It is time that they were offered some of the great advantages that Hart House offers to its members.

I quite sympathize with Hart House as a social and athletic focal point for the men of the university. But I also think that such activities as the Sunday evening concerts, the art exhibits, and the record collection should be made available to women as well, either in Hart House or elsewhere.

The opening of the Arbor Room is a step in the right direction. But as long as certain cul-

Danger of Critical Thinking

Now is the time of the year, when our respected professors will speak to their classes — at least to those in the first year — about the necessity of critical thinking, of re-examining various commonly held "truths" and of trusting no authority except one's own reason and observation.

No doubt, if one examines how all progress in science and in human ways of life has come about, one must agree that in order to make room for something better, earlier concepts and beliefs had to be challenged. And yet there are others who argue, that non-rational beliefs and a certain sanctity of authority are also important to give cohesion to the society (see for ex. Kingsley Davis, "Human Society", 221-222). Sooner or later, one has to face the problem from both sides and to make up his mind what to do about it.

Furthermore, it is all very well with being critical, as long as it is a question of Euclidean geometry or the existence of matter. These questions may be considered queer but somehow not tural advantages continue to be offered to the male section of the campus alone. Hart House cannot be considered a university institution in the best sense of the word.

It may very well be, as Bertrand Russell says, that among those few having both the conviction of the value of intellectual freedom and the courage to stand up for it are the men of most importance to the future. It is not so certain, that most of the students are willing to pay the price for such a lonely and unpopular independence or would even consider its rewards worth while. We might well use what impulses for critical inquiry we have got to find out whether those lofty ideals agree with the way a university functions in reality. Where is the emphasis in practice — on intellectual growth, good company, social status or a safe way to a career?

Any opinions, gentlemen?

Smith to Vic

Exchange Invasion

by JANE GRIFFIN

Victoria College has been invaded by the Americans! But this invasion has taken such a pleasant form, that no one at Vic is likely to object. The attacking force consists of two very attractive girls on Exchange from Smith College, Gloria ("Gogo") Sokolec of Chicago, and Barbara Freedgood of Brooklyn. While at Varsity, Gogo is in the General Course, majoring in Art and Archeology, and Barb is in English.

Smith is a Liberal Arts College for Women in Northampton, Mass. "We're the only college without a football team!" When asked exactly where Northampton is, they replied promptly, "Ninety miles from Harvard and sixty miles from Yale!"

With such an ideal set-up at home, why did they come to Varsity? Barbara explained that it was the very fine English department here which attracted her, and Gogo said that after spending several summers in Canada, and after visiting Varsity she made up her mind "that it would be an enlightening experience." So they both decided to join the Exchange plan which Smith has organized with the University of Toronto. According to this plan, a maximum of eight girls from Smith may attend Varsity in their third year, provided that their grades are of sufficiently high standing, and in exchange for which a maximum of eight Varsity girls go to Smith. This year there are seven Smith girls here, and three Varsity girls at Smith.

College life, say the two young ladies, is in some respects quite different in the States. Coming from a women's college, their outlook would be somewhat different from that at Varsity. One of the most striking differences is in the matter of dress. In the States, standard garb for the college miss is blazer, Bermuda shorts and knee socks. If she sports a Yale or Harvard scarf, you know that, for her at least, the course of true love is running smoothly. Men wear jeans to class "instead of suits and ties, as they do here." (Where have they been?) Coming from a college of some 2300 students, they felt rather swallowed up at first in the great size and extent of Varsity Smith, they feel, is a somewhat less impersonal and formal. An example of this informality is the habit of knitting in class! "There are," says Gogo, "over 2000 bicycles registered at Smith." Everyone, even the professors, ride from class. Smith is recognized as having "one of the most stimulating intellectual atmospheres" of any American college.

Finally, they were asked the inevitable question. What Do You Think of Canadian Men? On the whole, they were most complimentary. They consider the Canadian student more serious, conservative and well-mannered than his American counterpart. He doesn't seem as clothes-conscious as the American male, who apparently adheres to the dictates of fashion as rigidly as his girl-friend. Right now, for instance, he is rarely seen in public dressed in anything but a charcoal grey suit, round collar, and thin, striped tie. On a date in the spring, we were told, he too wears Bermuda shorts and Argyle knee socks. "He's sure to get a million and one whistles!"

The girls are looking forward to what they expect to be a most fascinating and rewarding year.

Smiles from Smith

Exchange students grin at the prospects of a pleasant year at Varsity. "Gogo Sokolec and Barbara Freedgood are two of the seven Smith girls that U. of T. is welcoming this year."

Have Gargoyles Gone To VC's Head?

BY BILL SMYTHE

Believe it or not we think University College is interesting. Perhaps we have been around here too long and are losing our sense of values, or the gargoyles have gone to our head. But we visited Miss McAndrew the other day and unearthed all sorts of interesting information.

After the initial formation of the University of Toronto, there was a great deal of discontent with the principal's avowed aim. He considered the university as a missionary enterprise 'under divine blessing' to bring all of Ontario into the Anglican fold. University College was formed as a non-denominational organization to combat this slight bias.

In 1853 when the first University College was built, it was put under government control and made responsible for all instruction given in the university. Until the building burned down before the turn of the century, UC had a bad case of growing pains. Besides the religious struggle, UC had to contend with criticisms of its worth, particularly a commission which investigated it in 1861.

After the fire, the strange little creatures which one sees popping out of the walls and hanging over the doorways came into being. One comment of Mr. T. A. Reed's in the '37-38 UC Bulletin catches our attention: "The UC man cannot help feeling himself heir to a great heritage when he enters his Junior Common Room." Have you been to the JCR recently?

We were unable to get hold of Mr. Reed, who apparently knows all about the gargoyles and other features of UC's peculiar architecture, but we hope soon to be able to clear up this mystery.

Please! No comments from the engineers.

In My Flying Machine

Have you ever felt like flying away from it all? Don't be frustrated, join the University of Toronto Flying Club and learn how. Known until 1952 as the Ajax Flying Club, this aerial group was founded by some enterprising engineers studying at Ajax, after the Second World War.

In recent years there has been increasing interest on the campus in flying, and many students, including co-eds, have joined the club, until it now has sixty members. In the past year, over four hundred hours have been flown.

Recently the club has concentrated on enabling students equipped only with the yen to fly, to obtain their license at the lowest possible rates. Another interest is the group flights, which are organized during the school term.

Typical of these breakfast flights was a highly successful jaunt to Niagara Falls last year, when a fleet of ten aircraft took off from the Island Airport one Sunday morning. It is not necessary to be an Amelia Earhart to participate in these flights.

The club operates in conjunction with Central Airways, and through a contract is able to offer new students greatly reduced rates, and adequate insurance coverage. This year, it is also offering a special half hour introductory flight for new members to see for themselves the pleasures of flying.

The opening meeting will be held Wednesday night at eight o'clock in Hart House. Just as in the Arbor Room, women are welcome.

Flight Run

These amateur aeronauts have the pen on private flying and will gladly pass the word along to interested students. Just trip any of these characters as they trip along the campus walks, and they will tell you how to join the most highflying club on the U. of T. campus.

A M & D Around Town

In Convocation Hall Ralph Vaughan Williams, the English composer will lecture on October 8 on the subject What Is the Background of Music. This will be his first stop in a coast to coast lecture tour, followed by talks at the Universities of Michigan, Chicago, Indiana and California.

The first meeting of a Madrigal group started last year will be held on Monday, October 11th at 4.30 p.m. in the Royal Conservatory of Music, Room 103. Contact Michael Oliver (II Music) WA. 2-9254 if you have any two of the following requisites: enthusiasm; ability to sing more or less in tune; a hint of sight-reading.

Rev. D. Lord's Marian Year Pageant, Joy to the World, will be presented Oct. 8th to 16th in the Coliseum at the Exhibition Park. Cast of thousands includes two CBC announcers, Robert Burns and Leslie Roscos; the Volko Ballet and the Canadian School of Ballet directed by Gwyneth Lloyd and singers, Jon Vickers and Rosemary Burns.

The Earle Grey Shakespeare Festival Company is doing Twelfth Night for its sixth tour.

Art classes under Carl Schaeffer start to-night in Hart House at 7.30 p.m.

INTRAMURAL SET-UP CHANGED

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

Last Saturday afternoon, while the Blues were holding forth in Sarnia, and the Argonauts were absorbing another merciless shellacking in Varsity Stadium, we silently slipped across to the back campus to watch another set of Varsity Blues involve themselves in the mother game, to wit: rugger.

Unlike their brothers who perform before crowds of people in huge amphitheatres, the rugger Blues played for one full hour without relief, except for a five-minute rest at the half-time mark. And all this, as behooves the tradition of the game, was without the benefit of pads.

Being used to the relatively orderly approach to the situation as exhibited in Canadian football, we were surprised at the seeming disorder displayed on the field. It appears to be much more difficult to score, and by that token the 26-0 win recorded by the Blues last Saturday would conceivably compare to a 50-0 football score.

However, learned observers informed us that there was a purpose in the apparent brawl before us. And after due consideration we began to see the light. Each team is composed of fifteen players, eight of which are called forwards, whose job it is to be the scrum.

They lock heads and arms with their opposition forming a great mass of humanity over the ball, which appears to be secondary at that moment. Their next move is to push the ball back to the three-quarters by any means available, but mostly with their feet in a process called "heeling".

The remaining seven players are the three-quarters, who might be compared to our backfield. Having received the ball from scrum, they attempt to run, pass or kick it over the goal-line, to score a try. This, as we have already said, is not as easy as it seems. That's it in a nutshell.

The system of scoring is different also. For a try (our touchdown), the team gets three points. They then attempt to convert the try for two extra points. At any time during the game, a player may drop kick the ball over the crossbar and between the uprights for three points, but this is a rare occurrence.

Rugger appears to have all the characteristics of a team sport at its best, for besides being a test of physical endurance, it requires the ultimate in team spirit and co-operation to produce the end result. But perhaps most important of all, it does not exaggerate the importance of its own purpose; it never pretends to be anything more than a game.

A thwarted aspirant to the Baby Blues, at the bottom of the football ladder, can find ample excuse for expending his energy on the back campus any afternoon at 4.00. In fact, those who fear inactivity by sitting on the bench need not worry any more. There is no rest for anybody, as these bears for punishment fight it out each afternoon.

In the midst of unlimited substitution, shoulder, hip and kidney pads, forward passes, and all the other conveniences of our own game of football, it is refreshing to see people playing a game such as rugger, where there is nothing to be gained and plenty to lose.

Teams Can Now Switch Groups Small Faculties May Cop Reed

Last night's second meeting of the Intramural Sports Committee provided at least one interesting change in the awarding of points in the Reed Trophy race.

The whole process was touched off by a request from the School of Law to enter their basketball team in First Division play this year instead of Second Division, as well as a request by the Faculty of Forestry for their being Reed Trophy points for Interfaculty football competition.

After much discussion, the committee settled upon a motion, augmented by two amendments, which will provide for the granting of both the above requests.

The motion goes something like this: That any College or Faculty in the Second Division, after application to the Intramural Sports Committee, and subject to their approval, may enter a team from their school in First Division play, however a team from the First Division may not go down to the Second Division. In order to provide for the school in question winning a championship in both divisions, Reed Trophy points will be awarded in such circumstances only on the basis of one championship and one finalist, but the actual finalist in the Second Division will continue to receive their points.

This paved the way for Forestry who now will receive points for their efforts, as no other team from the Second Division plays football.

Law's request was founded on the fact that they expect to have a very strong quintet, with three ex-Blues playing. Their move is to be commended as they would probably sweep the Second Division with such a team.

Congratulations are due to Meds' Jim Wilkes who was elected to the University's Athletic Directorate from the Committee. Also a bow of the head to Law's Jack Burnett who will chair the Committee this year, and his vice-chairman Ron Campbell from Pharmacy.

IMPORTANT MEETING

There will be an important meeting of all male and female members of the sports staff at 1:15 today. The presence of Chuck Dolman, Harold Cohen, Ed Beder, Bill Ekersley, Lloyd Fraser, Max Rosenthal, Doug Geekie, Dick von Hendy, Tom Lally, Mike dePencier, Walt Schmida, Bill Chadwick and John Vojteek will be required so that we may discuss the evaluation of past work.

RUGGER

Vic and St. Hildas Trounce UC, Meds In Girls' Softball

Justifying pre season rumours, Vic I opened the women's softball league yesterday with an 8-4 victory over UC at Trinity field.

UC started out strongly with Claire McMill batting in 2 runs in the first inning to overcome Vics 1 run edge. Vic, however, under the tremendous pitching of Marg Ann Gimmel was able to hold UC to only 2 more runs scored by Ann Miller and Karen Woolings.

Jackie Wickware was also a star on the Vic squad hitting a home run in the 3rd inning to drive in 3 runs. Despite steady playing by Mary Crow who came in from first base to take over the pitching chore, UC couldn't overcome this lead. Alicia File and Mary Foster played well in the field for Vic. UC lost a good player in Sally Waigle who went out with a sprained ankle.

In a second game played yesterday St. Hilda's walloped Meds 16-4 at the Southwest Stadium.

Upset In Net Tournament Final Matches On Today

The relatively unknown doubles team of Don Cummings and K. Dixon provided the excitement in the quarter-finals of the Interfaculty Tennis Tournament with a hard fought 8-10, 6-2, 6-4, upset over the second seeded team of Harry Hall and Tattle. In the other match first seeded Lawson and Logie continued their winning ways defeating Brown and Smith 6-4, 6-2.

The doubles finals will be held Tuesday 2:30 at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club.

In singles competition Hal Brown (SPS) gave first seeded Ken Lawson (Vic) a hard battle before succumbing 6-2, 7-5. In the best singles match of the day fourth seeded Bill Grove (Vic) defeated fifth seeded Bruce Sonley (UC) 6-2, 4-6, 6-4.

Other singles play saw Robin Logie (Trin) despatched Doug Alexander (SPS) 6-3, 6-1, and Robin Arnold (Meds) downed John Tattle (SPS) 6-3, 6-3.

At 11:30 Tuesday Lawson goes against Grove and, at 12:30 Logie takes on Arnold. The finals in the singles competition will be held Wednesday at 2:30.

Incidentally the results of this tournament determine the members of this years intercollegiate tennis teams.

Hardly sporting this, or perhaps it is, but that well-known campus daily, the Varsity, is holding the first of its wild, unruly, never - before - seen - on - the - campus parties, this Friday night at one of its many subversive meeting places. All the attributes of a hell of a good brawl will be present, and that's where the sports staff comes in.

Further details may be obtained upon application (in writing) to the Varsity's head office in the basement of the SAC building opposite UC.

SWIMMER PARK, "TIRED OF FLOATERS," SETS CATALINA RECORD

Tom Park of Hamilton, Ont., centre, says he swam Catalina channel in California because he was tired of hearing of "floaters" who tried and failed. In swimming the 22-mile current-ridden channel, Park set a new record of 18 hours, 31 seconds. First Canadian to conquer the channel was George Young, Toronto, in 1927. Park, shown as he was wrapped in blankets after coming ashore at Palos Verdes, Calif., made no announcement of his swim beforehand.

LACROSSE

Due to the large number of inexperienced players taking part in Interfaculty play this year, the Lacrosse Standing Committee has arranged for two periods of instruction to be held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings this week between 6.00 and 8.00 in the main gym of Hart House.

Experienced men from the campus will form a mock team, as well as officials to call the play. The instruction will take the form of actual live demonstration followed by explanation.

Among the players taking part in the demonstration are Law's Al Eagleson, Meds' Chuck Bull, UC's Blyth Brown, and Barney Warren, Jerry Sukmanowski, and Emil Uhrynuk. All interested boxers aspirants are urged to attend this demonstration.

Mural Golf Completed Varsity Teams Picked

If yesterdays scores are any indication Varsity's intercollegiate golf team will be stronger than ever. Bill Miller (Vic) (77.76) 153 led the 16 entries in the Interfaculty Golf Tournament at the York Downs course, the winners of which compose the intercollegiate team. The high for 18 holes was registered by second place Don Cossar SPS who carded a sensational 75 on a course which was quite "short" yesterday.

In light of yesterdays match the Senior team will consist of Bill Miller (Vic), Don Cossar (SPS), Don Hewson SPS, and Hugh Sampson (Vic). While Dick Thompson SPS, Bob Pezack UC, Neville Monteith SPS and Tom Thompson SPS compose the intermediate squad.

Kingston Will Tell About Marilyn Bell

One of the most sterling records to be made in the past few years has just hit the radio stations, juke boxes and all other media used to carry musical sounds to the public. Jack Kingston, star of Main Street Jam-boree, has come forward with a solid piece of music entitled "How Far Is She Now?"

This brand new wax effort is dedicated to Marilyn Bell and provides the listener with a dramatic blow by blow account of this young Toronto girl's heroic swim across Lake Ontario. Mr. Kingston relates how he will "always remember the eighth of September" when "from Youngstown, New York, to the C.N.E. port" Marilyn swam from "shore to shore." Thrilling in its narrative and unexcelled for musical quality this record is a must to be heard to be appreciated.

LETTER

The Editor,
The Varsity.

The controversy on the campus about religious illiteracy has stimulated comments about comparative religion. If studies of comparative religion are to be beneficial, they must result in the gleaning of the essential truths contained in each of them.

Students of the Bahai World Faith believe that if the great religions of the world are studied in a search for these truths, there will result, not merely a knowledge of the history of separate religious developments but an understanding of their spiritual continuity and unity.

"If religion be not the cause of unity it would be better there were no religion." Baha'ullah.

CCF Leader Is Visitor At Debate

The leader of the Ontario CCF party, Donlad C. MacDonald, will be the guest speaker at the first Hart House Debate to be held on the 13th of October.

Resolved that "The Province of Ontario has had good government for the past five years" will be the topic for the debate.

The resolution will be upheld by Ted Rogers, II Trinity, and Joe Slogan, III Dents, first vice-president and councillor, respectively, of the Progressive Conservative Association of the University of Toronto.

The resolution will be opposed by Ed Lowry, IV UC, President of the Campus Liberal Association and Al Borovoy, Literary Chairman of the CCF Club.

Political Neutrals (?) Form IPA

By JOE AZIZ
The Independent Progressive Association, its head still swirling from the injustice done to it last year when it was refused representation in the Mock Parliament, is hoping for a more successful attempt this year.

The IPA is an independent party peculiar only to the Toronto campus, and has no party affiliations or parent group anywhere else.

It claims to have provided the main interest and attractions for the last three years at the Mock Parliament Committee of the Political Economy Club.

In order to understand the IPA, it is necessary to examine its purposes and to do that is to see the reason for the existence of the party itself.

These purposes of the IPA are: To stimulate interest in the minds of the many apathetic students on campus, and to make them take a more active part in the field of politics; and to provide an outlet for students who wish to project new thoughts and new ideas into the political life of the University. In other words it is a political testing ground. Since the other Varsity parties are merely reiterating what their political superiors tell them, the IPA feel it is unique because its ideas breed only in the minds of the members themselves.

It is impossible to define the platform of this party because it is different every year. You can neither say that IPA is crusading for labour, nor that it is backing big business. It is neither, and it could be either at one time or another. The platform is voted upon at an annual meeting of the IPA and this decides the issue for that year.

The IPA claim it is ideal for those, who in view of their circumstances after graduation, prefer to be politically neutral. Civil servants in training at the U of T may perhaps find this helpful because they can learn the intricate workings of the parliamentary system and yet not commit themselves to any political party.

The IPA is not an established party on campus because it was only founded a few years ago.

What's news at Inco*?

We freeze 300 tons of oxygen a day out of the air

Every two minutes in this modern plant, a blast like an elephant's snort tells of a modern miracle that is taking place. Under pressure at 280° below zero, air is being liquefied and the oxygen separated from nitrogen and other elements. The blast is caused by the expulsion of the nitrogen.

The oxygen, thus obtained from the air, is conducted through a pipe-line to the smelter where it is used in Inco's new oxygen process of flash smelting the copper concentrates. This process eliminates the use of coal and makes possible the economical production of a valuable by-product—sulphur dioxide—which eventually is used in making paper.

This oxygen plant, the first of its size and kind in Canada, produces more than twice as much oxygen per year as all other plants in this country. It is one example of the way Inco introduces new economies and finds uses for by-products formerly without value.

UC LIT VETOES TV SET, POOL TABLE AS TANGIBLE GIFT TO MEN'S RESIDENCE

Residence Bloc Battles Four Hours Motion Defeated By Slight Majority Five-man Committee Will Investigate

A motion to spend $400 on a television set—or a new pool table—as a “gift” to the new “million-and-a-half-dollar University College men’s residence” was defeated here last night at the most spirited UC Literary Society session in years.

At times, the meeting, attended by over a hundred UC Literary Society members, threatened to explode wide open into a veritable donnybrook.

The discussion was over a $400 fund which has been accumulated by the UC Lit. Society for several years.

Called the “tangible gift” fund, the money had been earmarked by the society for expenditure on a gift for University College.

Dissension arose at yesterday’s inaugural session of the Literary Society when a block of students from the new residence turned up and jostled to have the money spent on a gift to the residence.

Almost a dozen motions, amendments to motions and amendments to amendments arose from the floor before the three - and - a - half hour debate ground to a stop.

The debate opened at 4 o’clock. It was nearly 8 p.m., before Honorary President Carmen Guild ordered the meeting adjourned.

At the end of the session, two matters had been settled:

1) The motion to turn the fund over as a “gift” to the UC men’s residence had been defeated for the time being — although by a narrow majority.

2) A five-member committee had been ordered set up to look into the matter and to bring in a recommendation in two weeks.

The five - member committee will be comprised of two representatives of the Men’s Residence, two members of the Literary Society executive and an “impartial” fifth party to be chosen by the other members of the committee.

Nevertheless, at the end of the meeting, it appeared that a serious rift between resident and non-resident students of University College had been averted.

The debate ended in a spontaneous outbreak of floor-thumping and college spirit when Literary Society President Marty Friedlander arose and said he hoped the meeting might set a precedent for more spirited UC activities.

This was an optimistic note, it appeared, after a meeting which had seen Honorary President Carmen Guild frantically rapping his gavel for some semblance of order.

From the moment President Friedlander arose and proposed a compromise over the question, the tension was terrific. As the debate advanced it became almost unbearable.

At one point, External Affairs Chairman Peter Martin lashed out with, “Let’s act like rational human beings, not like animals.” Martin was arguing not to turn the money over for use in the men’s residence.

Scolded Secretary of the Society Jack Rose at another juncture of the scrap: “You’re all being very selfish . . . You’re not thinking of the good of the college but only of yourselves. How in hell you have the nerve to come in here and ask more money from us when you have a nice new place, I don’t know.”

The UC Lit. executive spearheaded objections to hand over the entire $400 to the residence.

When President Friedlander offered to reach a compromise by splitting the $400 — by giving $200 to the men’s residence

Scene set in Hart House for film of universities

The blinding glare of powerful flood lights penetrated the medieval gloom of the Hart House Great Hall last night as a CBC camera crew completed the filming of various aspects of U. of T. life for presentation this coming Sunday evening on the television feature, CBC Newsmagazine.

The various university crests emblazoned on the walls of the Great Hall came in for much attention as John Rooke and Jack Judges of the CBC completed their filming operations. Rooke, a former managing editor of The Varsity, recently filmed a meeting of Massey Harris strikers for the same CBC programme.

The camera crew moved into the Great Hall shortly after 6 last night, in the middle of the supper-hour rush. They trundled king-sized spotlights into the packed hall and throughout the meal treated members to blinding bursts of light.

Garth McDowell, Undergraduate secretary of the house, said, “The whole thing was a big surprise to me, and the first I knew of the business was when they began setting up the lights and unrolling wire.”

Varsity editor Clyde Batten exchanged a few pleasantries with Rooke as the latter recalled some of his experiences as managing editor of the paper in the years just after the Second World War. “That was back in the days when undergraduates were gentlemen,” Rooke laughed.

CBC newsmagazine is a weekly feature seen at 7.30 p.m. Sundays. The shots taken in Hart House will be used as part of a longer film story about Canadian Universities. The Universities of Toronto and Montreal will be emphasized but UBC, Manitoba, McMaster, McGill, and Dalhousie will also be given some attention.

Rooke’s recent filming of the Massey Harris union meeting brought on editorial comment by a downtown daily which objected to the fact that parts of the film containing cuss words were not deleted. “Despite the protests which appeared in the paper” said Rooke, “we received no complaints from viewers.”

The University of Toronto will be represented in another TV series to be viewed this fall when the programme Exploring Minds returns to the CBC television network.

Sanderson Urges Reading For Maturity, Enjoyment

“Read nothing you don’t enjoy” urged Dr. C. R. Sanderson, Chief of the Toronto Public Libraries, at a Hart House Library talk on “Why Rother To Read?.” “Read books that you find enjoyable” Dr. Sanderson explained, adding, “I’m not talking about your studies now!”

The literature published since the last war is more bad progressions than the type produced by the bitter and disillusioned young men of the First World War. There is no answer to the question “What must one read?” The answer to the “must” in reading is that everyone is different, he continued.

Most of what we need to know comes from experience. Few friends can add to this store of necessary knowledge. “We read to mental maturity,” Dr. Sanderson said.

The worthwhile books are those which cause us to think, the books that bring out the best in us. The best way to accomplish this is, of course, by reading.

What not to read is easier to say than what to read. Dr. Sanderson humorously illustrated an example of a book with a dramatic monologue of a old plot and characters.

Read a bit of poetry every day, if you find only twenty poems out of 1000 that you like, it is well worthwhile. Poetry does something to ones soul. It is a kind of beauty in a world preoccupied with material things in a world that is bitter.

To the question “what to read?” Dr. Sanderson suggested “sequential reading” that is reading which ties together into a body of knowledge; a crisp body at that.

From plays one learns something of human nature and one begins to think about human nature. Reading adds to our souls, to the richness of our lives.

“Personally I never read best sellers,” Dr. Sanderson said, “they are only one kind of book which he termed ‘romantic.’ A more valuable novel is the realistic ritual school of realism.”

Antiquity Attracts Admirers

Since 1952 the Grecian class has doubled its converts yearly, from a mere four to the grand total this year of twenty-four. Could it be a mere fill-in for the increasingly difficult time-tables?

“No!” said Dr. Woodbury, of the UC Classics Department. “The course is too difficult for anyone except the faithful.”

It must be that romantic aroma of antiquity surrounding such things as Greek, decayed Egyptian mummies, old Neanderthal bones and skulls, that intrigue the students.

Translations of Greek are inadequate. More and more students are thirsting for the philosophical meanings behind those twisted little letters. If this amazing interest in Grecian antiquity continues, in no time at all (say fifty years) professors in long white robes and curly garlanded hair will be holding informal tete-a-tetes with students on the corner of Hoskia and St. George.

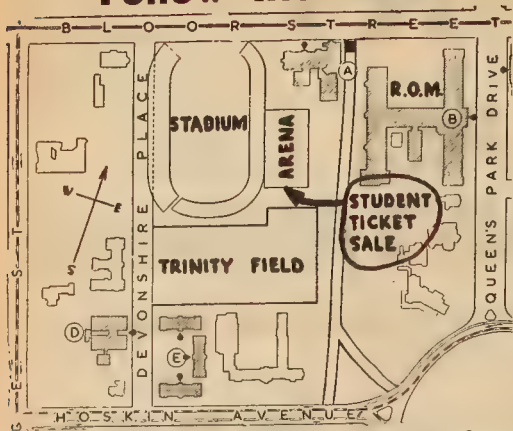

Riot At Queen’s Frosh Punished

Kingston, Oct. 5 (CUP) — Two Queen’s University students have been fined as a result of last week’s rioting in the streets of downtown Kingston. Bob Heilig and Stan Pettit were both ordered to pay ten dollars and costs. Police said that Pettit was tampering with a manhole cover and Heilig was accused of letting the air out of a police cruiser’s tires.

The pair were taken into custody last Tuesday during a downtown freshman celebration that featured a snake dance along Kingston’s main thoroughfare. The dance wound up in front of the city police station where a cruiser was pushed into the front door breaking glass and destroying the casing.

It took 20 city policemen armed with fire hoses and billys to route the 300 rampaging frosh.

Dear Mother: Well here I am at University but so far things have been very uneventful, in fact hardly anything has happened and I have had only fifteen dates in the last two weeks but I expect this will soon be remedied since I have just bought a new red sweater which is two sizes too small.

A very exciting thing happened the other day when they opened a new room where us girls can go and get picked up. It is all decorated with cartoon drawings and curtains and actually is a pretty good place to get a date. It is in a place called Heart House which as you can see by the spelling is very symbolic of the things that go on there now. On opening day I just walked in and sat down when at least six fellows started to give me the eye. Maybe it was because I sort of let my skirt slip up when I sat down.

But don't worry, I soon fixed that by pulling it down a bit so it was only an inch or so above my knees. Then I just sat there with one hand on my hip and the other behind my head, and started taking deep breaths. In no time at all two or three fellows came over and started talking to me. After a while we got up and went for a walk along Philosopher's walk to a place called the King Cole room.

It's just like a big milk bar except that they serve beer. We call black car with a convertible roof.

It must of been a long time later when I woke up because I was in his apartment, don't worry I was only on the chesterfield. Tony said he had taken off my clothes so that they wouldn't get wrinkled. Naturally I still had something on but he had put a blanket over me so that I wouldn't get cold.

Tony asked me if I would like a drink of something and I said yes. It tasted pretty good but after a while I went to sleep again and when I woke up it was morning.

Tony drove me back to residence and it was just in time to get a copy of The Varsity which is our University paper. In it I read an article about a funny thing that happens to girls in their second year at university but I don't think it will happen to me then. However I will have to have a long talk with you when I come home for the Thanksgiving weekend. Love to all,

Your loving daughter Gilda.

Music Undergrads Announce Changes

it "draught". It tastes sort of strong at first but after four or five you don't notice the taste and you start to feel sort of funny. Well I had about ten of these draughts and so did the boys. I said I would like to go home and that's when the fight started. All the boys started arguing about who was going to take me and finally a bunch of waiters in white coats, (garçons, we call them) came over and took all the boys out. I just sat there for a while and finally a tall man came over and started to talk to me.

U. of M. Deficit Seen for 1954

Winnipeg (Cup) — The University of Manitoba Students' Union suffered a $760.90 deficit for its operations for the fiscal year ending June 1954.

Student Union treasurer Miles Pepper said the deficit was the first one incurred since 1945. Mr. Pepper added that "it is primarily due to losses sustained by the Brown and Gold, student year book, which had a debit of $1,341.35. Other losses were attributed to the Manitoban, a newspaper, a campus telephone directory and Women's Association activities.

Chief money maker was the Glee Club production of Song of Norway which netted more than $3,000 in profits.

Grads Given $6,000

E. A. Laverne J. B. Moffat F. J. Chambers T. W. Barry

Fellowships totalling $6,000 have been awarded by the University of Toronto to four graduate students doing work here, it was learned yesterday. The fellowships are the gift of the Union Carbide Canada, Ltd., and were donated to "encourage academic research in all branches of the natural and social sciences."

Actually, the four Toronto fellowships comprise only half of those given by the company. Four other scholarships totalling $6,000 were announced for McGill University simultaneously with the Toronto news release.

The company has also sponsored 18 undergraduate, $500-scholarships to universities all across the dominion. Mr. W. L. Kennedy, publicity liaison of the company said that the scholarships would be renewed each year of the normal three or four-year undergraduate course.

This is the first year that the company has offered the scholarships and fellowships.

"The purpose of the fellowships and scholarships," Mr. Kennedy said, "is to try to build up an interest on the part of university students in business."

Mr. Kennedy said that the awards had been made by the university on the basis of "interest in business".

At the university, here, Thomas W. Barry, M.A.Sc., of Etobicoke, a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Engineering will work on the problem "Studies in Binary Liquid Phase Systems", under the direction of Professor A. I. Johnson.

Fergus J. Chambers, B.A., of Norwich, Ont., is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Political Economy.

Edgar A. Lavergne B.Sc., of Toronto is Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Chemical Engineering and will work on the problem "Rate of Approach to Equilibrium in Liquid-Liquid Extraction". Lavergne will work under Dr. Johnson.

John Blain Moffat, B.A., of Owen Sound, is now working on the problem "Study of Sintering of Sodium Chloride" under the direction of Professor R. L. McIntosh of the Department of Chemistry.

SHARE With Potna

Health Centre in Indian Town Aim of '54 SHARE Campaign

The university town of Potna, India, is the object this year of the SHARE campaign. Each year SHARE has a specific project to undertake. The goal this year is to build a health centre for Potna.

Enrolled at the Potna University are 26,000 students, of which 80-85 per cent are in bad need of medical attention, according to a World University Service Report. "Tuberculosis, malnutrition, and dysentery are common among them. They have few texts; they live in entirely impoverished conditions — a poverty both of mind and body."

From the 25th of October till the first of November, SHARE will be canvassing for funds. The objective this year will probably be about $5,000, less than 50c per student. Canvassing will be headed by staff representatives to canvass everybody personally. A thermometer in front of the SAC office will give a daily report of progress.

SHARE will handle other functions as well — such as parking cars at football games — in order to raise funds. A banquet will be held on Oct. 25, the first day of canvassing, at which SHARE is planning to have a prominent speaker.

At last week's SAC meeting, it was brought out that from now on SHARE campaigns will no longer be exclusively for Asian Relief and Education. (SHARE formerly stood for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education). Ron Gould, the SAC Rep. from UC, said that from now on SHARE aid will be distributed to all countries which need aid, such as South Africa where Premier Malan's segregation policies have prevented negroes from obtaining an education.

SHARE is one of the many activities run through the parent organization, The World University Service.

socialism for heaven on earth

By O. PIDHAINI

Socialists on our campus, like Socialists in general, are serious creatures. Burthened with knowledge of imminent Decline and Fall, unless their way prevails, they may be excused for taking a sober view of the world. And then, being quite frivolous, I cannot be expected to fathom the profundity and pithiness of the minds of the Socialists of the University.

I don't mind their stolidity but I dislike that disappointed point of view and that insistence on negation. For our visionaries, all things are foul in the state of Denmark.

Let's look at the latest issue of CAMPUS COMMENT, the independent journal of this campus. An article on Learnin'! Conclusions: No money. No good. Dupessis? No money. No good. Freshmen? You are lucky. You have money. Others don't. No good. Mosley? A Fascist. No good. Americans? They might start a war. No good. U.C. Residence? After all, the residence was built to help people out-of-town Socialists are so solicitous about. Yet: No beauty. Reaction! (in art). No good!

I agree that it is a poor state of affairs that many cannot afford to study. I dislike Dupessis intensely. I think Mosley was ridiculous. And there is too much Prussianism in the new Residence. But . . .

But isn't the new library just terrific (Intellectual Socialists, take notice.) Isn't Dr. Smith (for those looking for good will) properly benign? Isn't the food at Hart House (of importance to the economic-minded) quite excellent. And then (for the starchy-eyed naive type) do not "un ciel enchante, un air pur et délicieux" portent dans l'ame une langueuse secrette (Chateaubriand). For the ethical type, how about Love which just shines forth from the blue eyes of coeds.

But no, the Socialist mourns and shall not be comforted. For the country has gone to the dogs. Like the state of Jerusalem she sold her to Interests and she made an abomination of herself in the sight of the Lord. And whatever she might even do would be of no avail. And if she would try even to adorn herself, it would be like unto painting her eyebrows and lips to only increase her abominations. But the Lord is terrible in His wrath. He will give her into the hand of the Interests and they will take away her robes of wheat and clover and they shall stone her with stones and thrust her with their swords . . .

The U of T Socialist is a fellow with a dark eye and a chip on his shoulder. He is always against the powers that be, no matter how, when or what they might accomplish. Loving the world he sees continually nothing but dirt, squalor, meanness, unworthiness, cowardice, inhumanity. Being an idealist, he always sneers.

I say, it is right to laugh stupidity out of court, pretence of its imagined majesty, hypocrisy of its pretended sanctity. It is right to show up the lack of imagination, it is right to try to clear up the thoughts of man.

But is it right to neglect the beautiful and the useful? Is it right to sneer, to always sneer and do nothing but sneer?

It is a pity that of all students it had to be Socialists who had enough individualistic initiative to publish a paper in the teeth of people who do not care. It is a pity that they do not realize that only the average level may be heightened, that the whole scale from worst to best is to remain, condemning them to eternal "agin' ship." The world was not given less happiness, for having misery, not less endowed with intelligence, for hiding stupidity, not less great, for being somewhat mean.

Socialists are likeable creatures but they do not create.

P.S.—I just read the very latest issue. It is only very slightly sunnier.

Aristotle, Early Poetry, Etal In Anderson's Lecture at UC

There was "standing room only" in the Croft Chapter House at University College as Dr. Fulton H. Anderson, head of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Toronto and at University College addressed the first meeting of the University of Toronto Philosophical Society on the subject "Philosophy and Poetry". Dr. Anderson discussed the subject from the epistemological viewpoint, tracing the development of poetry through history and its connection with philosophy.

The roots of poetry and philosophy both lie in the early Greek poets, Homer and Hesiod, he said. Religion, morals, politics, and literature all began with the early Greek poets and for a long time there was no separation made.

The first separation and criticism of the poets was made by Plato who saw that the poets were filled with immoralities and were highly dangerous to the state as they were almost the sole basis of education. Plato placed the poets at the lowest level of knowledge and at the furthest remove from truth. His pupil, Aristotle, continued the criticism ranking poetry in the first epistemological level, that of production. This made poetry of the same order as the making of boots. Aristotle did, however, say that each should be judged by its own.

Later, poetry took on a moral significance. The poetry of the early Christian era was used as a vehicle of moralizing. Poetry, by the end of the Roman Empire was right back where it was at the time of Homer.

Poetry emerged from the middle ages a combination of logic, poetic and rhetoric. Rhetoric is then gradually replaced by reasoned theology. It was then that poetry became morally acceptable and was embraced by the moralists. Then said Dr. Anderson, was poetry "rescued, and placed in moral servitude. In the nineteenth century art was judged as exempt from morals. Discussion was still on as the Varsity went to press.

Residents Bloc

and retaining the other $200 in the already established fund — a motion was promptly voted down.

Students' Administrative Council representative Ron Gould raised a ticklish question when he wanted to know whether the gift could be turned over to the residence when it had already been appropriated as a gift to the college.

Honorary President Guild ducked his head at the question. "I don't like to appear like a coward on things like this," he stated, "but I don't know — the residence is known as the residence of University College."

Things happened rapidly after this: In an attempt to stem the pro-residence vote someone asked that everyone in the hall (the meeting was held in the Junior Common Room) produce his Admit-to-Lecture card.

A motion to split the $400 between the Literary Society and the residence was voted down. A motion to accept a gift from the society of $200 was also promptly voted down.

The atmosphere became charged with suspense when a motion to turn the entire $400 over to the Residence — the most important motion of the session — was moved and seconded from the floor.

Literary Director John Roberts, and Secretary Jack Rose spoke consecutively against the motion. Then the debate was brought sharply to an end when Ted Honderich, a non-executive member of the society, arose and moved the debate be closed. John Gamble hurriedly seconded it.

But still more drama was injected when someone asked for another check on identity. Literary Director John Roberts wanted to make sure that ATL cards corresponded with those holding them.

The door was closed and fresh signatures were carefully scrutinized against those on ATL cards. During the confusion several weary members, fed up with the length of the meeting which threatened to drag on interminably, left the floor.

Impatient calls came to take the vote. President Friedlander interrupted with suggestion of another motion to set up a five-member committee to investigate "this catastrophic business".

When the vote was finally taken the apple-cart was upturned: by a narrow majority the vote ran against turning the money over for use in the residence.

Later, the members agreed to leave the question in the hands of the committee for recommendation in two weeks.

POT Chorus Line Now In Training

"Down and jump and split and . . . that's it girls. Just fine." Such were the commands resounding through the P.O.T. huts last night as Arlene Patterson, a veteran of All-Varsity Revue Times put POT's, hopeful of taking part in the forthcoming engineering Skule Nite, through their paces.

Producer Bruce Raymond and a lucky pianist were the only males amongst some twenty charming dancers who Raymond expects to form an integral part of the skit show to take place starting Nov. 16. However, workers are still needed, both female and engineers, and the management will audition any such aspirants.

This Finite Vale

Appearing at the top of this column is a symbol which has aroused some curiosity on the part of certain readers.

Actually this is a symbolic representation of the pursuit of truth. We have in the picture a deer and in the background Ursa Major. The deer is the object of search on earth and Orion relentlessly pursues Ursa Major through the skies.

It may appear to be overly altruistic but we hope that this paper will play some role in initiating in someone the search for the truth which is life's chief glory and final end.

Beyond this vale of limited finite knowledge there must surely exist, as Plato's sun, the world of ultimate truth.

Towards that world we run as Pheidippides and even though we fall at its gates we may say with him "Chair-e-te nikomen."

Towards that world we work in order, as Thomas Wolfe has said, "To loose the earth you know, for greater life; to leave the friends you loved for greater loving; to find a land more kind than home, more large than earth — Whereon the pillars of this world are founded, toward which the conscience of the world is tending — a wind is rising, and the rivers flow".

It's All Yours

An effigy burning at the University of British Columbia, a riot of Queens, a hurricane at Dalhousie . . . and minutes later the news is flashed to university campuses all over Canada. This fast dissemination of news is made possible through the facilities of the Canadian University Press.

In addition to this telegraph service, the CUP also has an agreement which allows any member paper to "Lift" articles from other members. Credits of course are implied in the dateline.

By these two methods Canadian students on all campuses are kept aware of what is happening across the country.

Each year the CUP holds a conference and delegates from all the major universities attend and exchange technical information, as well as expressing opinions on a wide number of topics. In fact, the CUP is the only truly national conference of Canadian University students. Unlike NFCUS and other organizations the CUP has a reputation for providing valuable service, and promoting a real understanding between various universities.

With these words of introduction to CUP the editors of THE VARSITY invites you to pay close attention to the various items with the CUP dateline and also to the new CUP column entitled PIGEON HOLE. Through these two mediums it is hoped that University of Toronto men and women will be kept informed of student activities in Canada and abroad.

The Undergraduate Daily

As an undergraduate paper THE VARSITY must always try to be of interest to the students who support it financially through their fees.

So far we have very little criticism from people outside the staff and we feel sure that this is not because everyone is overcome by the splendid job we are doing.

The recommendations of the students with regard to content or format will be welcomed.

In addition to this verbal criticism, we would welcome assistance in the reporting and make-up spheres of the paper.

the guaranteed wage

by Staff Writer

Strategy is being mapped in Toronto that may revolutionize Canadian labor-management relations.

Executives of the United Steelworkers of America (CIO-CCL), experts in the rough and tumble of negotiation, are inching their way towards the elimination of one of the working man's biggest nightmares—layoffs.

Their solution is the guaranteed annual wage.

To obtain it, they are plotting a long-range course by which they hope to see the whole of Canadian organized labor join forces in an all-out showdown with management. By working a step at a time through conference, compromise and work in the political field, the Steelworkers hope to wear down opposition.

Specific provisions of the guaranteed wage vary, but essentially it involves substitution of an annual salary for hourly rated pay. Usually employees with three years' service are placed on a yearly payroll, guaranteed whether the company operates the full 12 months or not.

So far, no Canadian wage contract includes the guaranteed wage. Present union policy is to seek discussion of ways and means of applying it by a joint union-management committee. Several United States plants have adopted it.

The Steelworkers base their hopes on numbers and cooperation. With more than 70,000 members in 312 locals across the Dominion, the USWA is the biggest union in Canada. In addition to a tight hold in the nation's key steel mills and foundries, Steelworker locals represent employees in base metal and gold mines, aircraft, aluminum and magnesium industries. A recent innovation has been the organization of office workers' locals to unite front and back shop employees.

Through affiliation with the Canadian Congress of Labor, the Steelworkers are able to plot joint policy with other major unions such as the powerful United Auto Workers, the United Mine Workers and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees.

And standing behind the Canadian locals are the more than 1,100,000 members and 2,300 locals of the USWA in the United States and the 8,000,000 fellow members of unions affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO).

In 1938, when the union was in its infancy in Canada, steel wages averaged 33 cents an hour. Now they average $1.43. The work week has been cut from 56 hours to 40.

The Steelworkers have achieved their major policy objectives. First were across-the-board wage increases to lift wages to meet rising wartime and post-war costs. Then came adjustments in the salary range and the introduction of job classification based on evaluation of the difficulty of various jobs and pay graded with this in mind.

Third came parity between United States and Canadian wage rates.

Major companies, such as the Steel Company of Canada at Hamilton, have accepted the union demands. Smaller ones have accepted them in part. None has rejected them outright.

Battles with management, like that involving about a dozen gold mines in Northern Ontario last year, show the extent of outside help available. Unions from coast to coast poured money into the area. All told some $2,000,000 was supplied by Steelworker locals and outside unions.

The CCL sent in specially trained men to set up recreation, education, welfare and work projects to keep the men gainfully employed. And top flight labor negotiators at the scene and in Toronto moved in to help out with bargaining problems.

The Steelworkers weren't successful in their main objective—the union checkoff—but they got a wage increase.

The Steelworkers don't expect to get their guaranteed wage immediately. But as legislative department director Eamon Park of Toronto says:

"We only expect in terms of the next couple of agreements."

Our Political Institution

The Editor

The Varsity,

Your article on the Independent Progressive Association helps breed an unfortunate misconception about the activities of political party clubs on the campus. It claimed that these clubs merely reiterate what their political superiors tell them, making them useless for free discussion, and that some students do not want to become affiliated with any established party in fear of harming their careers.

I wish to point out that the most important function of a political party organization anywhere is that of selecting a group of men of ability and suitable philosophy who will be worthy of public support in forming a government. There is little justification in lamenting the incompetence or insincerity of government officials if you have not attended personally to their selection.

Finer Things

The Editor
The Varsity,

Surely your critic is being unnecessarily in the dark when, looking for virtues to mention in her review of "Sabrina", she concerns herself with such irrelevancies as a plot, screenplay and messrs. Wilder, Holden and Bogart. I suppose it is a good thing, really that someone appreciates the efforts of these gentlemen, but I went to see Audrey Hepburn.

Since the picture ran about an hour and a half and she was on the screen about half the time, I estimate that I saw around forty-five precious minutes of her, and in this drab world, what more can a reasonable man ask?

I fear I will see many silly pictures before she loses her charm or I, my infatuation, but there is no help for it. Though the clichés be falling thick as hailstones, wherever she appears I will be faithfully watching.

Brain Cragg,
IV U.C.

There are any number of people willing to use the good name of a party to gain their own ends, and they will unless you are their to stop them.

It is distressing to see that many capable people refuse to help the parties do this in fear of being branded. To these it should be sufficient to point out that Dwight Eisenhower used to be a Democrat and Winston Churchill has crossed the floor of the British House of Commons twice. It is also true that people who refuse to take a stand and tell the world are the most effective partners to the rise of Hitler, McCarthys and the like.

We should be very thankful to the small group valiant radicals in our society who preach absurdities, but ensure your right to talk sense. It is not very important which political party you support. If you can improve the standards of any one of them, you put greater demands on the others and in effect improve all of them.

From the outside it probably does appear that the political clubs consist of hopeful politicians mimicking the party line to gain promotion within it. With your help they could more effectively find the leaders they need, and on their success depends the survival of our political institutions.

Samoan Style

Coffee Dates

By BILL SMYTHE

The Samoan islanders are honest about it: the youth of the villages hold trysts on the beach or in the forests. Other tribes go gallumphing off to swipe women from still other tribes. But what do the subdued, anaemic, domesticated students do? They go out on coffee dates.

That's all very well, mind you. There's nothing wrong with the system that no coffee and one-quarter the conversation wouldn't cure. Coffee seems to produce lethargy; it encourages two people to sit in some noisy den, talking themselves into a state of complete boredom. The prattle is soon reduced to something like this:

"What did you do today?"
Gloomily. "Well, I went down to Eaton's to buy a skirt, and you know I met the most awful saleslady and she kept telling me that green was just the colour for me and you know that green doesn't suit me because remember last year when we went to that dance and met that fellow — you remember his name — and Oh I saw him the other day and guess who he was with — well anyway . . ."

"Yeh. Sam was his name."
Brightening. "Say, did yuh see the Blues work out last night? Boy, that new quarterback they've got sure is great. I betcha he was throwing the ball a good 80 yards. Boy, no effort at all. Boy."

And then silence slops all over the coffee table, until the girl says: "What did you do today?"

See what we mean? The only exciting part of the evening is when the couple return through the UC quadrangle (to provide entertainment for the cleaning ladies) or to the doors of the residence, to amuse passersby.

Any red-blooded Kwatuiti Indian would probably whoop into the residence and drag his screaming, but happy female off to the nearest den of iniquity. Or perhaps the female of the species would whoop into the men's residence.

It just goes to show. Our modern namby-pamby, wishy-washy civilization is on the decline. We'll loose the next war, the football games, and the Battle of the Posterior Bulge, all because of coffee dates.

Cine Club To Show Saitre Film

The French Cine-Club of University College is this year entering its fourth season on the Campus. It was formally organized in 1951-52 with six showings in the Royal Ontario Museum Theatre, and since then it has offered a complete series of French feature films and shorts to about eight hundred subscribers each year.

In 1951-52 the Cine-Club made a 10-minute educational film in French based on the high school text "Cours primaire de francais" and this film is now widely used in Ontario Secondary Schools. At present the Cine-Club is providing projectors and other equipment for the newly-constructed screening theatre in University College, where it is anticipated films, film strips and slides will be shown to students.

This year's series of eight modern French films will be divided between the Royal Ontario Museum Theatre (16 mm. films) and the Towne Cinema (35 mm. films), in order that the widest possible selection of fine films may be included. Four Friday showings will be held at the Museum; four Sunday evening showings at the Towne. Student subscriptions for the series of eight showings cost $2.00 and may be obtained in Room 55, University College.

First showing: Sartre's Les Jeux Sont Faits on Friday, October 8, at 4 p.m. in Royal Ontario Museum Theatre.

Critics In The Dark

The Egyptian

In The Egyptian, now playing at the Imperial, Michael Curtiz has devised a lengthy, serious elaboration of Mika Waltari's fantastically successful novel of a few years ago. I understand I will be going against the overwhelming tide of critical and public opinion when I say I didn't find it half as dull as it was cracked up to be. If nothing else, it convinced me that D. W. Griffith did not live in vain. There are surprising similarities in aim and effect between The Egyptian and the "period" sections of Intolerance; the difference lies, of course, in the fact that Intolerance did it so much better. The themes are even alike: the crucifixion, in one generation or another, of a noble, high-minded minority. In The Egyptian, the minority is the Aton cult of the Pharaoh Akenaton, in a period of history which the movies have never really exploited before. Scrupulous accuracy has been maintained in the sets and costumes; in countless ways this film is a miracle of scholarship and research. One slight historical inaccuracy rather discomfited me, however; I was assailed by the nasty suspicion that Akenaton was succeeded on the throne not by the warrior Horemheb but by the boy king Tutankhamon. Oh well, if Darryl F. Zanuck says so, so it must be.

Waltari's story of the Egyptian physician Sinuhe was crowded, lusty, full of incident. Cut to a couple of hours for motion picture purposes, it has lost much of the excitement which gave it interest and colour, and in place of it the director has substituted a serene, at times almost documentary approach in keeping with the peaceful nature of the worshippers of Aton and the awe generated by Mr. Zanuck's enormous budget. Almost bereft of humour, except in the wry performance of Peter Ustinov as the one-eyed servant Kafta, The Egyptian is left to the untender mercies of Cinemascope to generate the power and emotional breadth the story demands.

Unfortunately, Cinemascope loses out in the struggle: the essence of the dramatic film until the advent of the wide-screen often lay in the ability of the cameraman and the editor to catch the eye of viewer with a close shot, a sudden peep at an anguished face, an essential moment of intense action, a revealing movement. The varying of such shots, the terrifying effects which could be achieved by swift editing (even in Hollywood, where smooth transitions were a vital point of style) were the essence of the cinema, and in films made with a genius for such detail its greatest delights could be found. Sunset Boulevard and On the Waterfront, to name two totally unlike examples, are films where such techniques are brilliantly used. Intolerance is another. The nature of Cinemascope, however, forbids any such twiddling with the emotions. Imagine being slammed with a sudden series of close-ups of a clutching hand, a dripping tap, a banging screen door, all meant to convey the atmosphere of an empty house where someone has just committed suicide, and all fifty feet wide and fifteen tall!

So The Egyptian falls prey to its own conception; essentially a drama of ideas, its moments of spectacle are too few to carry the whole design. The monumental scenes are very fine, of their kind, however: especially the lion-hunt in the desert, where for a moment the film slips the leash of Cinemascope and indulges in some old-fashioned fast-cutting and moving camera work, and the burning of Thebes by Horemheb's soldiers, which takes excellent advantage of the delights of the Deluxe colour process and the real beauties of the wide screen. The performances, by the way, are a little above the usual standard of film spectacle. I only noticed one actress who had a tendency to speak her lines as if she were walking out of Lindy's instead of the Valley of the Kings.

One more paragraph to mention a fine film currently playing at the Savoy, a Swedish version of August Strindberg's Miss Julie. Starring Anita Bjork, who made her Hollywood debut recently in Night People, the film expands Strindberg's original somewhat, but retains brilliantly the play's atmosphere of passion thwarted by custom. The shifting, illusive style is utterly unlike the technique of most contemporary films. Miss Julie is an experimental film in the best and most rewarding sense of the word, and one of the most neglected motion pictures of the decade. A highly-anticipated campus production of the play is due at U.C. next week, and an analysis of both film and play would be absorbing.

Neel Pulls Strings In Hart House

Dr. Boyd Neel, Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music, has lately added another activity to his already crowded schedule. He has organized a chamber orchestra made up of Canada's outstanding instrumentalists. It will be called the Hart House Orchestra, perpetuating the name of the famous Hart House Quartet which performed all over North America and Europe in the 1920's and 30's.

His Excellency the Right Hon. Vincent Massey, C.H., Governor General of Canada, will be the Patron of the orchestra. The Massey family played a leading role in the development of the Hart House Quartet. The forming of this orchestra continues a tradition established over 35 years.

The purpose of this orchestra is threefold. Mr. Neel wishes it to provide an attractive outlet for the top Canadian talent graduating from the Conservatory. At present there are some graduates in the orchestra, and he intends gradually to include more in future. The second purpose is to bring to the smaller centres of Canada some of the music which they might otherwise never hear performed by a live orchestra. Accordingly, the orchestra will begin its career by giving concerts in Tillsonburg on Oct. 14, in Brantford on Oct. 21, and in Huntsville on Nov. 4. They are performing with a smaller group consisting of thirteen strings. While in Huntsville, Mr. Neel will present two

Dr. Boyd Neel, dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music, conducts before the microphones of the BBC network in England. He has now organized a chamber orchestra using the name of Hart House to carry on the tradition of the Hart House Quartet of the 20's. The orchestra is giving concerts in Tillsonburg on Oct. 14, in Brantford on Oct. 21, and in Huntsville on Nov. 4. Later the orchestra will appear on one of the regular Hart House Sunday Concert series.

The third, and possibly the most important from the standpoint of the University, is the eventual establishment of a regular series of concerts on the campus. In this way, Mr. Neel hopes that the orchestra will become a real and integral part of the University, from which the students will benefit as much as possible. Hart House has opened all of its facilities to the group, and an inauguration concert there is planned for this season.

Mr. Stuart Nall, of the Public Relations Department of the Royal Conservatory, outlined some of the activities scheduled for the Orchestra. Its official debut takes place in Eaton Auditorium on Nov. 25 under the auspices of the Women's Music Club. The Orchestra at that time will consist of twenty-two players, including oboes and horns as well as the strings. They will present a program of symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Abel and Britten.

This concert, however, is by no means the first the Orchestra will give. In addition to the out-of-town concerts mentioned above, they will broadcast over the Trans-Canada Network on Oct. 27, at 7:30 p.m., EST. The program will be a representative one combining 18th century and modern music.

Mr. Neel is confident that this new Canadian group will maintain the high standards which his own world-famous Boyd Neel Orchestra has achieved. This Orchestra has recorded a great deal of music written for small groups, and two years ago toured Canada and the United States, highlighted by a rave concert in New York's Town Hall. A tour of the same nature is being planned for the new group. Dean Neel commented: "Canada needs an orchestra of these dimensions, a group of about 25 players performing musical literature not commonly done or out of the scope of the large symphony orchestras. We thereby hope to fill a gap in Canadian, and even American, musical life."

Of special interest to University students are the rehearsals of the Orchestra, to be held in the Hart House Music Room on Oct. 14 and 21 at 10:00 a.m., and Nov. 3 at 9:30 a.m. Mr. Neel has cordially invited all interested students to sit in. In England, Boyd Neel's rehearsals were considered somewhat unique, in that he departed from the usual, rather dictatorial method of conducting and discussed the music with the players, inviting their comments and opinions. This had the happy result of giving the group a great deal of team spirit, promoted good will, and went a long way towards producing the fine artistry and vitality for which the Boyd Neel Orchestra is justly noted. Those who listened to these rehearsals found it an interesting and rewarding experience.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MOISHE REITER

Last winter I wrote a column on the sad condition of spirit at University College. It was received with shrugged shoulders, a general passing of the buck, and much indifference.

Last week one of our staffers wrote an article asking "What's happened to old UC?" The reaction, though a bit strong, was very encouraging.

It seems that what has happened to old UC is a complete rebuilding programme that has the students right behind it pushing all the way. Marty Friedland, President of the UC Lit, counted off just a few of the big things already achieved by the UC people this year. Freshman activities are moving along with outstanding success. A student news-sheet, The Gargoyle, has been initiated and Nobber Watson has the UC men working out strenuously in sports. Of these we're directly interested only in the last, since this is the Sports Page.

In Sports UC has a lot to live down, two years in a row as the softies of Interfaculty competition, and a lot to rebuild. There is much promise in the large turnout for the Red and White football club, 35 boys in uniform, and excellent likelihood as well of UC retaining their Lacrosse title, won last year and the year before.

It's a good start, but they started well last year too, in Boxla, in football, in Soccer where they went right to the championships, but they faded miserably in the winter. However, it doesn't look as though that will happen again this time. The Lit is serious about doing well, and I hope they keep up the strong pace being set now. This page wishes them luck.

Soccer Makes Its Bid Law versus Emmanuel Vic versus U.C. Men

Tomorrow on the front campus, without any regard for the nice condition of the grass, there will be played the opening games of the Intramural Soccer League. This league is divided into two groups, Group I containing ten teams, and Group II containing seven teams. These teams will compete for the Arts Faculty Cup now in its sixtieth year. The names of the winners of both groups will be inscribed on the trophy.

Last year Trinity College was the champions of Group I and, Law, the champion of Group II. Law challenged Trinity to a post season Campus Championship match. Law, with some fast talking in the overtime period won the game 2-1 and the honor and glory that goes with being Varsity Champs. Trinity, incidentally, have been frequent champions of Group I.

This year, however, may see a new champion created as the number of soccer enthusiasts has increased with the arrival of new Canadians in Varsity. Every player has had some playing experience which may make it tough on the perennial champions like Trinity. If you want to see a game faster than baseball, more rugged than football, and more riots than on a Saturday night in Harlem, then come and see soccer on the front campus.

Last year's defending Law champs will square off with Emmanuel College at noon. Victoria College and University College will meet at four o'clock for a spot of tea and crumpets, mixed with a generous portion of soccer.

Games will be played daily on the front campus except on Saturdays and Sundays. Due to the large number of teams entered in competition a plea for more referees has emerged from the Intramural Office.

Dents Entering Mural Series

The Faculty of Dentistry served notice yesterday that they will have an entry for this fall's Mulock Cup competition.

Only last week the Dentists withdrew their name, with the excuse that they were unable to field a team through shortage of manpower.

However, spirit appears to be flourishing in the Dental Corner, for an embryo crew were out on the back campus yesterday afternoon going through the motions of their first practice. They will compete in Group II.

Patterson Institutes L-formation To UC

The movement to revive the old college spirit at University College this fall may have some effect on the Red and White football squad.

Although only twenty candidates have shown up in practice to date, they have pleased new coach Danny Patterson with a remarkable display of enthusiasm and desire.

Danny, who played for the Red and White machine for several years, is now at O.C.E. He plans to use a variation of the single wing, the L-formation. This should provide a little more variation in the trend of Interfaculty games, with virtually all the other teams Varsity's regular football schedule opens this Saturday up at the Stadium when the Mustangs of Western show to meet the Blues. This match should be a preview of the Intercollegiate play-off, with Varsity ranked tops in the league and the Westerns just beneath them.

Veteran Bob Pinkney Key Varsity Halfback

Bob Pinkney, a twenty-three year old half-back, is a modest young man who does not believe in reading press notices concerning him. Because of this, perhaps, Bob has been one of the most consistent ball players of the Varsity squad. With a skillful display of pass-catching, and tricky, speedy running, Bob has for the last two years baffled many defenders of the opposing teams.

Lacrosse

Due to the large number of inexperienced players taking part in Interfaculty play this year, the Lacrosse Standing Committee has arranged for two periods of instruction to be held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings this week between 6:00 and 8:00 in the main gym of Hart House.

Experienced men from the campus will form a team for mock play, while officials will call the game. Explanations of the finer points as well as penalties will follow each whistle.

Heavy attendance is expected from the different faculties and colleges taking part in the lacrosse league. The first demonstration will begin tonight at 6:00 in Hart House.

Considerably weakened by graduation and other academic happenings, the Mustangs are still a power in the league and the only basis for comparison of Varsity and them, the exhibition series with the Sarnia Imperials, has the Blues about a touchdown ahead of Western.

But the Mustangs are one club with a definite contempt for statistics and precedent. The laddies from London have a record of beating even teams which outplay them by wide margins, as they did just a year ago in the Yates Cup play-down.

Varsity goes into this game with weakness the great characteristic along the line and injuries notable in the backfield. They will certainly not be at top strength against the Mustangs, and this is one game when they'll need all they have. Injuries have left them pretty short-stuffed. With only four tackles Bob Masterson hasn't much choice and can just pray that none of them will be injured before Saturday's game. Guards are another question with a shortage at that spot as well, while end is relatively strong.

Western will throw their heaviest line in years at the Blues and hope that this will make up for their losses of backfield stars. Their best are now with other clubs or out of football. Back, though is big Gino Fracas, considered by many the Intercollegiate's top back last season.

Med's Split-T New Weapon

One of the main factors in Med's hopes to capture the Reed Trophy this year will be the red and black football team. Forty hopeful gridders turned out for the first practice which was held 10 days ago. The sawbones will have the most well-conditioned if not the most winning team in the Intramural league, judging by the vigorous workouts.

The doctors have been running their plays hard these dark nights and are frequently the last team on the back campus to turn in for showers. The squad is anchored by a line that averages 190 lbs. while the backfield is small but very fast.

Returning this year for the doctors are Hugh Curry, Doug Wilson, Howie Mills, and Hugh Little. Among the fine Rookie prospects, are Al Cecutti and John Fowler. Coached by Doug Shea, the Medsmen will run their plays from a split-T this year.

The team will hold an intersquad scrimmage tonight and those football types surviving will take on Trinity College in a pre-season game on Friday after classes.

Pivot Bill Stevenson Leads Varsity Attack

It's no secret that the Blues will rely mainly on a passing attack this year, and rookie quarterback Bill Stevenson in one of the reasons for the team's decision. The modest 6', 175 lb. footballer proved himself a standout slinger as he heaved two touchdown passes in the first half of last Saturday's game against Sarnia. In fact, he is one of the finest passers that ever trod the gridiron in the blue and white colours.

The 21 year old, third year arts student is a graduate of North Toronto Collegiate where he played football for 2 years. He tried hockey in his younger days, but he now confines his sports activities to football only. He is the brother of Al Stevenson, who played end for the Senior Blues a few years ago. Last year, Bill quarterbacked for the Baby Blues and had his best game against Guelph.

Stevenson, who is still eligible, girls, will most likely enter Law upon completion of his arts course; however he says he would possibly like to play professional football were he offered the opportunity. He and John Sopinka of the Seniors are handling the gridiron coaching duties at Vic. As for the opening game on Saturday with Western, Stevenson says "if the boys display the spirit they take the Mustangs."

Lawson and Arnold Vie For Men's Tennis Crown

Yesterday's Interfaculty Tennis Tournament featured one upset as two semi-final and one final match were played.

The upset occurred when Medicine's Robin Arnold defeated Trinity's Robin Logie, 6-2, 8-6. Logie had been one of the favorites throughout the tournament. The other semi-final match saw Ken Lawson sweep his set with Bill Grove, an Intermediate last year, 6-2, 6-4. Lawson has been one of the mainstays of the Varsity tennis team for the last three years, and in 1952 was the individual Intercollegiate champion.

The semi-finals indicate that Lawson and Arnold will definitely be on the Varsity Intercollegiate team. All those who were not successful, however, will be given an opportunity to challenge the leaders in open competition. As expected Lawson and Logie combined in the doubles to beat Don Cumming and Ken Dixon, 6-1, 6-0, 6-3. All finals will be played in sets of three.

To-day at 2.30 p.m. Ken Lawson and Robin Arnold will compete for the single's championship.

Synchronized Popular But—Speed Needed

After a fair amount of deliberation, some members of the U. of T. women's swim club officially joined the Amateur Synchronized Swimming Association of Canada, last week.

Perhaps that accounts for the large turnout at the first practice, Monday afternoon. At any rate, the UTS pool was mobbed by synchronized swimming aspirants — to the tune of forty.

Because of the size of the turnout, those practicing for the Ontario Novice trophy in strokes will have to meet at the Lillian Massey pool, Friday afternoon from one to two o'clock. The contest for this award is scheduled for the 16th of October at the John Innis Community Centre.

Unfortunately, only seven divers turned out to the opener. There certainly cannot be much of an interfaculty meet with such a small number in this field, so it is still quite open to any newcomers.

Only 14 gals tried out for speed events — and no backstrokers were included. Until this year, backstroke has been a specialty around these parts. Needless to say, speedsters are requested to come out in full force to the next practice.

Gals' Softball

St. Mike's defeated PHE—II yesterday in an intramural softball game by the score of 7-6. Both teams started the game with quick scoring plays, the Irish counting for four runs in their half of the first inning and PH—ED counted for three runs in their half. Anne Kotze SMC retired the side in order in the second inning. St. Mike's scored three more runs in the third inning and PHE came close to tying the score in the closing innings but Shelia Brimes was tagged out, on an attempted steal from third.

Joanne Lappi SMC and Sylvia Kerr PHE were the heaviest hitters obtaining two hits for two tries at bat. They both scored two runs for their respective teams. The lone home run of the game was hit by Moira Cawkell of St. Mike's. Arlene Seaman of the OHE team was observed to catch a mighty clout which when hit by Cathy Murphy splintered the bat.

Dorothy Hudson and Rita Marshall also shone for the losers, while Norma Walsh and Eileen Dillion were outstanding for the victors.

REQUIRED PHYSICAL EDUCATION MEN---1954-55

By order of the Board of Governors each man proceeding to a Bachelor's Degree must participate in the required Physical Education programme during the First and Second year of his attendance at the University. The Physical Education requirements include a Swimming Test which must be taken before November 1st by all First Year men and by men admitted to the Second Year from other Universities. Swimming classes are compulsory for all students who fail to pass the Swimming Test. First Year students are requested to complete this test immediately.

For the current session the Board of Governors have seen fit to make the attendance of ex-service men in this course optional.

At the same time the University Health Service and the Department of Physical Education — Men, wish to emphasize the importance of recreational exercise and athletics. The course as offered in this University provides a means for all students to maintain some measure of physical fitness.

Physical Education credits may be obtained by participation in inter-collegiate and intramural sports and instructional classes as noted below.

CUP Rounduppigeon hole

Let's have a column about CUP," he said.

"O.K.," I said. And this column was born. It began as a digest of the news stories found in the pages of the Canadian University Press. Then it was decided that perhaps excerpts from U.S. college papers should be included, and from there it was only a split second until international university news was also considered suitable content.

And just in case you're wondering what the Canadian University Press is, read the editorial column today.

Some of the pieces that appear in Pigeon Hole will be news items while others will be just things the writer found interesting.

To begin with, here is a story gleaned from the University of Saskatchewan Sheaf.

Three student nurses were very late getting back to the hospital one night. As they were slipping in, they met three internes coming out.

"Shh," they said, "we've been out after hours."

"Shh," replied the internes, "we're going out after ours."

Modern architecture has become a hazard to students at Indiana University. In recent weeks two students have been injured as they walked through plate glass panels forming the walls of modernistic fraternity houses. Only one of the students was a freshman.

Men who refused to sign loyalty oaths at the University of California have been allowed to informally enroll in ROTC courses to fulfill the graduation requirement of two years military training. Those who signed are "formally" enrolled and will take the full four year course.

At the College of Law and Economics, Tel Aviv, Palestine, 1,000 students are taking classes while another 200 are at the Haifa branch of the College.

The Rhodes Scholarship Trust has made a change in its scholarship distribution policy. Since it was originated in 1902 the trust has selected only one U.S. Negro as a Rhodes Scholar and has never granted a scholarship to a student in a Negro College in the U.S. Recently it has been announced that Fisk University in Tennessee will become the first U.S. Negro college to participate in the Rhodes plan.

Observatory Tower SAC Handy Hideout

Although no cornerstone was laid and no golden cord was cut, members of the Students' Administrative Council have acquired a "residence." The tower room of the SAC building the old observatory has been donated for their use.

SAC needs more 'esprit de corps' said President Bill Angus, II Law. There needs to be some place where the members can meet together informally. He suggested that the tower office might be used. The room, which is still nominally called the president's office, is now available to all SAC.

"The tower room will be used for a combination of social and business purposes," said SAC vice-president, Mary Ellen Gibson, IV Arts. She said that informal meetings could be held there, and that it would generally be headquarters for the SAC.

"The work of refurbishing was all done by students," Miss Gibson said. "We had only $25 for furnishings; we begged and borrowed the rest." In the two weeks since classes started, the place has been completely cleaned and repainted. Benches have been built and old mattresses recovered with upholstery.

"We're not quite completely finished but soon," the vice-president said. She reported that they still hoped to get a phone put in and some paintings by Alec Gigeroff, III Law, were to be hung.

Australia puzzle to Dean Bissell leisure, security are impressive

"Australia today is a land of paradoxes, even in their university system," Dean C. T. Bissell, Vice-President of the University, told The Varsity last night. "Their college standards are as high or higher than the general Canadian level," he said, "but there is an almost complete lack of facilities for the graduate student and for extra curricular activities."

Dean Bissell returned about a month ago from a four-month exchange lecture tour of Australia, during which time he introduced Australians of the university level to Canadian history and literature, as well as acting as an "unofficial ambassador." The land down under impressed him as a prosperous country where there is no unemployment, but which could not be classified as a land of golden opportunities as could Canada. Their basically insular economy as contrasted with the daring and explosive Canadian economy; he believes accounts for this.

a weekly wage sufficient to meet not only his subsistence requirements, but also to give him some claim to the finer things in life. Usually this amounts to something little in excess of $20. However, culture thrives as a result of this leisurely approach to life which is exemplified in the large, well-stocked book stores to be found everywhere in Australia.

There is generally no rush for great financial gain among the Aussies, and the doctrine of economic equality is well entrenched, making for a low spread of wealth. "Generally," he said, "they emphasize security and leisure rather than ambition." This attitude continues in spite of the increasing threat from the north, although increased military activity is quite evident.

In the social sphere, Dean Bissell mentioned that Australians' personalities are generally similar to Canadians'. They are quite hospitable people once the cautious shell is broken.

In off-the-cuff talks to residence groups and Rotary Clubs he uncovered a comic book conception of Canada, a land of Mounted Policemen floundering in snowdrifts. Most Canadian examples of art he encountered depicted wintry scenes. However, once enlightened, the Australians had a ready grasp and appreciation of Canadian problems of regionalism and communications which also apply very much to their country.

However, in their land of antiquated technology and dependence on wool-trade, they would shudder at the enterprise of building a whole new university residence in the span of twelve months.

Speaking personally, the Dean considered his own mission a success, for wherever he went he encountered a nucleus of genuinely interested persons, in spite of the difficulty Australians have in obtaining Canadian books and understanding Canadian poetry. In the future, he looks for a gradual change in outlook if the present high-level immigration policy continues to turn "white Australia" into a more cosmopolitan and colorful society.

Social activity Banned at RIT Following fracas

The Ryersonian, published by the Ryerson Institute of Technology, which has criticized pictorially and verbally, the recent engineering incident on the Varsity campus, has had to swallow some of its caustic comments directed at undergraduates of this university.

Yesterday Ryerson Institute Principal H. H. Kerr suspended all student social activities because of the fractured skull sustained by Al Warson, a Graphic Arts student at the Institute, during the fracas which followed the Ryerson - O.A.C. game in Guelph.

Warson was injured when a youth, as yet unidentified, shinned up a goal-post and dropped a six-foot steel crossbar on Warson's head.

O.A.C. President Hyrc Walton has urged "immediate expulsion" for the guilty party.

Student reaction to the party ban was critical but saner students agreed that all were responsible for the accident which occurred.

Famous bands circus props At B&W dance

"Saturday night should not be the time for the traditional bath, at least by members of the Toronto campus," said Hew Bourne, Blue and White Society's Hart House dance chief, today.

No less than five bands will be holding forth in Hart House to honor the visit of Western U. students to the campus for the Saturday afternoon football game between the big Blues and the Mustangs.

"Not only the music, but also the decorations will be first rate," said Bourne, who has arranged to borrow decorations and props from the Shrine Circus recently in town.

Tickets are still available at Hart House, The SAC office, and the Engineering Stores. The event is slated to start at 9.00 p.m. and continue till midnight.

For those who tire of sweet music, the quadrangle will be open to afford a breath of fresh air.

NATIONAL UNITY IS STRESSED IN TORONTO'S NFCUS POLICY

All Varsity Float Parade Featured For Homecoming In Blue and White Plans

This year, the Blue and White Society is again organizing the Homecoming Weekend coinciding with the visit of McGill University on October 30th. Festivities will begin with the All Varsity Float Parade.

The parade will start at 10:30 a.m. from Devonshire Place.

F.R.O.S. Series Includes Talks On West Indies

New offices and new staff members mark the beginning of the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students Organization.

Emmy Zuckor, School of Social Work and Alex. K. Gigeroff, School of Law, are the new student staffers working with Mrs. Kay Riddell. The site is 45 St. George Street.

This office will be the battleground for a series of one hour discussions on world affairs. The first will be held on Tuesday, October 19th, at one o'clock, with the West Indies as the topic. Students from those islands will present facts and first hand information to lead off the discussion. All students, but particularly Canadians, find these sessions lively and informative.

FROS also holds get-together teas every fortnight to help students get acquainted. The first of these will be held on Sunday, October 10th, from 3.30 to 5.30 at Friends' House on 60 Lowther Ave. Many of the activities of F.R.O.S. are held in cooperation with the I.S.O., International Students' Organization.

From this point it will move north to Bloor Street, east to Yonge, south to College and west to the Wallberg Memorial Building, continuing north into the campus. Prize winners will appear during half-time at the football game in the afternoon.

The following restrictions have been suggested:

1. Only one entry for any one faculty, college or school or academic group whose membership is made up of students from more than one college.
2. All floats this year will conform to the theme "Canadians" but may be comical or serious.
3. The cost of the entry should not exceed $25.00.
4. The entry should not include any commercial advertising.

The first general meeting for all representatives will be held Thursday, October 7th, at 5 p.m. in the S.A.C. office.

This is your opportunity to show the Alumni the University spirit they long to recapture. Let us put on a parade in the true Blue and White spirit.

Moscow Student Council Influences EAC Proposal

An added emphasis on national strength and unity will be advocated as the Toronto policy at the forthcoming conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, to be held at Toronto from September 18th to 23rd.

This decision, announced by William Angus, chairman of the External Affairs meeting held last night, was an indirect result of the IUS Conference recently held in Moscow, at which representatives of NFCUS investigated the feasibility of Associate Membership.

Doug Hamlin, an observer at the Moscow conference, reported that, in the general agreement of the NFCUS representatives, any "international gamble" such as association with IUS, would result in fatal dissension within the Canadian organization.

Hamlin pointed out that in comparison to student organizations such as the British NUS, NFCUS is lacking in a complete national development, and that until this is achieved, Canada cannot hope to play a leading part in student world affairs.

Along with the resolution to concentrate the NFCUS efforts on national unity, the SAC President

Angus also proposed an encouragement of the Exchange Week-end, a clarification of the position of the national president of NFCUS, and an explanation of the fact that, due to the rejected proposal of a raise in SAC fees, Toronto cannot supply the raise in fees requested by NFCUS.

This proposed policy for the NFCUS conference will be considered for acceptance by the SAC on Wednesday, October 13th. At this meeting the national president of NFCUS, Tony Enriquez, will speak to the Toronto assembly on the position of NFCUS and the results of the Moscow conference. The SAC session is open to all students.

Also among the business to be conducted by the SAC is the election of a NFCUS SAC chairman, who will undoubtedly be chosen to represent Toronto at the conference. The other delegate to be officially appointed will be Angus, the SAC President.

The national conference is the major operation of NFCUS, and Angus stressed the fact that Toronto students are welcome to take this opportunity to attend the public meetings and see for themselves "NFCUS in action".

Plans for the annual Carabin Week-end were also announced by Doug Hamlin, EAC Week-ends Chairman. The Carabin Week-end, traditionally the major affair of this branch of the EAC, will be held this year from November 19th to 21st. Applications for participating students will be opened on the first of the month.

An exchange week-end with an American university, and possibly one with another university in Ontario, are planned for a later time by the EAC committee.

Two returned Other plaque Still missing

Two of the three missing plaques from the Engineering Building have now been returned to the campus. The first was returned in the early hours of Tuesday morning, not to the building, but to the fence beside the SAC building.

The second of the plaques was discovered yesterday morning attached to the Hoskin Ave. fence of Trinity College.

The question now is where and when the third of the $100 brass plaques will turn up. The plates were stolen on Monday, September 27. At the time The Varsity reported that it might be a student prank by UC in retaliation, or some Vic students who wanted engineers in the Bob Apple battle. No information, however, has yet been discovered which would lead to the discovery of the culprits.

The Engineering Society hopes that the third plaque will be promptly returned and that no further action will have to be taken.

Symphony orchestra tunes up for season

About 60 members of the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra were warming up their fiddles and horns at the conservatory here last Tuesday night in the first full-scale rehearsal of the organization this season.

Meanwhile, in another studio of the conservatory the university's near 100-member chorus were tuning up their vocal chords in a first-night preparation for two joint orchestra-chorus concerts later in the season.

Michael Oliver, music representative of the Students' Administrative Council reported both orchestral conductor, Dr. Robert A. Rosevear and chorus leader, Professor A. Richard Johnston, in "top form."

The chorus and orchestra are sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council.

Two concerts have been slated for this year. The first is to be held on December 9. A second concert will be held March 10, it was announced at the rehearsals. Both will likely be staged in Convocation Hall.

But the orchestra and chorus were still looking for new members—even with a veritable galaxy of new faces in both organizations. "We're always looking for more," Oliver declared, "particularly for the chorus."

Oliver also mentioned an inter-varsity choral festival to be held on Sunday, February 13, at McMaster University in Hamilton.

The chorus of the University of Toronto, as well as choirs from the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, the University of Western Ontario, and McMaster will take part.

"The program will go on, presumably in the same manner as in other years," Oliver said, "with each chorus singing at least one or two numbers and then with all the choirs joining to form a mass chorus."

The choral festival will be held in Toronto next year, it was stated.

British news commentator on tour Contrasts U.S., U.K. party system

Ernest Watkins, news commentator of the British Broadcasting Corporation, who is currently on a lecture tour through Canada wants to settle here.

He said last night that he wants to live in Canada, because Canada is growing, whereas society in the United Kingdom is static. He will settle here, he said, if he can find a suitable job.

He told a meeting of the International Relations Club last night in Falconer Hall that there is an increasing parallel between the party systems in the United States and the United Kingdom. He spoke on "Bipartisan Foreign Policy in the United Kingdom".

"Although there is no bipartisan foreign policy in the UK in the sense it exists in the US," he said, "there is nonetheless a continuity of foreign policy."

"While the party in power has to accept the full responsibilities of its policies, and the opposition is constantly prodding it, there is nevertheless general agreement in the field of international relations," he said.

"UK foreign policy," he said, "is governed greatly by economic factors, and therefore has to be stable."

He cited the problem of German rearmament, in which, he said, there was a conflict of emotions and economic reasoning, cutting through party divisions.

German rearmament, he said, was held to be essential because while British industry was hampered by defense production, German engineering firms were more flexible in manufacture and competed advantageously on foreign markets. Industrialists, he said, were in favor of rearmament.

The same sort of conflict exists in colonial policies, he said. Most of the Labor Party he said, wanted to give the colonies self government more quickly; a desire he traced to the liberal traditions of party. But the difference, he said, was one of timing.

The United States, he claimed, can let its foreign policies be influenced by emotions, because US exports are marginal. UK exports, however, formed a major part of revenues, he added.

Both Labor and Conservatives would trade with Communist China, he said, provided the Chinese will buy and pay. They recognize the Communist government as long as it is a stable government. They realize, however, that they can't weaken the position of the United States in Europe, he said.

Monopoly On Altruism

The Editor,
The Varsity.

In a recent issue a spokesman for the IPA tells us that the purposes of the independents are to stimulate the interests of apathetic students, make them more active in the field of politics, and provide an outlet for new political ideas. If these ends are attainable then I suggest that the best means is participation in one of the political parties. The IPA has no monopoly on these high purposes the political parties on the campus have worked towards the same objectives, and the Model Parliament has been one of the principal instruments.

However, there is reason to suspect the motives of those who get taken in by the small group that make up the IPA. By their actions over the past two years these independents have shown themselves interested only in making the Model Parliament a setting for their own debating society.

The independents have no new ideas — they have found the same answers that political parties have, but they cannot see their way clear to join a party because their ideas are such a conglomeration of old answers. They cannot hope to form any sort of party when their ideas are merely a collection of temporary solutions with no basis in fundamental principles. Accordingly, the individuals who make up the IPA have shown that they are interested more in displaying their own ivory-tower style of debating than in contributing to the improvement of practical politics.

The main point of this letter is to expose the insincerity of the IPA. Last year a member of the IPA decided that if he couldn't sit in the Model Parliament then nobody should have that experience. He went to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly and suggested that the Model Parliament should not be permitted to sit at Queen's Park.

This dog-in-the-manger attitude was condoned and supported by other members of the IPA. They did their best to disorganize and put a stop to the Model Parliament. Is this how they encourage interest in political affairs on the campus? I suggest members of the IPA investigate the political parties a little more closely to see if they are quite as lacking in controversy and thinking as the independents make out.

I should think the best contribution the IPA can make to campus political interest would result from challenging the various parties to do verbal battle with it. The Model Parliament is obviously neither the time nor the place to do this effectively. I would also like to suggest that if the members of the IPA have any courage and any real desire to improve political thinking the place to start is within the existing parties — Liberal, Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, Conservative, Social Credit, and Labour Progressive Party.

Unscrupulous Intentions

The Editor,
The Varsity.

The purpose of this letter is to clarify in the minds of the Varsity's readers the opinion of the U.C. residence men and to condemn the U.C. Lit executive for a disgraceful exhibition at Tuesday's Lit meeting.

During the last four years a tangible gift fund of $400 has been accumulated by the U.C. Lit. Last year's Lit executive recommended that the money be used in the new residence. Their successors, biased to some extent for the JCR and against the residence, decided to pass a motion which would give $200 to the residence and $200 for renovation of the JCR. They called this a "compromise". When did anyone, save this years Lit executive, recommend that the money be used for the JCR?

No, this was no compromise, but a deliberate attempt by the Lit executive to annex some of this money. When the men's residence received word of this, the natural reaction was to protect the rights of the residence and the college.

There were many comments by the executive concerning the irrationality of the residence men present but I maintain it was the executive which displayed the major portion of the irrationality. If Marty Friedland had made the motion for the five-man committee at the beginning of the meeting, instead of as a last resort, then the executive could be placed above reproach.

However, they expected to gain their $200 using shady politics. And when they found their backs to the wall, they proposed a more sane solution, the committee of five. I believe the residence men are to be commended on their action with regard to this latter

Ring In The New

By now most of the novelty of university life is beginning to wear off for the freshman. Many of the dissimilarities between secondary school education and university work are being pointed up by the passage of time.

The relative lack of positive discipline comes to some as a spur to greater indiscipline and to others as a challenge to measure up to what is expected from them in an adult community.

In the light of this increased liberty it will be necessary for many to re-examine their attitudes and subject them to the scrutiny which must be the hallmark of any educated person.

To cling to the past for its own sake or to grasp at the modern on the sole merit of novelty is disastrous for anyone.

Let us search always for the mainstream of abiding truth on which no one group has the monopoly but is the right of him who will "seek, to strive, to find and not to yield."

proposal. They voted unanimously in favor of the five-man committee thus showing the first and only glimmer of rationality of the meeting.

Surely this serves to illustrate that the U.C. men's residence, although obviously holding a large majority of members at the meeting, were not attempting to railroad any motion.

I would like to point out that the reporter for the Varsity left out some very enlightening details. He neglected to mention that while the critical vote was being taken, which could have given the residence the $400, some 40 residence men were barred admittance to the meeting by an executive member at the door.

Fullback Phil Muntz No. 1 Ground-Gainer

You usually associate the term fullback with a man 6-ft. tall, weighing 220 lbs. If Bob Master-son used this as his standard in choosing fullbacks, you would probably not see Phil Muntz in a Blue uniform. Phil is 5' 9", 190 lbs.

Of course, you might ask, who cares whether he is in a Blue uniform, or not? But, then, if you are shown that he is one of the most consistent, one of the best runners and blockers in the Intercollegiate league, you might not appear so apathetic.

Here are the facts. Last year, Phil was the leading ground gainer of the Varsity squad. Not only did he gain twice as many yards as any Blue, but he also carried the ball twice as many times as any other Blue. The average number of yards he gained was 6.4, tops of the team.

You might ask, how did he do it? How could a fullback, whose normal job it is to gain the extra yard for a first, and to block for the quarterback when he is passing, how could a fullback gain so many yards each time he tried. The answer is simple, the task difficult. When Phil is hit he does not stop. That is the difference between a good and poor player.

Phil is also a tremendous blocker. He has the ability to out-manoeuvre and bowl over the defenders when they are about to tackle the ball carrier. This ability might be attributed to many hours of conscientious practice, so states Phil.

Before he came to Varsity Phil played off a double wing formation at Trinity College School in Port Hope. Here he is enrolled in one of the most difficult courses the University has to offer, Aeronautical Engineering. At the present time he would be interested in a professional contract with any football club provided an aeronautical job accompanied the offer.

Stadium Scene For Intramural Championships

Varsity sports fans will get their first glimpse of track and field activities for the fall term this afternoon at 1.30 in Varsity stadium.

Under the revised rules, this meet will be open to all those who have not competed for the senior Intercollegiate team. This will give freshmen athletes an opportunity to compete against members of last year's intermediate team, thus giving them some preparation for the open University championships next Wednesday.

In past years this meet has established a tradition of keen competition, and this year's meet will be no exception. The mile and half mile runs are expected to be the outstanding track features while the shot put and discus events will likely be the highlights of the field program.

Coaches Hal Brown and Don McEwen will both be present, looking for athletes to fill out the ranks of the Senior and Intermediate teams.

Participants are reminded that post entries will be accepted on the track, immediately prior to any event.

was elected co-captain along with Al Wong who captained the squad last fall to their third straight Shaw Trophy.

Clever halfback Larry Turner suffered an injury in the scrimmage and may not play in Friday's game. Other than that the Intermediates will be at full strength, when the Rams invade the Stadium at 2.00 on Fridays. The Ryerson club absorbed a 37-0 shellacking from the OAC Aggies last Thursday up in Guelph.

Joynt and Tom Hamilton looked particularly good in the pivot spot.

Besides the passing, the running attack saw action, and is beginning to shape into real potency. Al Wong was very effective on defence, breaking up several Blue plays. The little 135-pound speedster back for his third season of Intermediate ball. Joe Whitmore, a new back from UTS, looked good on defence as well as Wong, and the Seconds promise to have a tight-knit defensive unit.

Lawson Titlist

Showing superiority in all three sets, top-seeded Ken Lawson of Victoria College yesterday disposed of Mads' Robin Arnold 6-4, 6-0, 6-4 in the singles finals of the Interfaculty Tennis tournament.

Arnold had beaten early favorite Rob Logie of Trinity on Tuesday, but Lawson seemed to have little trouble in winning the title. Now top net man on the campus, Lawson also combined with Logie for the doubles title on Tuesday afternoon.

With the Intercollegiate Senior tournament only a week away, a round robin series will begin to decide the players who will make the trip to McGill for the meet.

The Intermediate tournament is being held next week at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club.

PHE Girls Swamp Vic

An eleven-run outburst in the first inning was all P. H. E. 1 needed to coast to a 12-2 victory over Vic. 11 at Trinity field yesterday afternoon. The Phys. Ed. girls collected only five hits in that initial frame, but took advantage of three Vic errors and three walks handed out by pitchers Jane Heaton and Karen Fischer to take their first victory of the season.

Vic fought back with two runs in their half of the first, one a home-run smash by Joan Taylor. However, they were unable to overtake that early lead chalked up by P. H. E. and went down to their second defeat in as many days.

Marg Haines and Ada McPherson both homered for P.H.E. and collected two other hits besides for perfect days at bat.

For Vic., Marg Garbutt, Joan Lok, and Dot Dudley played good ball, on offense and defense.

pigeon hole

Big-wheel speakers seem to be the word these days at universities all over the continent. Down at Duke U. in Durham North Carolina, Aldous Huxley spoke to more than a thousand students as part of a special lecture series at the University. Since Huxley was at Duke mainly because of his interest in the Extra-Sensory Perception experiments being carried on there, his topic was a little off the beaten track. It was entitled "Visionary Experience, Visionary Art, and the Other World."

Anyone who thinks the Varsity is sometime out of line in frequent references to sex should drop down to the office and take a look at the journalistic gem that arrived on the CUP editors desk yesterday.

Entitled Struth, and printed under the auspices of the SRC at the University of Adelaide, Australia, the headline reads, RAMPANT, SEX-MAD STUDENTS HIT TOWN: RAPE, MURDER, MAYHEM RIFE. The story goes on to say that "year after year these morons seek to rid themselves of their chronic inhibitions by parading their degraded and filth-ridden minds in a futile fantasy of ferocious and female fascinated fornication."

"We have had enough of their puerile, piddling, pornography, their sex-satiated struggles to satisfy their salacious sump-level sensations."

Struth is strikingly decorated with undraped females and features a serial called, "A Police Car Named Maria."

From the University of Saskatchewan Sheaf, another dialogue:

She: If wishes came true, what would you wish for?

He: Gosh, I'm afraid to tell you.

She: Go ahead you sap, what do you think I brought-up this wishing business for?

No male cadaver shortage here
But females continue in demand

"There is no shortage of male cadavers for use by anatomy students at the University of Toronto, although a premium on female cadavers exists", an official of the Medical Faculty declared yesterday.

This news came in contrast to a situation described by Time Magazine last week in many U.S. medical schools.

There are about 40 bodies in storage at the Anatomy building here for use by medical, dentistry and Physical and Occupational Therapy students, it was learned. The first year students study detailed anatomy about eight to a body.

Time Magazine reported 10 students were commonly crowding around one body in a Tennessee medical school. In many other schools six or eight students were bending over a single specimen while — so Time reported — the recognized practical number of students per body was four.

Although hesitant in divulging information, officials of the faculty admitted there was a shortage here of female cadavers.

About one body a month is willed to the faculty, it was learned, but the others are obtained from public institutions — the remains of unidentified and unclaimed persons.

"The bodies are treated with utmost respect during dissection classes", a demonstrator in the Anatomy Department said. Silence is the rule; smoking is prohibited. Except for the sections being studied, the bodies are kept covered. One group of students, he said, had never seen the head of their cadaver.

By-law, all bodies brought in for use by the Anatomy Department must be kept for a period of time before they can be used, in case they should be claimed. Most of them, are the remains of elderly people who have "out-lived both friends and relatives."

The bodies of criminals and inmates of asylums are not accepted by the department, it was said.

Medical people pointed out that judicious care in the matter was necessary to avoid public outcry against the practice of dissection of human remains.

According to Time, most Anatomy teachers think a freshman should help dissect at least two bodies in his freshman year, but due to the shortage, most schools think they are doing well to give their students a crack at one.

Time thought the solution was to be best found in the writer of a British subject in the Daily Telegraph: "There is a little-known way of avoiding the cost and misery of a funeral — a way that enables most of us to be of more use dead than alive. Simply bequeath your body to the nearest medical school..."

Future man in spotlight On university television

"Exploring Minds", the university television show, has come back to the Toronto campus this year. For the third year in a row the CBC is presenting, in conjunction with various Canadian universities, a television series, of which Toronto is producing the first five.

The first three shows are an interlocked series — changes in the human race. Produced by the Anthropology department, they deal with changes in the human physique and physiology, changes in human customs (a result of the battle of the sexes) and changes in speech patterns. Professor E. S. Carpenter of the Anthropology department will be in charge of these.

"A dramatic presentation of the changes taking place in the human race is the subject of our first show," said Professor Carpenter. Its title is "Future Man". First, with three men, we'll show the difference in height in three generations, and then go on to changes in body structure", Professor Carpenter said.

"We'll show the changes in the skull, the reduction in the number of teeth, and the shrinking of the jaw. The modern man will be bald, with a rounder head, sunken face, bulging eyes, and small pointed teeth", he added. "We'll conclude with presenting the 'Future Man' on the show", he said.

"The three shows are really three lectures on anthropology, dramatised", the professor said. "They are lectures adapted to the new medium—in a light but still serious fashion."

The shows will be at 6.00 p.m. on Sunday evenings—not at 6.30 p.m., as was previously announced, said Professor Harris, of the English department at UC. Professor Harris is liaison official between the CBC and the University. There will be twenty-six shows this year, and Toronto is doing at least thirteen, he added.

"This year's first series will mark the fifth year that Professor Carpenter has appeared on 'Exploring Minds'. He has been on much more frequently than anyone else", said Professor Harris.

Fridolin visits university for Toronto film premiere

by BILL SMYTH

In Toronto for the film premiere of his now-famous stage-play Tit-Coq, French Canadian dramatist, producer and writer Gratien Gelinas, dropped into Hart House yesterday for lunch.

The Quebec celebrity who wrote, directed, produced and acted in Tit-Coq, had lunch with Warden McCulley, of Hart House, Principal Jeanneret of University College, Globe and Mail columnist Bruce West, Hart House Theatre director Robert Gill, and Allan Thomas of the Canadian Association for Adult Education.

The play made its premier on the stage in Montreal in 1948 where it ran 200 consecutive performances.

During his luncheon date at Hart House yesterday, the playwright expressed great interest in the University of Toronto. When asked to sign the guest book he spent some time looking over the name of those who had visited Hart House in recent years.

M. Fridolin's plans for the future are still indefinite, he said.

NATION WIDE CAMPAIGN FOR MASSEY SCHOLARSHIPS

Varsity Library Gets Manuscript

The original manuscript of a work for string orchestra and harp by the British composer, Sir Arnold Bax, has been given to the University Library, it was announced recently.

The manuscript is the gift of the English concert pianist, Harriet Cohen. Sir Arnold, the late Master of the Queen's Musick, dedicated the work to Dr. Boyd Neel, now Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music here.

A Commander of the British Empire, Miss Cohen wrote: "Hearing from Boyd Neel that the Hart House orchestra has now been formed . . . I feel it would be a perfect thing that the University Library in my beloved Toronto, should house the manuscript, and I am hoping that the orchestra will give the first performance of it under Dr. Neel."

"It was with the Hart House string quartet that I first appeared in Toronto, the night before my first appearance at the Toronto Symphony concerts under Sir Ernest MacMillan," Miss Cohen said.

Sir Arnold Bax, who died in 1933, was one of England's most prolific composers for the past half-century.

Art competition run by Toronto NFCUS committee

The NFCUS Art Competition may again be held at Toronto this year, if the requested mandate is granted at the annual conference. According to Peter Martin, the EAC chairman of NFCUS, Toronto wishes to continue to sponsor this national event, which was successfully inaugurated last year.

As a "tangible result", Martin feels that the Art Competition will answer the inevitable queries of "Just what does NFCUS do, anyway?" The exhibits are collected from universities throughout Canada, and if last year sets any standard, be expected.

The idea of the competition was approved by the national conference last year as "a method of proving the value of the existence of NFCUS." At that time, the fate of the organization was a serious question, and Toronto was considering the proposal to withdraw.

Other reasons for the competition were "to meet the need for encouragement of Canadian culture among university students"

He would probably, he thought, spend a year doing television work for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Montreal.

Also, he said, there was a possibility he might join the Italian playwright Savatini (The Bicycle Thief) in Italy soon to produce a joint film.

Fridolin is the only actor to be granted an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Toronto.

The latter organization is sponsoring tour of Tit-Coq through English-speaking Canada.

Plan of NFCUS Committee At University of Toronto

A nation-wide campaign to realize the Massey Recommendations for a system of national scholarships and bursaries will be led by the Toronto NFCUS Sub-committee, if the requested mandate is granted at the forthcoming national conference.

The proposed campaign will be channelled through the local branches of the National Federation of Canadian University Students and directed at Members of Parliament and public opinion throughout Canada. This large-scale effort is a fulfillment of last year's campaign, which attracted a good deal of attention, but failed to produce any definite action.

The Sub-committee hopes to "organize a well-publicized campaign" of student pressure through letters, resolution-passing, and private initiative. According to Norman Chalmers, Chairman of the Sub-committee, "the Toronto group would only be the co-ordinators of a national effort."

The purpose of the far-reaching marathon is embodied in the recommendations of the Royal Commission for National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences—commonly known as the Massey Report. This Report proposed the establishment of a series of national scholarships and bursaries, amounting to the annual sum of $5,000,000, and applicable to 9,400 students.

The movement of student inquiry into the scholarship question began through NFCUS in 1947. Since the presentation of the Massey Report in 1951, the agitation for action has been doubled. Committees, reports, recommendations have all failed so far to produce concrete results. They have, however, succeeded in producing a national awareness of the importance of the issues at stake, said Chalmers. On this awareness the Toronto Sub-Committee bases its plans for the present campaign, he continued.

The reasons for the importance of the Massey Report and its implications, and an explanation of the national campaign for its implementation, will appear in a series of articles at some future time in The Varsity.

Eastasian cleric leads services at caledon farm

Bishop Theophilus of South India will be speaking to the Fall Camp of the Student Christian Movement at Caledon Hills Farm this weekend. He will lead services and give lectures on the theme of the camp, "Christian Hope".

Bishop Theophilus is a bishop of the Marthoma Church — a branch of the ancient Syrian Church. His home is in south India, in an area where 75% of the community is literate and one third is Christian, and where the communists from the opposition in the state government.

Last Sunday, the bishop officiated at services in Hart House chapel while during the week he has been giving lectures at London and at Guelph. This past summer he was a representative of the Marthoma Church at the World Council of Churches.

Varsity Staff Meeting Today For Party, Pay

Sex, beer, and related subjects will definitely not be discussed today when a general meeting of Varsity staffers is held in the basement of the SAC building, at 1:10 p.m.

All persons who have signed for positions as reporter and make-up assistants this year are urgently requested to attend. The meeting will be mainly for purposes of organization of the reportorial staff although News Editor Mike Pengelly says there will be a surprise announcement concerning pay and remuneration.

Plans for tonight's night's staff party will also be finalized and free tickets for milk and coffee will be handed out.

Which brings to mind an incident which occurred in The Varsity offices last night. Clyde Batten, the Editor received an article entitled "The Optimist". He called all the mast head members into his glass enclosed office and said:

"Ladies' and gentlemen, this title must be changed to something simpler. We're intelligent people and know what an optimist is, but how many of these moronic engineers are gonna know it's an eye doctor".

Chaplain Speaks On Youths' Need

Chaplain General of the British Army, Major General Lee J. Pike, speaking before a gathering of theological students at Wycliffe College of the University of Toronto, told them that there is a great need for ministers in the world today, and in particular in this country.

He had heard much of the wealth and industrial development of Canada, even before coming here. "But," asked he, "is that where the real wealth of this country lies?"

Describing a meeting he had spoken to the day before in Kingston, where 400 youth leaders had stood to listen to him, Chaplain Pike told of their great thirst for the word of God, emphasizing that this is growing ever more widespread.

"If I could only impress upon you the tremendous opportunities before you today... Youth is screaming out. They are looking to you and the rest of us to unfold the character of the Carpenter of Nazareth."

Friendly Finland

BY CATHIE BRESLIN

"The national pastime of the Danes is producing beer, and of the Norwegians, drinking it, of the Swedes criticizing them both, and of the Finns, taking Sauna baths," observed Scott Symons, IV Trinity, who returned "a shaken rory" from the World University Service Summer Seminar in Europe. Symons was one of three Toronto students who were sent abroad on the WUS project. He travelled throughout Scandinavia, and particularly Finland, with a group of 6 Canadian University students, led by Miss Lillian Soobik ("quelle belle") an Estonian, and a graduate of the University of Toronto.

The purpose of his tour was to study the Social Welfare State in Scandinavia. Different phases of study were the position of the Church, the role of the individual, and the potential of totalitarianism in the Social Welfare State; included in this was "an assessment of the position of Finland in relation to Russia." Symons felt there could be no doubt about the Finnish attitude toward Russia. Despite Russian protestations of friendship, the Finns "despise" their neighbor nation, he said, and look down upon its "peoples" as the products of a lower social order. Russian economic and political influence in what is sometimes referred to as a "window-dressed satellite" cannot be denied, he added.

Symons found it most strikingly symbolized in the Soviet Embassy in Helsinki, a "massive, awesome, opulent structure comparable to Buckingham Palace." This steel-shuttered monument to Soviet power was built by Finland as a part of the reparation payments of World War II, he said.

Challenging USSR claims to remain as a staunch ally in future war, the Scandinavians reply, "Finland, perhaps — but not the Finns."

Symons reported that despite the threat of Russian proximity and power, the Finns have established a democratic system of government in which they take a justifiable pride. Instead of the customary Scandinavian limited monarchy, Finland is ruled by a blend of the British and American Structures, combining the constitution principles of the U.S. with the "unwritten" cabinet system of Great Britain. The Finnish president, however, holds considerably more power than his U.S. counterpart.

The people of Scandinavia were "friendly and interested" in their Canadian visitors, Symons reported. Their philosophy of life is a vigorous one, centring on love of their native land, and devotion to health and outdoor living — the Finns particularly, Symons described as "a staunch people of the soil."

"Education in Scandinavia is not book-learning," Symons decided, "but a way of life." The attitude toward university was at the same time more casual and more mature than that of Canada. Scandinavian pupils consider themselves not so much "students" as "integral members of the community," and this outlook results in the minimization of a machine-like university structure. As the president of one national student union commented on his university: "Here, the first nine years pass quickly."

The contribution of the student to society is not neglected, Symons declared. He described the typical Finnish "Tech Town", a complete modern community which the students have constructed with their own fees (government + paid, incidentally) and their own labour. Education is considered not simply an opportunity to learn, but a normal and essential part of life. In Scandinavia, "everybody — and therefore nobody — is a student."

The Scandinavian way of life has its gayer side as well; Symons' comment on the drinking habits: "phenomenal." One particular custom which "shook" him was Tirpitz.

During the Second World War, the German battleship "Tirpitz" was trapped and sunk in a Norwegian fjord, settling under water upside-down. From this event, the Scandinavians developed the custom of shouting "Turpitz!" at convivial gatherings, whereupon all glasses must be turned bottoms-up.

Since the liquor was "a bit of a shaker" and the happy Scandinavians were prone to "Turpitz" on the slightest provocation, the Canadians found it rough going.

Yea Blue, Yea White

This weekend is the first of the Blues' home games. We will be entertaining our friends from Western — our arch rivals and last year's Yates Cup winners.

The Blue and White committee in conjunction with the stadium officials have arranged a half-time demonstration featuring the Blue and White band and the band from the University of Western Ontario. There is also a dance in the evening open to all university students.

These activities are planned with the purpose of contributing to your enjoyment both of the game and of the weekend. However plans without supporters are useless.

You will find, as you have probably been told about one million times before, that your participation will add to your own enjoyment.

Brrrr. Helen Mitchell and Bev Millman say that even if it's cold everything will be O.K. when the Blues turn on the steam against the Mustangs to-morrow.

our readers write:

lit to initiate new policy

I was indeed surprised to find that, of all people, a graduate student should take such a biased view of the proceedings at the last open Lit meeting. Some of Mr. Graham's implications and accusations must be cleared up. In stating my views on the $400 question of the executive of the Lit, but I am not speaking officially for the executive.

In the first place it is a question of whether the residence has any right to the money. Here are the facts. 1. The fund for a tangible gift to the college was started five years ago when there was not the slightest consideration given to spending it in the doomed men's residence. 2. The recommendation (which, of course, in no way binds us this year) of the last meeting last year did not say that all of the money in the gift fund should be devoted to the residence. Consequently, if by any stretch of the imagination the residence can even claim this money, then surely it cannot claim all of it.

This year there is a new executive and a new outlook. We are doing what we feel is best for the college when we present plans to renovate the JCR. We are certain that this will not be done unless we take the initiative, and every dollar we can put into the effort may mean two or three times that much after the University and the Alumni hear about our plans. When college officials give us the blame for the condition of the JCR, and when we look at the dilapidated furniture, the dirty, stained floor, the inadequate ventilation, the out-dated lighting, etc., and when we look at the men's residence in comparison, who can blame us for spearheading a drive to improve the JCR?

The Lit feels justified in taking such action when it is realized that many more people use the JCR each day than will use the residence more than two or three times in a year.

Mr. Graham says the executive tried to "annex" some of the money. He should know that the executive will not get the money in any way. The college as a whole will benefit, and it will only mean a lot more work for the executive to ensure that this is the case. Unlike the men from residence who wanted to vote themselves the money, I can speak for the executive when I say that we have no selfish motives in this matter. We are doing what we feel is best for the college; the men from 73 are doing what they consider is best for themselves.

But Mr. Graham says there was no attempt to railroad any motion. Why, then, did men from residence move closure of debate on several occasions in the face of many who wanted to speak? In one instance I moved a motion; it was seconded; and before I or any one else could utter one word in defence of my motion men from residence jumped up and moved and seconded closure of "debate". A motion of closure is not debatable. No railroadings?

Mr. Graham further charges that during a crucial vote some men were barred from the meeting. First, it should be noted that the newcomers were entering for the first time since they were rounded up by a few rabble-rousers who had just left the meeting to frantically round up some more men in residence. Second, we had to check the identity of each person entering, and this was the cause of the hold-up. Nobody was barred; we were only making sure that men, like Mr. Graham of Grad Studies, who were not U.C. undergraduates would not vote.

Next time, Mr. Graham, get the facts straight before you make wild and irrational accusations.

big bands and

A bang-up, razzle-dazzle entertainment program is planned by the Blue and White Society for spectators at tomorrow's Varsity — Western football game at the stadium.

During the half time, the Society will feature its band in the direction of Stan Clark and the Mustang band under the direction of Marvin Kwitko.

The bands will play, form precision figures, and will perform past. Pert drum majorettes and short-skirted cheerleaders.

At Hart House on Saturday evening there will be the "best dance in Toronto" according to B&W executive Hew Bourne. There will be five big-name bands in attendance, Bert Niosi being featured in the main gymnasium, Bobby Gimby playing in the upper gym, Betty Watson's strings in the music in the East Common Room.

This is Pat Elsley, one of the cheerleaders, to throw everything she can.

of the Blue's star performers. She's ready into the game against Western tomorrow. —VSP by Bill Fullerton

At 9.00 p.m., when the dance starts, Betty Watson will be playing in the main hall for a short period to provide a musical entry to the ball, moving up to the Music Room later, where the lights will be low and music sweet. The main gym will be decorated in a carnival circus theme, thanks to decorations and props borrowed from the circus recently in town. For those who desire something more substantial than the food of love, the new Arbor Room will be open from 9 p.m. until the dance closes around midnight. If the weather is sufficiently temperate the quadrangle will also be open.

The Society can positively assure anyone who attends a marvellous time, said Bourne, who extends a special invitation to freshmen to come along to the first big event of the Varsity social season. Ticket sales are living up generally to expectations, although the Society is somewhat worried about attendance due to the holiday week-end. However, he says, if you find yourself in town Saturday night, borrow two dollars and come on down to a really good dance. Ducats are still available at S.A.C., Hart House, or the Engineering Stores.

Bev Millman, Helen Mitchell, Jane Duff, and Pat O'Brien aren't asking for two draught... that's the Varsity victory sign and the girls say the Blues are a cinch to win against Western tomorrow. A Varsity photographer caught the quartette sipping coffee in the Arbor Room after cheering practice last night.

That Sporty Life

(Reprinted from McMaster Silhouette)

Sport, like a hobby, is a terrific thing. Everyone should play a sport of some kind. It conditions the mind, develops the reflexes, and makes the body beautiful. For the more vigorous types, there are the old reliables of football, basketball, hockey, etc.

I had a friend once who was an outstanding football player and it did wonders for his body. In fact, you might say he practically got a whole new body out of it. Of course, it cost his family a fair amount for the plastic surgeon; but you could really see the difference. So could his girl friend; that's when she started going out with his boy friend.

But the real benefits of sport stem from the participation; the spirit of competition and camaraderie that comes on a field of athletic endeavour. The attraction of this aspect is so strong that some of the best athletes in the country are willing to undergo the degradation and shame of being paid several hundred dollars a game just for the sheer pleasure of participation. Greater sacrifice knows no man. This kind of competition brings out the best that is in a man. The game's the thing. It matters not how you play, but only whether you win or lose.

For those who value life and limb, but still want exhaustive effort, there are a variety of satisfying alternatives, such as cross-country running, tennis, or swimming Lake Ontario. Then some rugged individuals prefer a good rousing set of table tennis or bean-bag. Really the possibilities are limitless for the ingenious types.

I know one girl who won her senior letter as Eastern Canada Marathon Bridge Champion. She trained in the battery five days a week for three years just for that one day of glory. It's unfortunate that she flunked out of her honour course because she had her heart set on a Dominion championship and she was in terrific shape.

Too bad they can't do something to persuade the professors to lower their standards slightly for outstanding athletes. Here was a girl who could have brought undying fame to the maroon and grey by her feats of endurance, but the necessary co-operation was lacking. But such is life. True heroes are never appreciated. Take me, for example. I was first string left tackle on our high school Tiddley Winks team, and they haven't even announced varsity tryouts (in two years yet). But my day will come. I'm still keeping in practice by regular elbow bending (in the battery, of course).

very serious

Football goalposts have a better chance of surviving post-game onslaughts this year. They have been sunk into the ground six feet deep. Gord Marshall of the Blue and White Society said yesterday.

Steel sleeves have been wrapped around the posts and they are sunk into imbedded concrete cubes three feet square.

Nylon padding has been wrapped around the goalposts for about six feet from the bottom. The nylon is said to be equivalent to a six-inch cushion of foam rubber.

To make the task of flying enthusiasts slightly more difficult, the top part of the goal posts are pieced.

The posts are considered permanent fixtures according to Marshall.

"Any damage done to these goalposts will be looked upon very seriously", said Marshall. The Blue and White Society expects to save seventy-five dollars per game and to afford players greater safety accorded by a round construction.

BLUES TO BUCK MUSTANGS

Speaking ^{1/2} OF SPORT

By ONE EYED BENNY

The door opened a crack. A battered tweed cap was thrown in. No shots were fired.

One-eyed Benny sauntered in. "New staff, eh?" he said. "Glad to see a few new ones coming along".

Benny, who only last week returned from a catastrophic summer at Belmont, Suffolk and similar spas, was resuming his winter occupation as U. of T. campus bookie and prognosticator.

"Gotta get even. Gotta get even", he kept muttering under his breath in the same level tones in which Marilyn Monroe had said "I'm sorry. I don't know".

"So the football season opens Saturday", Benny went on. "So Metras has a diamond T, eh? So he's gonna throw thirty passes, eh? So Getty and Girvin are back eh? So who cares? I like the Blues. Just like I liked 'em last year and who's gonna say I was wrong on that? I don't count a last-second, offside pass-play with the referee running interference as losing you a game. Although I will say that I paid off on all bets anyway".

"And as for Saturday, I give Varsity four touchdowns. That's twenty. Steve'll convert them and he should kick a field goal. That's 27. Western will get maybe two touchdowns and they'll be lucky to do it against Masterson's defence. Give Fracas a field goal, too. His footwork is real fancy. That adds up to 27-15. Any questions?

Now for Queen's and McGill. It's hard to say. Queen's look okay but McGill's played a good game and a bad one. Offhand, I'd say the bad one is more to form. Let's give Queen's, oh, how about 23 and McGill six. That's fair enough.

"It pains me to give up these point spreads but seeing the color of your money will be a good pain-killer. See you Monday and have it ready for me, kid.

Benny skulked out of the office.

Preview of Yates Cup At Stadium Tomorrow Blues Tackle Western

By MOISHE REITER

Watching tomorrow's big football game between the Varsity Blues and the Mustangs of Western will be like walking in at the end of a movie to see the finale. For the two most highly-rated clubs in Intercollegiate football this year, this match is like a preview of the Yates Cup play-off. As a preview it is a good indication of just who will wear the Intercollegiate crown for 1954.

Past records, pre-season victories and authoritative predictions go to the trashheap for this game. Every player, either Mustang or Blue, even those who would have to walk on crutches, is fired up to beat the opposition. This is the game that both must win, no matter whether they lose all others. Its Varsity and Western.

Bob Masterson fields a Blue club that must be favoured, despite a crippling series of injuries and reports of much confidence out of Western. The Blues are still short along the line with Norm Levine out, Baz Mackie aching slightly, Ray Yakasovitch slowed by a hurt chest and Frank Palermo still out. But to the good, lest the Mustangs, for want of horse-sense, think they're in for an easy time, there remains a line well-suited to rub the Western snout into the turf of Varsity Stadium.

If Don Getty and Don Girvin, star performers in John P. Metras "daring new" Diamond T formation, should get grave tomorrow they might just send a few Western ball-carriers into the Varsity front wall. Waiting to receive them are such as Bill Beamish, Bob Waugh, Al Macklin and a few very hard ends, supplemented by immovable line-backers. It's a fact that the line has lost a few excellent men, but the Mustangs are about to meet what is left. Should be interesting.

Even more interesting will be the meeting between Don Getty, "rated the top passer in the league last year" and the two Varsity rookies who will share that distinction this season. From what has been seen of Bill Stevenson and Harry Wilson so far, Getty will have an excellent lesson in the art of forward-passing Saturday afternoon. The Western pass defence is likely to have some of their weak spots pointed out by receivers Fred Smale, Don Smith, George Sulac and Ted Lansky.

If, in the unlikely event that the Varsity passing should flag, the only thing left for Masterson to do will be to have Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney or Phil Murtz run the ball. That would be unfortunate — for the Westerns.

In short, Varsity power is concentrated in every possible direction, and should shred the Mustangs defences thoroughly. But quite aside from all these material considerations we at The Varsity are confident that the Blues will take it. Why? Because One - Eyed - Benny says so, and Benny is never — well, almost never — wrong.

Soccerites Defend Title

Intercollegiate Soccer will act as an appetizer for the big Varsity-Western football game tomorrow afternoon. At noon on the back campus, the Senior Blues will engage the Western Seniors while at the same time on the front campus the Varsity and Western Intermediates will complete the doubleheader.

This will be the first game for the Blues who are the defending champions. Last year they won the Blackwood Trophy and the Toronto and District Football Association Trophy, symbolizing soccer supremacy in the South-Western Ontario League and the Eastern Intercollegiate League.

Besides meeting Western the Blues will play three other home-and-home series against McGill, McMaster and O.A.C. The Baby Blues and Western have only McMaster as a third intermediate team in their league but the Baby Blues are scheduled to play Ryerson Tech in an exhibition game.

The Cosmopolitan Blues appear to be much stronger than last year's championship team. Returning are Jose Atucha, leading scorer of last season from Venezuela, Bill Leach, Rod Green, and Brian Young, from England, Ron Williams from Trinidad, and Johnny Ubicki, one of the few Canadians on the team. Newcomers are Ray Griffin from Oxford University, and Sal Liz from Mexico.

Soccer coach Bob Auld has promised a double win, which he hopes will help build up a victorious spirit in the Varsity football team, who meet Western Mustangs immediately after the soccer games.

Gals' Softball

Yesterday the gals from St. Hilda's really took it on the chin as they lost their second game in as many tries. This time it was UC who proved their undoing. A ten run first inning was just too much for the Saints who couldn't come back with more of the same. Before the end UC had added five more and the final score was 15-8.

The weakest feature of the St. Hilda's infield is in what is perhaps the most important position—pitching. A good pitcher can make a poor team look good and by the same token a mediocre pitcher can ruin the chances of a good team. If the Saints could only improve in this one position, it would be a different story. But the fact remains that St. Hilda's simply has no one who can give the other teams a run for their money.

We don't want to take anything away from UC, however, because they played a good game all around. Particularly outstanding was Pat Mahaffie who hit two home runs, Claire McMullen, Daphne Walker and Jean Martin.

Mary Winship of the Saints played well in the field; while Janet Wright and Heather McPherson provided the power at bat.

There will have to be a decided improvement if the Saints are going to equal their record of last year when they reached the finals. But they may just fool everyone and win all their remaining games. In sport you can never tell. That's what makes it so enjoyable.

Hockey

In order to get in shape before the ice appears in Varsity Arena, will all Intercollegiate hockey aspirants meet Blue Manager Ron Garlick outside the south end of the Arena at 5:00 on Tuesday afternoon next? Bring along your workout clothes for a little jaunt around the Stadium track in order to strengthen the old legs in preparation for several games before Christmas.

Baby Blues, Rams Collide

This afternoon at 2:30 up in the Stadium, this year's Varsity Intermediates begin the hunt for their fourth straight Shaw Trophy. Jack Kennedy's crew will be in top shape for the tussle with Ryerson Rams who are fresh from a 37-0 wallowing absorbed in Guelph.

The Baby Blue backfield will be bolstered by hard runners Dave Creswell and Jack Rogers who have come down from the Blues for this game. Bill McKenna and Jim Bell also came down to add strength to an already good line.

Veteran backs Al Wong, Don Brown, and Jerry Hugo will be on hand to cut up the Rams, while Gary Banks will miss this one due to an injury received last night in practice. Newcomers John Ramsell from St. Andrews and Don Cornish from Etobicoke will be there too.

Lineman John Iglar, Jim Rowney, Gary Gorelle, Danny Neilson and Pete Polecrone are back from last year, as well as several newcomers who have looked very good in practice, notably Walt Radzick, Ted Lotocki, and Gary Canlett.

The Intermediates are an exceptionally strong club this year and should be favorites to repeat their win of last year. Their passing is better than it has been for some time.

U.C.'s Linton Stars

S.P.S. swamped all in the interfaculty championships; however, honours were divided. HH Exhibit

An exhibition of works by young New Brunswick artists is currently appearing at the Hart House Art Gallery. The works are varied in subject matter and media: landscapes, portraits, still lifes, abstracts, non-objectives in oil, water colour, ink pastel are displayed. The differences in the media employed by the artists imply a great interest in the physical technique of painting, which is further suggested by the contrasts between individual artist's styles.

None of the techniques displayed in the show have been developed to fruition by the artists. Often is a technical unbalance displayed: it seemed to me that a great interest in colour shown in LANDSCAPE by Julia Crawford, or in BOAT, CONCARNEAU by Jack Humphrey was paralleled by a neglect of the organization of space that resulted in a flat and unconvincing picture. Interest in the use of varied colour I found in a majority of the pictures in the show.

Again I found the slick smoothness of the pictures by Lawren Harris Jr. superficial and unsatisfying. Two careful paintings in tempera of nudes, by Alex Colville, had this same quality despite unexpected settings and a touch of humour. A strong feeling for solid form displayed in a small sketch, Fat Woman, by Elizabeth Sutherland was unfortunately ignored in the painting of the larger Portrait, Miller Britain's taste for disproportionate nudes in weird landscapes is not my own. White Stool by John Maxwell shows touches of vivid, laconic expression of form and colour that I hope will be developed further.

The one artist in the show who presents finished works I found sterile; nevertheless the more amateurish painting of Jack Humphrey, John Maxwell and others, is vigorous and thoughtful. In years to come they should produce more satisfying work.

BLUES IN PURPLE SQUEEZE

BLUES TIE WESTERN

Westerns Outplay Varsity Oneschuk Keeps It Tied

By MOISHE REITER

Followers of the Varsity Blues can prepare themselves for a football season of worry and excitement, after Saturday's 9-9 tie with the Western Mustangs. Though the score shows a close game, at no time after the first quarter did the Varsity play up to the power of the Mustangs for more than the briefest spurts. Somehow, exploiting Western fumbles, pushing opportunities for points, the Blues managed to tie it up, retaining their chance at first place in the league.

The first quarter certainly gave everyone the wrong impression. With seeming ease the Blues took their first chance at working the ball, starting at their own 36-yard line, and in four smooth plays had their touchdown, and, it seemed, the game was in the bag. At that point Varsity could do only right. The major had come on a pass to Steve Oneschuk from Bill Stevenson after it had been set up by a Stevenson to Oneschuk pass carrying play from the Varsity 36 to the Mustang 35, an end sweep by Oneschuk to the 21, and another end-run by Bob Pinkney to the Western 9.

But that great march was the last seen of the Varsity power Saturday afternoon. It must have sapped the strength of the big Blue line because from then to the end the Mustangs dominated in the front-wall activity, and so, of course, in the entire play.

Johnny Metras' new "Diamond T" formation, featuring the use of a double quarterback, was a powerful factor in confounding the Varsity defence, leaving the Varsity pass-defenders pulled in to close to the line and the Mustang receivers well in the clear. The direct snap to Don Getty, well back from the line, gave him plenty of time to aim his throws and this showed up in the completion department where Getty and Don Girvin, the other half of the Diamond T, hit on 18 of their 25 passes.

Varsity's Bill Stevenson, rushed by the driving Mustang wing-line, and his receivers safely defended completed only ten of 16 passes. With little protection Stevenson had to be good to make that many, and though the average looks a bit weak against Getty's it's still a good throwing record.

Brightest spots on the Varsity front wall were John Prendergast, at centre, who made the Western ball-carriers miserable by persistently getting in their way; Bob Waugh, who from his guard spot combined with Earl Ford on the other guard side, to toss the Mustangs weighty tackle Ted Roman about; and no one could ask for better than Fred Smale and Don Smith on the ends. Defensively Varsity had two excellent men in Don Cheeseman and Bob Kimoff, who broke through into several Western back-field parties, on one play

WUS Conference Planning Heads Agenda For Year

World University Service of Canada is making ambitious plans for the coming year, according to the program outlined by Chairman Ron Gould at the meeting of the External Affairs Meeting on Wednesday night.

Plans for the SHARE campaign are already well under way and show excellent results under the chairmanship of Barry Cook, according to Chairman Gould. A sizable profit was realized through the running of the Parking Lot for the Toronto-McGill game last week-end when they took in $130. The SHARE campaign will take place the week of Oct. 25. Mr. Gould emphasized that SHARE was no longer limiting itself to Asian relief.

For the WUS committee as a whole, the most important job is the planning of the National Conference which will be held in Toronto this year from Oct. 15-17. Mr. Gould feels that this conference is important to Toronto for the added prestige which it will bring. At that time WUS' program for the year will be drawn up.

Mr. Gould explained something of the nature of the Conference. It is purposely scheduled to coincide with the NFCUS cross-Canada conference, which this year is to be held from Oct. 18-23. This is convenient for financial reasons, said Gould, in that the same delegates can attend both conferences. Toronto, however, because the Conferences are on the campus, will be able to send separate delegations to each.

Of special interest to the University community is the WUS-sponsored visit of the Indian Treasure Van which will be here Nov. 25, said Gould.

Modern Man Muscular, Minus Molars Says Carpenter On "Exploring Minds"

Overall theme of the television show "Future Man", the first in a series entitled "Exploring Minds", was that our children may be swelled-headed, hairless, huge and toe- and toothless.

The programme was narrated by E. S. Carpenter, a member of the University of Toronto staff. In the course of twenty minutes he traced the changes in human physique from about 150,000 B.C. to the present. Among his daring speculations for the future was this: "Man may develop into a huge superman who chases women in tight clothes."

In the realm of height, man has matured from a comparatively short and stocky mass of muscles to the modern variety of the lanky limpid freshman. Said Mr. Carpenter, "Our successors will undoubtedly increase in stature until the average height reaches seven feet or more." This phenomenal growth is attributed to ever-improving nutritional and medical facilities. Man's skull is also due to increase. The tendency will be towards bulging foreheads, hollow, depressed cheeks, and small faces, or, as Mr. Carpenter so eloquently put it, "We will be breeding a race of eggheads."

"Human hair is destined to become a collectors item. The increasing head surface will have no toleration for masses of human hair," said Mr. Carpenter. Also, as the size of the jaw decreases, so the number of teeth will decrease. The tooth area will recede and eventually may disappear. Certainly there will be no longer any wisdom teeth or molars.

The receding of the teeth will also cause facial muscles to weaken and decrease in size. In addition to the above-mentioned sunken cheeks, man will develop a pointed chin, pointed ears, and an upturned nose.

Among the other predicted changes are the continued weakening of the arches, and the disappearance of the human toe. Already the little toe has ceased to have any value, and its companions will soon be in the same position.

Whether these changes might be termed improvements or tendencies towards complete physical degeneration was left up to the audience.

Student Directory

A new and more convenient Student Directory will be initiated this year. Students' names will be listed in alphabetical order, rather than by faculty and year, as has been done in previous years.

This innovation is the result of a new registration card designed by J. C. Evans, University of Toronto Registrar, and is being used as "a new experiment".

In former years a student registered with his college or school, rather than with the Registrar. Consequently, the information necessary to the Directory could not be compiled without a great deal of work and time.

Another important advantage of the new system is the possibility of an early estimation of the total enrollment. A first registration report shows that enrollment for the University as a whole has increased this year. There is a total of 9,832 students compared to 9,486 last year. However, these figures are not final, as all registration cards have not yet come in, said Mr. Evans.

Commenting on the old system, Mr. Evans said that information for statistical purposes was "difficult and sometimes impossible" to obtain. The new "University of Toronto Personnel Card" will make such statistics available with a minimum of effort, due to the punch-card index system used.

Apart from clerical labor, the printing and binding cost of the Directory exceeds two dollars a copy. At one dollar a copy, the student price, "He's getting a pretty good bargain," Mr. Evans said. A single copy of the book would cost $3,000 to print.

Students who do not complete a card when registering or who wish to change anything on it should report this information to the Office of the Registrar, Simcoe Hall, before October 15, Mr. Evans emphasized.

Singing, Dancing, Loafing At Caledon International Students On Weekend

Barn dancing, mixed sauna bathing and calypso music were the keynotes of the International Students Organization's Thanksgiving weekend at Caledon Hills farm. Many nationalities were represented in group, including Canadians, who turned out in greater numbers than usual.

Although fog and drizzly weather limited outdoor activity, singing, dancing and loafing were found to be good substitutes for more strenuous forms of entertainment.

The "Merry Bachelors' Club" was the result of a deficiency of the fairer sex. Strangely enough, none of its members were eager to apply for a charter after an evening's experimental session.

English pub songs, Canadian folk songs and ribald songs were sung with great gusto whenever the mood prompted. Steam baths in the sauna hut built during the summer by visiting Finnish students were also popular.

Business and pleasure were combined in the groups' work project, which consisted of whitewashing the stables and painting the porch. They were assisted by members of the Exploration Society who formed part of the weekend group.

Calypso music and a bonfire were Saturday night's entertainment. A barn dance was held Sunday evening in the hayloft.

England, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, India, Germany, Estonia, Holland, Scotland, Italy, the West Indies, Greece, Cyprus, the United States, and Canada were represented in the group, which included guests as well as regular members of the ISO.

Review Vic Drama

"The Victoria College Drama Club is at a crisis," said Dr. David Knight, English Lecturer at Victoria. Wednesday night to a meeting of the club. Speaking as a representative of the executive of the society, Dr. Knight reviewed the history of theatre on the campus since the war, and showed what needed to be done to keep a strong theatrical movement.

Last year, the club had its finest year, producing fine one-act shows of Tennessee Williams, Everyman, and T.S. Eliot, as well as Shakespeare's Much 'Ado About Nothing in conjunction with Trinity.

"This is very much like the situation in 1945-46 when we were riding the crest of the waves," said Dr. Knight. "Nothing could happen. But two years later, the club was producing commercial hokey on a second-rate plane."

Part of the reason was the reaction of college clubs to the establishment of Hart House Theatre with Robert Gill as director. Victoria had maintained that the individual clubs must sustain their programs on the same plane as previously. This would give lesser actors a greater chance. "Doing" was what counted, and the semi-professional aspect of Hart House imposed necessary restrictions.

University College on the other hand, stressed professional training above everything else, Dr. Knight said. The college clubs therefore, became feeders — a minor-league theatre. This mean minor-league theatre. This minor league theory meant that the Trinity club went bankrupt, while the plays of UC and Vic deteriorated in quality.

It was not until two years ago that a revival began at Victoria culminating in last year's triumph, he said.

"It is time to approach the problem with a new outlook," continued Dr. Knight. "Hart House is valuable in that it gives a professional setting, but the really amateur theatre of the college is necessary as well to train less experienced actors. Actors must not give loyalty to either one at the expense of the other, but to both equally, recognizing the value of each."

The meeting concluded with a one-act play, The Trysting Place by Booth Tarkington, and refreshments.

A Penny - a - Charity

Tomorrow the taggers for the Community Chest Red Feather campaign will be stationed around the campus, soliciting your donations.

Very few off-campus organizations are allowed to carry on such campaigns on the campus. However, the Community Chest covers such a wide variety of services and is at the disposal of all the members of the community that its presence on the campus is justified.

Sixty-eight different charities are represented in this appeal for funds. To a large extent it provides the student an opportunity to discharge one side of his responsibility to the community at large.

Last year less than nine cents per student were contributed to the campaign. This appears to be an unconscionably small amount. We cannot believe that one penny per charity for the whole year constitutes an unbearable burden.

Yea Who, Yea What

Saturday's game demonstrated an alarming difference in calibre between the cheerleaders of this university and those of Western.

We do not know who was responsible for the ineptitude and general lethargy of the cheerleaders, but we do feel that there was a vast gulf between them and their U.W.O. counterparts.

During the last quarter when the Blues were down three points going into the quarter and later tied the score and fought a close battle down to the finish our cheerleaders were performing less than three and one half minutes of the twenty-five minutes required to play off the quarter.

We sympathize with the lot of the cheerleaders but we do believe that they can contribute more to the colour of the game than was done during the game on Saturday.

Tenderminded

One of the most destructive forces at work in our society is a pseudo-Christian influence which operates on the premise that everyone must love everyone else.

This attitude has paralyzed our major educational and religious institutions, into a fog of indecision.

All too often, people and organizations refrain from taking positive action, as dictated by their principles, simply for the sake of maintaining "the even tenor of their ways."

To have regard for the feelings and sensitivities of others is a noble sentiment but when it results in the emasculation of one's principles it can scarcely be upheld as a Christian virtue.

There are those, and we count ourselves among them, who believe that this "good-guyism" has in a very real sense accounted for the waning impact of the churches and universities in our societies.

NFCUS Policy Statement

This year for the first time the members of the External Affairs Committee of the Students' Administrative Council have formulated a policy with regard to the National Federation of Canadian University Students known hereafter as N.F.C.U.S. The following is an unofficial statement of that policy:

N.F.C.U.S. Policy Statement

The following is an unofficial statement assessing the position of the students of the University of Toronto in regard to the National Conference on this campus commencing Oct. 18th and lasting throughout that week.

The issues herein outlined will be open to discussion at the S.A.C. meeting of Oct. 13th from which the decisions of the Council at that time will be taken to the N.F.C.U.S. Conference by the two Toronto delegates as official policy. All students are entitled to attend this meeting. Recommendations, suggestions and all expressions of opinion must be conveyed to your S.A.C. Rep. to be presented through him at that meeting.

Mandates:

Toronto has taken a lead in certain N.F.C.U.S. projects and it is possible we will receive mandates for (1) the implementation of Massey Commission recommendations on National Scholarships on account of the very active N.F.C.U.S. sub-committee in this respect on this campus; and (2) the Art Competition which was so successfully organized from this campus after Christmas last year.

In addition, Toronto will be pressing for an extension of Weekend Exchanges from our experience particularly in Carabin weekends of some years.

Finances:

The proposed fee raise was rejected before the Board of Governors and Toronto will be unable to fulfill her obligation of 50 cents per student through lack of funds. Queens, McGill and UBC are said to be in the same position of having only 20 cents per student to give. There will no doubt be considerable discussion at the Conference and coming in particular from those universities who are paying 50 cents. Toronto has no source of revenue from which she can possibly pay more than 20 cents.

International Activities:

The two main topics in this respect will be the COSEC Conference in Istanbul, Turkey, and the recent International Union of Students Council in Moscow. The main point of discussion arising from the latter is the question of N.F.C.U.S. Associate Membership in I.U.S. (Communist dominated). COSEC is the equivalent Western international student organization established after the Communist tendencies of I.U.S. became readily apparent.

Doug Hamlin (IV Vic) has just returned from the Moscow Council as the official U. of T. student observer. He states certain advantages of Associate Membership, but reports that the disadvantages of the N.F.C.U.S. name being linked with I.U.S. and the internal effects that Associate Membership would have on N.F.C.U.S. within Canada, outweigh the positive value of any form of membership. Hamlin stresses that this is not to say that co-operation will not be possible with I.U.S. in the future.

Travel Service:

There is the growing feeling that the Travel Service of N.F.C.U.S. be separated from the administration end and placed under the present Secretary-Treasurer, J. Yves Pilon. Any surplus in the travel service income would be directed to cover the cost of the national administration of N.F.C.U.S. At present, the travel service offers exceptional travel arrangements to students at minimum rates and it is felt that this service should be extended.

Toronto Proposals and Resolutions

The following are purely suggestions which may be considered at the S.A.C. meeting. Any further ideas or matters of interest will be welcomed.

(1) the investigation of other national student organizations by a NFCUS Committee, with a particular view to problems similar to our own.

(2) the abolition of the full-time National Presidency with salary — it is felt however, that a national student president is desirable as a focal point for leadership in student affairs in Canada — this would not necessitate a one year abandonment of studies by the individual concerned — no salary would accompany the position.

(3) the setting up of a Secretariat with two branches (1) travel (2) administration, each with one secretary — such a secretary to be a recent graduate of a Canadian university in close contact with student affairs. — these to be full-time positions.

(5) concentration on national rather than international activities — in that such questions as I.U.S. Associate Membership and Russian student visits tend to defeat the basic national aims of NFCUS in the controversy of international tensions. This in no way suggests our withdrawal from COSEC, the western international student union.

(6) the shortening of the national conference by a reasonable period of time.

Essentially it must be realized that NFCUS may only become an efficient and effective representative of the student with the earnest and sincere efforts and cooperation of the student body as a whole. Without such, all proposals and resolutions Toronto may put forth at this Conference will be meaningless.

Tony Enriquez, National President of NFCUS from Ottawa University, has been invited to attend and speak at this coming S.A.C. meeting. At that time he will strive to clear up a number of misconceptions existing at present re NFCUS. Once again, you are reminded that you may attend this meeting to hear Tony and learn first hand from the discussion what NFCUS is and what the essential points of policy and programme are.

The purpose of this unofficial statement is to inform the student body as a whole of the issues involved in this coming NFCUS Conference in the hope that your interest will be sufficiently aroused to express an opinion one way or the other. Only by such an expression will your delegates be able to go to the Conference aware of the student opinion behind them.

These statements are necessarily brief, concise and therefore incomplete. You will please forgive such and may rest assured they will be fully explained next Wednesday evening.

Cries From Antipodes

The Editor,
The Varsity

This is an open letter to Mr. O. Pidhaini by one of those whom he attacked in his recent article. He accuses U. of T. Socialists of always looking at the sad side of life. It is easy to forget that people are starving in one part of the world, when you live in that part which has a surplus. It is simple to forget that some shall never have the opportunity of obtaining a higher education, when you, yourself, can manage to enjoy this privilege.

Yes, and it is also easy to banish from your thoughts the insecurity of old age, when you are young, and the threat of illness when you are healthy. Just as you may turn your back upon the eyesore that is to be the new U.C. residence and gaze upon the magnificent edifice that is to be the new library, you may turn your back upon the unpleasant things of life.

Isn't it the ostrich that buries its head in the sand in time of trouble and pretends that the trouble isn't there? Then, do likewise, Mr. Pidhaini. When you see the line of unemployed grow longer, the needs of the underprivileged unattended and the fruits of the labourers taken from the very hands that produce them, turn your back on these offensive sights; you will be able to observe the clutching capitalist relaxing securely in his palatial mansion, or perhaps he is at his yachting club or out on the golfing green.

Unhappily, we Socialists find it difficult to turn our backs and close our eyes and ears to the disagreeable aspects of society, so we must plod along our solemn way, our only consolation, the knowledge that we seek the facts and their correction. And you, Mr. Pidhaini may go your blissful way and so that we dark-eyed creatures won't bother you, just turn your back on us or close your eyes when we pass you by; you won't even know that we are there.

We won't disturb you, I promise, we shall just slither unobtrusively by, inwardly contriving how to cleanse Denmark of its foulness.

Fix That Clock

The Editor,
The Varsity

With all due respect for the capabilities of the U.C. Literary Society, we must confess that we read the report of the Society's Tuesday meeting with mixed feelings.

However, after three weeks of careful observation we have concluded that there is, indeed, one item which would prove a most useful gift to the residence, and which every member of U.C. would appreciate; namely, a clock which tells the correct time.

The present clock, we have noted, functions beautifully at 9:00 AM and 5:00 PM, but how its little mechanical mind works the rest of the day we have yet to discover. This is not right. We have all we can do to work up school spirit within U.C. without the disdainful comments of other campus types surreptitiously hunting for a mark of imperfection in our fair college. Please, even if only out of pity for the poor clockless females to the immediate north, couldn't a little bit of that tidy sum become a Fix That Clock fund?

Vaughan Williams Courtesy of Conservatory

Last Friday afternoon, Toronto was very much privileged in being afforded a chance to hear a lecture delivered by the noted English composer Ralph Vaughan Williams.

By his own confession, Dr. Williams enjoys most those lectures given to extensive and free digression and thus his subject of Music In Culture was dilated, by means of the most engaging circumlocutions, to a subject of music in general.

I am alarmed by the current mania for those engaged in artistic creativity to discourse voluminously, divulging professional secrets calculated to bring about sure success in artistic ventures.

Dr. Williams occupied himself with none of this, and therefore delivered a highly impersonal and most refreshing address.

"Music," he maintained, "originated, not with the chance invention of a corn-stalk flute, but rather from excited speech, which, upon reaching a certain emotional intensity, took on a 'jubilative, mystical' quality, transcending its rational function." This point is fundamental with him. Music for him then, is a means of "reaching for the ultimate realities". At all times the Doctor stressed the close relationship of words and melody, the first as the source of the second, the second as the ultimate realization of the first. These elements together with rhythm which arose out of the exaggerated body gesticulations accompanying the jubilations form the principal stuff out of which folk songs are fashioned, and this recognition obviously accounts for Dr. Williams' inveterate interest in that material.

Listing the three elements of music as melody, rhythm and harmony, he began an inspection of each, but obviously was forced to curtail his address prematurely due to some very rude "spectators" who found the speaker far less palatable than their suppers.

He concluded with a few words of advice to young composers. He cautioned them not to be overly delectated with "foreign" influences, nor to become blind partisans of any one school of musical thought without first examining all schools.

His conclusion seemed to strike a flaw. Dr. Williams still regards Canada as a student of British artistic progress, but fails to realize that, nowadays Canada is influenced musically much more profoundly by developments in the United States and Europe, than by those in Great Britain.

However, the experience of hearing Dr. Williams was a thoroughly wholesome one, and I do hope Dean Neal will not be discouraged by discourteous Toronto audiences from engaging other fine speakers for us to hear.

Miss Julie Opens UC Drama Season With Social Jolt

Rich girl meets poor boy—with none of the usual ramifications. August Strindberg's Miss Julie, written almost 70 years ago, is still so modern in thought that it invites a summing-up in such "celluloid" terms, if only for the sake of the lead. However, Miss Julie, which will be presented at the Women's Union Theatre October 14 and 15 as this year's first production of the University College Players' Guild, is really far more—a study in class-consciousness with the "love" of a lady of nobility for her father's valet.

For Lady Julie, (Charlotte Schraeger) love as such is completely non-existent. Her closest, and in fact her only approximation to it is the stimulation of apparently unquestioning respect under all conditions. Fleeing from reality, from any hint of sexuality within or around her, she finally meets it in Jean (Les Lawrence), her father's manservant, and her self-laceration ends in her seduction and suicide.

The play is directed by Leon Major, who is also responsible for the choreography of the ballet sequence, with music by Milton Barnes.

FRIDOLIN

Little Rooster

Canadian Culture Grows

Canadian culture, celluloid division, received a long-awaited shot in the arm last Thursday night at the Avenue Theatre, Tit-Coq, filmed in French from Gratien Gelinas' well-known play of the same name, is probably the best feature-length film ever made entirely in this country with native talent. As M. Gelinas, better-known as Fridolin, said just before the premiere, "The United States can supply us with cars and refrigerators, France with perfumes and fine wines, Great Britain with good woollens—but no other country can supply us with our own culture." Thus we welcome Tit-Coq for what it is—a signpost towards an individual Canadian film industry.

In play form, Tit-Coq received considerable critical acclaim in this country, and was an outstanding box-office success. As a film, the pattern may be repeated—but no prophetic I. The film of Tit-Coq, however, is far from being a finished product. The play has not been lifted from the boards with complete success. In two important aspects it misses fire—in its lack of filmic imagination in the direction, and in an insufficiently convincing adaption from play to screen-play.

To Fridolin himself must one of these defects be charged—and only because he personally has attempted too much. Besides portraying the principal character, Tit-Coq, M. Gelinas is both the author and producer of the motion picture. This is not the recommended procedure for obtaining a detached point of view. As a result the picture follows the play far too closely, scene for scene, with a few extra shots taking the place of the curtain to represent the passage of time. The film was shot on a Canadian budget; therefore many technical faults must be excused for financial reasons. But there is no price on imagination. This story could very well have been made into a film masterpiece of the stature of Brief Encounter, but for this natural reluctance on the part of the author to scrap a few unfilmic scenes of the original play and to substitute some new scenes and a change in order. He could have given us, for example, some flashbacks into the "Little Rooster's" childhood, perhaps some scene of the Desilets' family life.

But an even more severe criticism must be levelled at the direction of the film, credited to Rene Delacroix and Akos Farkas. These men are professional film-makers; therefore it seems strange that the lighting and framing are so uniformly dull. Almost no advantage is taken of the film medium—straight shots are the rule—with some of them unpardonably cut in the middle of a movement. There are very few interesting angles, or well-thought-out sequences of shooting or cutting—it is almost always as if the play had been filmed on the stage of the Royal Alex.

But having performed the disagreeable portion of my critical duties, I must admit that some orchids should be handed out for this very real achievement in the history of Canadian films. First an orchid to Gratien Gelinas himself, for his superb interpretation of the fightingest little soldier in the Canadian army. He is at the same time comic and pathetic, as the appealing bastard who falls in love with Marie-Ange, a girl from a large, closely-knit family. He leaves her to go to war, and finds her married at his return. The story is simple, but the universality of the theme and the dramatic craft of Fridolin brought tears to the eyes of many of those present at the premiere. Moreover, Fridolin must be praised for his personal success in adapting his method of acting to the screen, with its need for a subtle arch of the eyebrow instead of the classic stage wink. He restrains admirably his tendency to steal the stage, entirely permissible in the one medium, but quite revolting when permanently recorded on the other. His facial expressions are highly stylized for effect, and his body movements are perfectly in keeping with the character he has created. Fridolin is easily Canada's Fernandel.

As for the others in this generally fine cast, Clement Latour stands out for his Buster Keatonish portrayal of Jean-Paul, the brother of Marie-Ange. Monique Miller as Marie-Ange was quite credible—pretty, but with a tiny space between her front teeth, her hair never perfectly in place, and her clothes generally dowdy as only a girl of her class can wear them. This is where Canada outshines Hollywood for realism, for however poor a Hollywood heroine may be, she is certain to have been dressed in a designer's creation, and her make-up is generally impeccable. Marie-Ange looked and acted like the working daughter of a lower-middle-class Quebec family—and this is an achievement in itself.

This realism was carried over to the sets, which, although suspiciously similar to what appeared a few years ago at the Royal Alexandra, conveyed an atmosphere which was indisputably that of only one place in the world, French Canada. The pictures on the walls, the Christmas decorations and party in the Desilets home were really part of a French-Canadian poem; the sequences belong to the film archives.

The Padre, played by Paul Dupuis, was unconvincing, partly because of his accent, which was theatrical rather than Canadian French. His make-up also was too obvious. The other actors were better than average, but still a little too theatrical for their new medium.

The continued love of Marie-Ange and Tit-Coq after her marriage to another man provides the play with its basic problem. If she leaves her husband to live with Tit-Coq, their children would all be bastards like their father, and so the decision to be taken is a difficult one for all concerned. The problem is bluntly posed, in a way which cannot fail to arouse some emotion in the spectator. This it can be concluded that the "Little Rooster" has not laid an egg—but he has less than he imagines to crow about.

Accompanying Explained

A surprisingly large proportion of English musicians have made themselves prominent in relatively neglected fields. The field of accompanying is one of the most unpromising of them all, since the accompanist almost always has to subordinate himself to the soloist. It is therefore all the more remarkable that Gerald Moore has become so eminent.

He gave some indication of how he achieved this feat at last Thursday's lecture recital which opened the series given by the women's Musical Club at Eaton Auditorium. Illustrating his lecture with accompaniments to songs mainly by Schubert, he described what is demanded from the accompanist. Fortunately, Mr. Moore has a good sense of humour though it sometimes verges on the slapstick (he reminded me several times of Victor Borge). This made the lecture entertaining as well as instructive.

He went on to show how the accompanist should set the mood for the song and how he should help the song to tell the story. He also demonstrated the sometimes ruinous effect of transposition and finally how the accompanist should behave at a recital.

Mr. Moore also played two solo pieces; unfortunately they were too short to give a reliable indication of his ability as a soloist. I have never been sure whether a good accompanist makes a good soloist. There is something to be said for both sides of the argument. It would be interesting to listen to a solo recital given by Mr. Moore.

BLUES JUST MANAGE TIE, WILL IMPROVE

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

Of all the fantastic images that have come into being since the University of Toronto was built, way back in the dark ages, certainly the most pretentious was the hare-brained, do-or-die Varsity football fan, whom one used to be able to identify as far away as Church Street on a Saturday afternoon.

Being one of these myself, I have begun to wonder how it was we came into existence, or what is more to the point, how it is that we have died. Some of us I know are still shouting, and will be for the remaining years of our stay, and then there are others who pretend to be vitally interested in this sort of thing, and even venture to regard themselves as administrative landmarks and University institutions as permanent as Hart House. There is a group on the campus whose function we supposed was the promotion of spirit within the University. The Blue and White Society has once again demonstrated its inability to offer sufficient inducement to students and paying spectators alike, sufficient that is to fill Varsity Stadium to capacity.

Spirit is a vague thing—it's difficult to decide where the fault should lie when its presence is lacking. A goodly share of it is up to the student himself, but also a great part of the burden of production must be shouldered by a figurehead, and this position ought to be filled by the Blue and White Society. Suffice it to say that the sole remaining vestige of spirit left on this campus is the Blue and White band, and that's not enough.

We won't venture to estimate what percentage of the Saturday afternoon is occupied by the football game itself, and what part by the colorful show provided by the students and the Blue and White Society alike, but we feel that the focal point of a football weekend should not be the Saturday night dance in Hart House, but the football game in the afternoon. That's where the sports angle comes in.

After all, the pros don't give the customers any color at all; the colleges are expected to. Furthermore a full stadium has far-reaching advantages for the student body and the University as a whole. Football is the only sport that pays for itself at this University, and in the past it has supported all the other sports in the school year. A sufficient balance in the Athletic Association's ledger books could mean a new Field House.

The Blue and White Society, in its effort to come up with a good show, appears to have forgotten a very important point. The old stunts, used with great success only three and four years ago, are just as good to-day. What about the blue and white cards that turned the south end into a sea of colour? Or the Interfaculty cheerleaders? Not that the Blue and White girls aren't enough but think of all that colour to draw the fans.

And as far as student spirit goes, what happened to the Stadium, shows past pride of the Blue and White Society. Or the old School of Law horse, and the ancient half-time demonstrations, both organized and disorganized.

It is a fair-sized problem, but one that we feel needs immediate attention. The solution can be effected by one man, and that man should be at the head of the Blue and White Society.

From the Blue Room . . . Practices for the Intercollegiate Squash team begin this Thursday evening in Hart House . . . Steve Oneschuk and Don Smith are the capable co-captains of this year's Varsity Blues. Phil Muntz assisted the Blue's cause with 38 yards from five carries on Saturday.

You're Twisting My Arm

Steve Oneschuk goes high for a Stevenson pass in the Western end zone but the Mustang defenders have other ideas about the whole thing. The happy ending to this little tale is that Steve made it good for a Varsity touchdown and the little horses from Western were somewhat miffed about the matter.

—V.S.P. by Bill Fullerton

Kimoff tipping a Mustang fumble into the hands of Sano Martini, another Varsity guard who spent much time in the Western backfield.

For the next Western-Varsity game Bob Masterson will have to find a way for his Blues to stop Ralph Simmons and Gino Fracas on their line smashes that piled up a good part of the Mustangs' 22 first downs to Varsity's 11.

It was a big day for Steve Oneschuk, as he scored the entire Varsity total on a touchdown, convert and a field goal for nine points. For Western it was Getty taking a Girvin throw for the major, and Fracas kicking a field goal from the Varsity 27.

BLUE BITS . . . It was hard to understand how Labett could get his kicks away when Don Smith was coming through at him so fast . . . The Mustangs seemed to have Phil Muntz taped on almost every play, still he got away for a few nice runs, so long as there were only a couple of Mustangs on his shoulders . . . Things should be better for Varsity next week when Frank Palermo starts running again and Ted Lansky gets back . . . Al Riva must have magnetic fingers, the way he snared that Stevenson screen pass with one hand early in the fourth period.

Ramsell, Mucci Score Touchdowns Baby Blues Defeat Ryerson 11-0

BY FRED GRAY

Patching up several bare spots in the offence with an airtight defence, the Baby Blues salvaged an 11-0 victory from the Ryerson Rams in Varsity Stadium Friday.

The defensive squad were the main factor in both Varsity touchdowns, as the Seconds appeared surprisingly shaky in their first outing. With three minutes to go in the second quarter, halfback Don Mucci grabbed a Ryerson fumble and galloped fifty yards for the first major.

Fleet backfielder Jack Rogers set up the other Blue touchdown, returning a Ram kick from his own forty-five to the Ryerson fifteen. Eluding three Ram tacklers at the centre stripe, Rogers reared down the far touch line only to be pushed into touch yards short of pay dirt.

It took the Intermediates five plays to push the ball over, but after a succession of runs by John Ramsell and Don Brown, Ramsell finally sliced across from the one yard line. Quarterback Larry Joynt converted to make the score 11-0.

In addition to the seemingly inept ground attack of the Blues, the refereeing left something to be desired. Constant whistles and handkerchiefs marred the game. The Varsity defence, however, was little short of perfect, completely smothering Ryerson's pass attack, as well as stopping their ground attempts.

Ram quarterback Doug Leggett was a standout performer as were Bob Hoffman and Len Lambert. Halfback Jim Allsop was taken to hospital with a gashed jaw late in the first half. The Ryerson kicking was ably handled by Dave MacIntosh.

Blue captain Al Wong played another tremendous game, backed up by fine running by Jack Rogers, Don Brown and John Ramsell. Don Mucci, who scored the first Blue major, suffered a fractured finger in a vain attempt to knock down a Ryerson pass late in the third quarter.

Big Archery Meet

BY JO RATCLIFFE

The women's archery club which has been meeting four days a week since the beginning of the year will be culminating its season this week with the all important annual interfaculty tourney.

This event which began as an annual affair last year brought archery into the ranks of the "big sports" on the Toronto campus. PHE took the meet honors in the '53 season which is no standard to go by again, necessarily.

Competing for the "Silver Arrow," the teams, made up of two, will begin the ends Thursday from 12 till 2:00 p.m. at the stadium. It will continue on Friday at the same time and place. Teams have been limited to two per college or faculty—that means four individuals can compete for each.

Each team will have a try at three ends and combined scores of each will determine the winner of the meet. Ends will be shot from the 20, 30 and 40-yard line which means that to get the proper distance, they will have to be shot somewhere where there's space. Unfortunately, this excludes the Drill Hall. So in case of rain, of which we seem to have enough, the entire event will be postponed.

There's an added feature in the meet this year—goodies, that is, free food. Coffee, and cookies are on the menu—and sandwiches.

By the way, eyes will be peeled for intercollegiate material. Kay Sladen, who is heading this sport on the campus this year is the only remains of last year's intercol squad. Weekly scores have been kept to date and will have some bearing on the makeup of the all-important foursome.

GOLDEN GAELS SCALP REDMEN 46-11

The Queens' University Gaels, apparently the surprise powerhouse of the Intercollegiate Union, to-day are sitting atop the league standings for the first time in seventeen seasons, by virtue of the 46-11 shellacking they handed McGill on Saturday, and the Western-Varsity tie.

Unleashing a dazzling and varied attack, and taking advantage of numerous McGill fumbles, the Tri-Color rolled up eight touchdowns, two each by Gary Schreider and Ron Stewart, and one each by Dick James, Brian Wherrett, Karl Quinn, and Jack Cook. Schreider was the individual high scorer, converting five of the majors for a total of fifteen points for the afternoon. Jock Thompson kicked a single to complete the Gaels total, while Bob Perry and Herb English scored for McGill with ex-Marauder Ed. Parente converting.

Freshman quarterback Wally Mellor threw three touchdown passes as the Gaels rolled to the impressive win. However, the Redmen outstrutted them on the 13—Queens—convert (Schreider) ground, gaining 303 yards to 190 for Queens. McGill fumbled eight times, and only recovered once, and three of these turned into Gael touchdowns, as the Tri-color began a drive for their first title since the fall of 1937.

HOCKEY

In order to get in shape before the ice is ready in Varsity Arena, will all Intercollegiate hockey aspirants meet manager Ron Garlick outside the south end of the Arena at 5:00 this afternoon. Bring along your workout clothes; a little jaunt around the Stadium track may be in order to strengthen the old legs in preparation for several games before Christmas.

Double Victory By Soccer Blues

The Varsity senior and Intermediate soccer teams scored twin 7-0 victories over visiting teams from the University of Western Ontario on Saturday, and once again served notice on the Intercollegiate championship.

The Seniors, sparked by team captain Jose Atucha who scored three goals, eased into a 4-0 half time lead, then added three more in the second stanza. Outside right forward Rod Green counted two as did Bill Webb. One of Atucha's goals came on a penalty shot awarded to the Blues after an infraction was committed by the Purple and White team.

Centre half Ron Williams played a solid game for the Seniors, and was ably assisted by an English import Ray Griffiths. Ernie Gascor, in goal, performed again in the fashion that allowed only five goals to be scored against the Blues last season. The Blues won the championship in both leagues last fall, scoring 45 goals against their opposition.

Dave Wood, the Intermediate captain, Bill Weery, and Quntuu scored twice each for the Seconds, while Ochym added the other. Scoring four goals in the first half, and then three more in the second frame, the Intermediates appeared to have improved at least 200 per cent over last year's squad which lost out to OAC, the eventual league champions. A good goalkeeper was the difference, and the Intermediates now seem to be a winning combination.

The Baby Blue soccer team will continue their quest for the title on Wednesday afternoon against Ryerson on the front campus at 3:00.

Rugger Blues Defeated Barbarians Win 21-3

Lack of strength in the scrum was the most obvious factor contributing towards the defeat of the Varsity Rugger Blues in Monday's game with Toronto Barbarians II, played on the back campus. The score of 21-3 however, came a little high, as four of the visitors' five tries were made in breakaways by their devastating three line.

Without regulars Robinson and Dunsmuir and still looking for a steady line man, the Blues were unhappy in the set scrums. Their failure to get the ball out gave Barbarians ample opportunity to get their three line functioning, along with a stand-off and scrum-half who acted beautifully as a unit.

To the Blues goes the cold consolation of having scored the first try to be made against the Barbarians this season. The score came midway through the second half, when a concerted forward rush spear-headed by Gamble brought the Varsity team to within ten yards of the visitors' goal-line. The ball was carried over by Chadwick, stand-off for the Blues, and one of the standouts of the game.

As for the rest of the game, it was Barbarians almost all the way. Their four three-quarters (two of whom played on the provincial select) passed too short and too often for the Blues to catch up with them. A little more tackling by Varsity, and the score might have been a lot more even.

Speculations on Spectacles

The Pageant's Plight

"It is an act of homage to the most wonderful woman whom the world has ever known"; in these words a spokesman described the purpose of the Marian Year Pageant, written, directed and produced by Father Daniel A. Lord, S.J. As such, the faith and devotion of the many who brought the idea to life are an integral part of it — but a part no man can judge upon.

Despite this, the question must be asked of whether or not, as a work of art, the Pageant was a worthy one; and the answer is No — a reluctant but emphatic No.

It had its good moments, and its redemptive hallmarks. Among these were the ballet corps of the Canadian School and the Volkoff Company, combined with the admirably angelic Gabriel (Robert Burns) and his counterpart, the Adversary (Leslie Rasco). The settings blended with the costumes to produce the most thoroughly flawless aspect of the evening, and the lighting effects ran a close second to these.

The rest of the Pageant offered little of any particular recommendation. Dancing scenes ran the complete range from outstanding to tedious, their one common denominator being overabundance. The music generally failed to impress, with the exception of certain unfortunate hymns. The varied collection of acting talents make it difficult for a reviewer to draw any conclusion; perhaps it may be said that the very bad was compensated by the very good.

I should like to point out that an ambitious enterprise of this kind, dealing with a largely inexperienced cast of 1200 persons, and attempting to project one dazzling scene after another into the spotlights, is doomed to meet with a dubious success. The almost inevitable result is a brilliant confusion, a kaleidoscopic whirl of small distinction and small significance. Such is the fate of the spectacle.

"Spectacle" is, in truth, the best description I can give to the Marian Year Pageant. It offered some of the best characteristics of the spectacle colour and action — but included as well some of its worst — among them, a lack of cohesion and dramatic unity. Its scenes seemed to be cast onto the stage without preamble and without sequence. Their relation to the central theme — Mary — assumed in some cases only the very remotest of links, and this link itself a fabricated one. A spectacle for its own sake is one thing; but a spectacle which directs its glitter and its glamour, its tinsel and its trappings at the calm serene figure of the Madonna — such a spectacle makes excessive demands upon our sense of the just and the fitting.

But although the use of such a form itself can be justified, the abuse of it is more difficult to accept. The matter is one of opinion, but in this reviewer's opinion, the Pageant cannot in honesty be called a good example of its kind.

It has been argued, that to perfect such an ambitious undertaking is an almost impossible task. Then why should it be attempted at all? Even the spectacle is a form of art, and as such its general excellence is measured by its perfection as art. No matter how admirable the effects it might conceivably produce upon its audience, the primary end of such an enterprise must remain within the pageant itself, as a work of art.

It must be understood that the religious character of the Pageant does not in any sense affect its general perfection — or imperfection.

In the opinion of this reviewer, the genuine religious purpose was obscured and somewhat obliterated by the means taken to express it, i.e. the spectacle. Such a means may not have originated with the twentieth century, but it has been so lavishly and so effectively adopted by Cecil B. de Mille, that any other use of it is bound to fall into the category of Bad Imitation — and in this case, inappropriate as well.

Certainly the Catholic world will find a better expression of its faith and its homage somewhere in the roots of its rich and proud tradition, which in our modern society, is surpassed only by that of the Jews.

No matter what opinion we may hold on spectacles and significance in general, the Marian Year Pageant must be acknowledged as the tremendous achievement of its creator, the "fabulous Father Dan". To the deluge of students who performed in it, his wheel-chair direction of the Pageant became the real and perhaps the enduring drama of the production.

Many Qualities Requirement for Rhodes Scholar

All potential Rhodes Scholars must have their applications in by November 1st. Official forms are available at the registrar's office in each college.

To enter, the candidate should be male, single, between the ages of nineteen and twenty-five and must have completed two years of university by next October. He may apply in either the province in which he resides or the one in which he attends university. Two scholarships are being awarded in Ontario and Quebec and one in each of the other provinces annually.

Each winner will receive two years tuition at Oxford with the possibility of a third year.

The £600 (approximately $1500) a year scholarships are awarded on the following basis.

1. Scholastic and literary attainment.
2. Qualities of truth, manhood, courage, devotion to duty, sympathy, kindness, unselfishness and fellowship.
3. Exhibition of moral force of character and of instincts to lead and take an interest in one's fellows.
4. Physical vigour as shown by fondness for and success in outdoor sports.
5. Some definite quality of distinction, whether in intellect or character.

Japanese Student Praises, Explains WUS Work In Asia

BY JANE GRIFFIN

Makoto Fujita is a busy man. A Graduate of Kwansai Gakuin, a Japanese University sponsored by the United Church of Canada, he is in Canada as Executive Secretary of the World University Service to attend the WUS Conference to be held in Toronto from Oct. 15 to Oct. 17. At that time he will outline plans for the International Seminar which will be held in Japan next summer.

The visit to Toronto is part of an extensive tour. Last summer he was in Europe at the International Assembly at Oxford, England, and he has been invited by Canadian and U.S. committees for WUS to speak at several universities. Fujita believes that this tour will serve a valuable purpose, because, although universities as a whole contribute generously to the work of WUS, individual students do not know how their money is spent in Asia. Fujita plans to tell them of some of the valuable work which is being done.

One of the most impressive accomplishments of WUS in Japan, Fujita feels, is the construction of the first Tuberculosis Sanatorium, which was completed this summer. For this project, Japanese Students themselves raised $10,000.

A heart-warming note was struck when in 1950, 125 American University students sent $325 which they had earned by selling their blood to the Blood Bank. Accompanying the donation was a note which said: "This may be a cheque, but it represents our blood which we give for a worthy cause." When the report of this gesture reached the owner of the property on which the Sanatorium was to be built, he was so moved that he donated the land to the WUS. The Sanatorium was truly an international affair. Students from all over the world, including North America, spent their summers building the foundation. Commented Fujita: "We hope this Sanatorium will be a symbol of solidarity between the members of the World University Service."

Other activities of WUS in Japan include an Exchange plan whereby in 1952 a scholarship was granted to a Japanese student to study for a year at the University of British Columbia, and in 1953 a Canadian student spent a year at the University of Keio in Japan.

Fujita became interested in the work of WUS while at University. A Swedish representative started relief work in Japan, and Fujita worked with him. He was told that the International Office in Geneva was willing to have Japanese representatives in WUS. A responsible person was needed to supervise the work, and Makoto Fujita was asked to take the job.

Wildcat Strike On! Management Entices Inexperienced Kids

"Goodness gracious," said Varsity news editor Mike Pengelly, "these reporters are not coming in to sign for their stories. It would be very convenient for them if they could drop into the office at noon, after lectures, or any time to find out what is going on. We would like it too," Mike concluded.

"Naturally, reporting for The Varsity has many advantages," said Editor Clyde Batten earlier yesterday. Batten pointed out that since both men and women work on the campus news organ it is definitely a heterosexual organization and therefore not subject to the stresses and strains of less fortunate institutions.

NFCUS President To Speak At SAC With Emphasis On Finance, Communists

Tony Enriquez, president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS), is visiting the Toronto campus for the first time officially today. He will speak tonight to the Student's Administrative Council, said Bill Angus, president of the SAC.

"Enriquez will speak particularly on the question of a national presidency, at the SAC meeting," said Angus. He will also speak on the financial structure of NFCUS and the proposed agenda at the NFCUS conference.

These matters are of special interest because Toronto is only paying 20 cents instead of 50 cents, and because the NFCUS conference will be held at Toronto, beginning next Monday. "Enriquez will argue for a national presidency with a salary," said Angus. "The general feeling at Toronto is against it."

Enriquez is a Mexican student enrolled at the University of Ottawa. Last year he was full time national president; this year he is taking lectures. However, he will remain president until the NFCUS conference next week.

This is Enriquez' first official visit here; he was unable to visit Toronto last year, as he did other Canadian universities. However, the SAC formally invited him to speak to them this fall, said Angus.

During the day, Enriquez will speak informally to various students on the campus. He will speak at the end of the SAC meeting for about 20 minutes; then he will answer any questions.

"Tony Enriquez claims he was misquoted in the daily papers about his impressions of the IUS council," said the president of the SAC. "He wishes to clear up these misconceptions at the SAC meeting tonight."

He was quoted, reported Angus, as saying that affiliation with IUS was impossible in the past, present and future. He only said that at the present time it is impracticable, but that that does not exclude the possibility of future co-operation with IUS, Angus added.

Liberals, Conservatives, CCF Agreed No Parliament Elections To Be Held

By M. PENGELEY

There will be no elections this year for the University of Toronto's mock Parliament, it was disclosed yesterday.

This was revealed by the President of the Political Economy Club, Allan Millard. Millard said that in all likelihood, no elections would be held this year because of an election "schmizzle" last year.

"Nothing is official yet," Millard said, "but I can say that the heads of the three main parties — Progressive Conservative, Liberal and Co-operative Commonwealth Federation — have agreed among themselves not to hold elections this year."

Dissension arose in campus political circles two years ago when a group of students calling themselves the Independent Progressive Association sought membership in the mock parliament.

Declaring they didn't approve the platforms of any of the parties sitting in parliament, IPA applied to the Political Economy Club for admission.

The Political Economy Club said "No," as IPA had not been recognized as a duly-authorized campus organization by the Caput.

The Independent then visited Simcoe Hall's student-faculty body, which made IPA official. Nevertheless, scribbled names on the ballots that year in favour of IPA candidates, accounted for little fewer than 12 percent of all votes cast two years ago.

pack and stack task

Library Completing Move

By RALPH BERRIN

Once every April and May, 10,000-odd students of the U. of T. pack up and move their ten to thirty books. Once in 50 years the Library of the U. of T. packs up and moves its half a million books.

The Library is now in the process of completing the task of "move-ment" which began last spring. With the construction of the new Signum Samuel Library, a complete, new library building was added to the old one. Ergo, the library packs up and moves over into its new home, medicine comes out of its basement to move upstairs and government documents are left to fill up the cellar.

The Social Study and Humanity books have been moved from the old stacks at the back of the building to the new stacks in the basement of the Samuel Library. Stacks, by the way, in the library sense are bookshelves for compact storage of books. The old stack has become the Science and Medicine stack. All this "stacking up" accounts for the 500,000 books being moved.

A mapped and planned campaign was organized to see that the right books in the right order got to the right shelves at the right time. This "right time" business is pretty tricky. Seems that you can't have an elevator go up and down at the same time, or the long aisles in the old building are too narrow to let two book-carts pass. Somebody has to wait, waits cause delay, and delays cause the Library to be three months late in opening the new building. However, the delay can't be blamed on this "right time" business—it was too perfectly planned. (The blame falls on construction).

The book-carts are manned by University students in small groups. About twenty students are still at it, every afternoon. They load the cart, in the right order, off the old shelves, push it down aisles, up ramps, in and out of elevators and finally deliver and unload it, still in the right order, onto the new shelves.

Sergeants, excuse me, I mean librarians, are posted as dispatchers and receivers to see that the right books, order, shelves, time are all correct. They also keep the boys moving. Who doesn't like to browse in a library?

Politicians Lock Horns In Hart House Debate

"To put it in a nutshell, no government in Ontario has ever had more to work with than the present one, and few governments have ever done a poorer job." Removing the nut from the shell, Mr. Donald C. MacDonald, leader of the Ontario CCF party, explained that he referred specifically to "the handling of the basic needs of the people, such as hospitalization, housing, the growing educational problem, and most important of all, the rising insecurity of the workers and the farmers."

This is the viewpoint that Mr. MacDonald will uphold as guest speaker at tonight's Hart House Debate, which will contend with the topic: "Resolved that the Province of Ontario has had good government for the past five years."

"The Tories have somehow lulled us with their phoney platitudes," agreed Al Borovoy, Literary Chairman of the U. of T. CCF Club, who will oppose the resolution. "But let us face it—the Tories' whole claim to legislative political glamour comes from the fact that they are sporting a huge set of political fallacies."

His colleague, Ed Lowry, president of the Campus Liberal Association, added "I think that prosperity in Ontario in the past few years has been in spite of, and not because of the Frost administration."

On the other side of the slate Ted Rogers, first vice-president of the U. of T. Progressive Conservative Association, will uphold the resolution.

According to Rogers, "Ontario has had most dynamic leadership and outstanding men in its cabinet since 1943, which has made it one of the most highly-regarded governments on the North American continent. It has given its people the sense of a security never before enjoyed."

Arguing his case in agreement with Rogers, Joe Slogan, Councillor of the Progressive Conservatives, asserted that "the best judge of the government are the people who live under it and the mandate given to the Conservative Government is the greatest in the history of this province. The only weak link of the Government is a minute and ineffective opposition."

In the best tradition of Hart House debates, the men of the University will be welcome to attend the parliamentary combat. The debates originated over thirty years ago, in "that spirit of friendly discussion and debate" which was deemed most conducive to the development of "wise and earnest men." The consequent sessions have not all been either wise or earnest, but they served to establish a precedent of memorable skirmishes into the infinite possibilities of persuasion.

PC Club Hear Mayor Saunders Wilson Woodside On Toronto

Canada's political scene was pictured in shaky condition by Canadian journalist Wilson Woodside here last night, who called the two-party system, "the only safe and stable form of government."

The world-traveller and former political commentator for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was addressing a meeting here of the University Progressive Conservative club in Trinity College. About 75 persons attended.

Mr. Woodside is the PC candidate in Trinity riding. Declaring that through years in the driver's seat, the Liberal government had "lost contact" with the people, he said that the two-party system in Canada was in danger of collapse.

The former editor of Saturday Night Magazine blamed loss of Trinity riding to the Liberals in the last election on "an elderly group of Orangemen meeting in an Orange Hall." He said that what was needed was a person who could represent all races and religions.

"We must get to know these builders of a new Canada," the speaker declared while describing the inflow of some 100 new Canadians a day who stepped off trains at the Union Station here seeking new homes and jobs.

The joint speaker at the meeting, Mayor Leslie Saunders of Toronto, expressed hope that Toronto soon would have two more rapid transit systems, one on Bloor and another on Queen St. Mr. Saunders expounded the merits of Toronto, particularly its housing schemes.

Giving his view on the much publicized secret board of control meetings, the Mayor said that the press was in error. He stated that board "conferences" had always been in private. "No one criticizes the federal or provincial cabinets when they hold a secret meeting," said the Mayor.

The Mayor gave many other facts and figures on the greatness of Toronto. In closing, Mr. Woodside asked members of the Club to help in canvassing his riding.

NFCUS Asks For Scholarships

A meeting of the Massey Scholarship Campaign Committee was held yesterday to discuss plans for the forthcoming NFCUS conference. The immediate aim of this committee is to obtain a mandate from the Federation to organize and co-ordinate the campaign for implementation of the Massey Report and to secure a national scholarship fund for University students.

In an interview with a Varsity reporter, Norm Chalmers, chairman of the Massey Scholarship Campaign Committee, emphasized the fact that the Toronto organization is not attempting to buck the authority of the national committee. Chalmers said that at present the job of persuading the federal government to accept the proposals of the Massey Commission with regard to University scholarships has fallen to the National Executive.

The Toronto group will suggest that a task of this magnitude cannot be handled most efficiently by a group which is burdened with the greater part of all NFCUS business, said Chalmers.

This job should be carried on, said Chalmers, by a group with a specialized and particular interest. If a more able group present itself, however, the subcommittee will extend its support to this group, said Chalmers.

If the Toronto group receives the mandate to co-ordinate the activities of NFCUS within the framework of the Massey recommendations, it will concentrate on personal appeals to Members of Parliament and public relations work with the electorate. Chalmers said that his sub-committee feels that the problem of University scholarships is an important political issue. As inequalities in University education affects a large percentage of the population, even limited amount of public pressure generated by a sober and intelligent student campaign could arouse government action where recommendations by student bodies have previously failed, emphasized Chalmers.

In the past, fear on the part of Quebec universities that bursary assistance might infringe on that province's rights in education has been one of the main stumbling blocks to concerted NFCUS action according to the committee. At the same time, however, student proposals that the Quebec government itself extend bursaries and scholarships has met with the objection that too much assistance is already being demanded. It is hoped that the recent talks between premier Duplessis of Quebec (who has opposed university aid) and prime minister St. Laurent will help resolve the conflict, Chalmers said.

Y.M.C.A., Red Feather Agency Helps Talented Student

Jack Jenkins is now a second year student at this university. Four years ago, however, it did not look as if Jack would ever finish high school.

When 16-year-old Jack, on the advice of a friend, went to the Vocational Guidance Department of the Young Men's Christian Association, he was on the point of quitting school.

He had failed in Latin and his grades in History, English, Algebra and Geometry were just passing. School did not interest him, he told a guidance counsellor of this Red Feather agency, and his parents were urging him to leave school on the grounds that a strong husky boy not interested in his subjects should go to work.

This Jack was quite prepared to do. He'd like a job requiring both "brain and muscle." Just what kind of a job, however, Jack had no idea.

A series of vocational and aptitude tests were arranged for him. They showed that Jack was actually superior in intelligence and abilities.

When he learned how well he had performed on the tests, Jack was so encouraged that he immediately discarded the idea of leaving school. Several interviews revealed that his primary interest was in the field of science. Further tests suggested he had high potentialities in this line. Jack began to think he might like to be a chemist.

After that it was easy for Jack to appreciate the need for his high school courses for he realized that without them the college training necessary to become a chemist would be impossible.

Two years later Jack graduated from high school and enrolled at university. Today he is happy and confident because he feels he is gaining knowledge which will equip him to work in his chosen fields.

Your Red Feather dollars helped make the special talents of this student available to the community. Through the 68 Red Feather agencies they are also helping other groups of citizens of all ages, races and creeds.

2 Burned In Crash On Drinking Spree Frats Investigated

The death of two students in a flaming automobile on an Illinois highway has set off an official investigation of an alleged inter-fraternity beer-drinking contest at Knox College in Galesburg, Illinois, according to a report in the Daily Athenaeum.

If charges against the two fraternities are proved true, banishment of the organizations from the campus may result.

The two men killed were trapped in a 13-year-old car when it careened off a road, plunged down an embankment and burst into flames.

Rebels and Mugwumps

One of the over-riding dangers of a state supported university is a tendency to fit its graduates for a slot in society. There is an increasing tendency to produce highly-polished, socially competent graduates instead of thinking, critical individuals.

The academic and disciplinary heads of the university seem more concerned lest the people of the community think they and their students are rebels or intellectuals, than they are with initiating within them a desire for the truth.

It is impossible for a man with opinions to avoid antagonizing someone. It can only be done by spineless "mugwumps" who are dependent upon the judgement of society for an estimate of their own worth.

Disappointing Desires

Tonight the SAC will be meeting primarily to discuss its attitudes towards the National Federation of Canadian University Students. Attending the meeting to present his views will be Antonio Enriquez, full-time president of the federation.

In yesterday's paper there appeared an unofficial statement of the SAC's policy which will govern their actions at the NFCUS conference next week.

It is disappointing to notice the desire to withdraw from active participation in international student affairs. Such an attitude can only reflect on the internal weakness of NFCUS and on the continuing refusal of Canadians to measure up to their responsibility on the international plane.

We shall be interested in hearing the words of the president. Many people on the campus have been justifiably sceptical of the ability of NFCUS to produce any practical results. For this reason the president's remarks could do much to crystallize the thinking of our own SAC.

Equality and Fraternity

One of the characteristics of the university community used to be the contact and interplay between the educated and the uneducated mind.

In this university it is becoming almost impossible to find lecturers or professors who are willing to meet with the student outside of lecture hours in the informality of the coffee shop or tavern.

There are people who complete four years at this institution without ever meeting a professor in any but formally academic settings.

Do the professors find such contact so distasteful? Do the students themselves fail to appreciate the benefit of such conversation? Or are the lecturers afraid that their efforts to stir their students to thought will not find favour in the eyes of the society in which this university is forced to reside?

We do not know the answer, if there is an answer, but we enter our plea for an increase in extracurricular fraternization between staff and students.

Disastrous Divisions

By Staff Writer

division of the world into two political blocs.

But what did he do to eradicate this division. Nothing. He only widened it. And to the students of the Middle East, Africa and the Far East — that very important middle-of-the-way group which the West must try to win over — he sounded rather patronizing.

These observations, mind you, were made by other members of the Canadian delegation in Moscow.

Mr. Enriquez has a lot to learn as a diplomat. He should stop speaking for the press. He should try to speak honestly and simply to other students. This has been the major reason in the past for the high standing of Canada in international students' affairs.

But no! Mr. Enriquez prefers to hit the headlines and have his name splashed dramatically over the newspapers. He has become an artist at making irresponsible statements.

We did not win at Moscow. Our president saw to that.

Now he should stop talking about the desire of Canada to have world student unity. He can stick to his little pet — the Co-ordinating Secretariat of National Unions of Students in which he took a commanding role at the Istanbul meeting last year.

It's encouraging to hear Toronto's SAC is planning to do away with a full-time NFCUS president. He has done us little good.

However, it's unfortunate that there are some who want a redirection away from international affairs to national issues. Canada is part of the world student community; it is a political world; there are students we can help in seeing the tremendous advantages democracy has to offer them.

But we can't do this by hiding our head in the sand or having publicity-seeking student diplomats.

Misguided Radicals

The Editor

The Varsity

There are two essential ingredients of newspaper service — to inform the reader and to direct attention to the issues of community concern. A reader is also entitled to a newspaper run by a publisher who believes that the paper should fairly represent the community and fairly represent its community interests. I feel that, except for the odd occasion, the Varsity fails to do this in any way.

A recent article in the Varsity attempted to make an excuse for the dribble that you seem to specialize in, by quoting from another University paper that seemed to wallow in even deeper trash than the Varsity. Being the best of a poor lot is certainly no excuse.

Whether by tradition or choice the Varsity seems to be a stamping ground for writers of left wing tendencies, moronic ideas and amateur Micky Spillanes. The so-called funny "sex" stories that you seem to be permeated with are an insult to the intelligence of an eight year old and, for a paper that is supposed to be put out for the reading pleasure of students of University level, they bring on a feeling of deepest nausea.

There are several papers in Toronto that deal exclusively in trash and are a haven for misguided radicals. I am sure that the Varsity does not have to be one of them.

I think that as a reader I am entitled to a newspaper that cares about information on public affairs and that publishes information with a decent regard to the intelligence, sensibilities, taste, and decency of the readers.

Patronizing Participants

The Editor

The Varsity

An apparently innocuous article, concerning the I.P.A., written by a Varsity staffer and placed on the back pages of the Varsity last week has apparently so stung the normally lethargic campus political parties that they have descended to the level of writing letters to the Editor.

Their first effort, by Mr. Ed. Lowry on behalf of the Liberals, was at least calm. Indeed his faintly patronizing air might have seemed distasteful had it not been for the pathetic confusion his letter showed. In the first paragraph he condemns the idea that campus parties reiterate the views of their political superiors but by the last paragraph he admits that it appears that the political clubs consist of mimicking hopefuls seeking promotion, and asks for "your help" to "find the leaders they need".

Let us make up our minds. Either campus politicians hew to the line or they do not. If they do, I agree we need new leaders. If they do not, then we should be content with what we've got. Yesterday's letter by Mr. Millard is infinitely more interesting if infinitely less sensible.

First, Mr. Millard tells us that the best way to stimulate student interest is to participate in one of the campus organizations. It never seems to occur to Mr. Millard that there might be students to whom the principles of the CCF and the LPP's might be anathema and the ineptitude of the Liberals and Conservatives shocking. The desire, for personal reasons or otherwise, to support a non-conventional party is obviously inexplicable to him.

Then Mr. Millard progresses past the weapons of reason and utilizes the weapons of insult. He suspects I.P.A. motives and grandly answers us that the organization is insincere — charges for which he gives no substantiation.

Mr. Millard claims that the I.P.A. tried to prevent the use of the Queen's Park house as a meeting hall for the Model Parliament. The truth which can be checked with Mr. E. A. Macdonald, is that, while I.P.A. could have taken this action, it did not, only with the tacit assent and approval of I.P.A. were the political parties permitted to use the Legislature.

The words of Mr. Millard leave only one conclusion — that he is guilty of intentional misrepresentation.

Yours sincerely,
John Roberts, IV U.C.

Invitation to the Dance

Holé José

"Hussa!" "Que bella!" These and other comments were spat out or gargled inside as incantations to the dance by the members of Jose Greco's Company of Spanish dancers. They stamp the light fantastic all this week at the Royal Alexandra.

The company is not large, but yet manages to put on a large variety of numbers all within the Spanish tradition. The fiery and temperamental were alternated with the elegant and graceful in quick succession. In fact that was one of the best points of the production: the flawless flow in spite of elaborate changes in costume and lighting.

With the high calibre of dancing of all the males, Jose Greco still stands out by the precision of his movements, his restrained power, and his magnetic presence. He and Lola de Ronda appeared in dances requiring per-cussive foot movements and extremes of motion and stillness, such as La Petenera and equally effectively in Danza Extrema which calls for charm, lightness and good timing.

Another impressive pair were the "Bronze Gypsies," who specialized in a controlled wildness, if such a thing can be. She was a mobile mass of colour and long black hair, and he was described by one spectator as having the vitality of a Bantam rooster. The rhythm of their feet and castanets alone would have been quite suggestive enough for accompaniment.

One could not see the company and fail to notice a certain Teresa Maya. She has a most expressive face, especially her eyes, and her personality overflows without discretion. This ability was put to good use in Madrid 1890, a sort of comic ballet, but at other times she might have been satisfied to contribute to the general effect of the company in building-up atmosphere.

The choreography to Ravel's Bolero was rather disappointing. It fails to equal the tremendous crescendo and sustained mood of the music. Here, too, the piano which with the guitarists and flamenco singers, was quite adequate for the other dances, fell down.

Two of the most attractive numbers were Danza Castellana and El Cortijo. The former depicts a minor flirting scene between two coy maidens and a man of intentions. The latter is a dance with whip and boots by three men and Jose (by grouping rather than classification). The arched posture and strong positions showed up particularly well in this galloping number because of silhouettes made by the lighting.

The guitarist, Ricardo Blasco, without any of the showiness that was characteristic of the dances, proved himself to be a virtuoso on his instrument, as well as a reliable accompanist. Whenever there was any difficulty over rhythm he quickly established it and followed the dances.

The nineteenth and final number, Rincon Flamenco, was a grand finale appearance of the whole company in front of the very effective backdrop of a Spanish Inn. Each member performed one after the other and seemed to say: "Can you top this?" (Teresa Maya was sure she could, and in straight bravado spirit she did). And then all together they worked up a fine frenzy. The whole evening certainly topped their last year's performance here.

Payne and Friend

Billy Daniels, it is pleasant to be able to say, is the exact reverse of an increasingly prevalent trend in the realm of popular music. Very many of our most successful recording artists today, being creations of the men who work in public relations and electronics, are discovered to have an amazing lack of genuine talent when, seen in person.

Daniels is proving this week at the Casino theatre that he must be seen to be appreciated. He has yet to cut a record that does him anything approaching justice and thus vast multitudes of people are going through life without having enjoyed this entertainer, who has survived trends and fads over the years to retain his position among the top singers of our time.

It is his relaxed, at ease approach, perhaps, that enables him to reach the audience more than most singers. He appears to enjoy this interlude of song, instead of acting as though he were playing a part in a Greek tragedy and had to tear the notes out of his very heart.

That's not to say, however, that his repertoire is limited. His most famous bits are songs like his trademark, That Old Black Magic, My Yiddishe Mama, and a new one, Hey There.

Still, I found his up-tempo numbers more enjoyable. That's probably because it's in these that he gets most help from his sidekick, Benny Payne, who should be much better-known than he is. Benny, who has been in show business for many, many years and who plays piano in the Fats Waller manner, is supposed to be Daniels' accompanist. He's much more—the act is more like a team, in fact.

It's all a delusion to some extent, no doubt. Surpassing all their other talents, Daniels and Payne have that uncanny faculty of holding an audience in the palms of their hands, begging for more.

As for the rest of the show, you can single out Wally Dean as being outstanding. He's several notches above the average comedian, probably because of his inventiveness. His musical bit is hilarious, and not much more so than his drunk sequence. Best crack, I thought, was the wife's: "That husband of mine. He's the only man I know who ever switched to Calvert's without giving up Seagram's".

The rest is pretty standard. The Migal twins whirl through a dance act that's quite good, the Helene Vernon Trio does an acrobatic turn that is violent but routine, and Pat Hill and Larry Delmar have their puppets and do a good job, if you happen to like that sort of thing.

—One-eyed Benny.

Swiss Posters

An exhibition of Swiss Posters is coming to the University of Toronto School of Architecture. The exhibition is sponsored by the Swiss consul and will be open to the public on Saturday and Sunday. It had its beginnings in 1942 when the government offered recognition to the printers and designers of the best posters of Switzerland from the artistic point of view. There is a very strong movement in the graphic arts in contemporary Switzerland, and the poster is considered as one of the most representative modes of artistic expression of that country.

Critic In The Dark

Robinson Crusoe

Luis Bunuel, the director of Robinson Crusoe, which has (thank heavens) replaced Magnificent Obsession on the screen of the Odeon Toronto, has until recently had a reputation as an excessively difficult director; uncommercial, destructive, albeit an exciting film-maker of vivid talent. In co-operation with Salvador Dali he made the famous surrealist film Un Chien Andalou. In a more realistic tradition he made that most tormented and bitter of documentaries, Land Without Bread, about the starving, neglected villagers of a remote corner of Spain. Then he went to Mexico. Several years ago his best-known film, a raw delineation of juvenile delinquency in the slums of Mexico City appeared, Los Olvidados, known in North America as The Young and the Damned. As a result Bunuel has a singular reputation for bitterness. Two recent films, however, almost belie this trend. Subida al Cielo, which has not yet played here, though it deals uncompromisingly with the realities of death and sex, is reputed to have an almost light-hearted manner; it's even filmed deliberately as a comedy. And the English-speaking Robinson Crusoe presents an equally calm aspect. It is as if Bunuel has experienced all the torments possible for a sensitive person in a harsh world, and finally emerged, conscious of those torments but freed of them.

Robinson Crusoe is a peculiarly appropriate film to mark such a renaissance. Crusoe himself lived through such an experience, and of necessity came to terms with the terrible fact that he was all alone on a isolated island, with no hope of being rescued. Bunuel's obvious sensitivity has given him an insight into the character of Crusoe impossible to a journeyman director who just goes out to make a pretty film of the book for the kiddies.

Bunuel's version of Crusoe is very literal. It's years since I read the book, but as far as I could ascertain, no important fact or event had been altered. Something I wish they had altered, though, was their choice of colour process. Pathecolour is without a doubt the most ruddy awful method of making coloured motion pictures I have ever beheld. On several occasions I could almost imagine some of those vile blue and orange shades crawling right down off the screen and seeping towards me. However, enough gibbbling. The camerawork is straightforward, expressive, the production generally satisfactory, and the performances all above average, few as they are. Daniel O'Herlihy plays Crusoe with a neat and witty knack for the minute details of character (the scene where he bakes his first bread is especially noteworthy), and Jaime Fernandez, as Friday, is tremendous: dark, barbaric, and wital comic.

As I remarked, the treatment of the original is literal, but now and again the old Bunuel touch comes out, in Crusoe's harrowing dream during the fever, in the soft montages which express the passage of time, and in the scene where Crusoe, in the extremity of his loneliness, shouts the Twenty-third Psalm down an echoing valley.

U.C. Player's Guild Gives Psychological Drama

"The layout of the Women's Union Theatre should prove a positive asset to the U.C. Players' Guild in their presentation of Strindberg's Miss Julie, which will be playing there Thursday and Friday of this week," states Dave Dunsmuir. Director Leon Major, whose unorthodox staging proved one of the most impressive features of last year's Waiting for Lefty, has again designed his setting to suit the mood of the piece.

Miss Julie is, in the author's own words, "a modern psychological drama, where the soul's most delicate emotions should be reflected from the face rather than through gestures and noise." Hence, instead of being cranked behind an impersonal proscenium arch, the play has come out almost among the audience, on an extension of the stage with seats on three sides of it, a location that should heighten the mood cast from stage to stalls.

Another feature of this unusual offering is the use of the original uncut script, which includes a ballet sequence designed by the director, with music by Milton Barnes.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MOISHE REITER

There will be the usual seasonal resumption of the great gridiron tradition of away week-ends, this week at Queen's University, when Varsity, Queen's and Life photographers will have a big party on the Golden Gaels' campus.

With this first weekend, there comes a question—Is the weekend designed for attending the football game or is it for the more broadening effects of travel and visiting strange cities? This point has been long argued with many supporting the view that the game is only incidental to the really important parts of the weekend while some dry souls have expressed themselves in favour of only the game, the rest being, to them, superfluous, irrelevant and of no interest.

Through the past years The Varsity Sports Page has devoted itself to, among other things, a deep investigation of this pressing matter. Our sleuth on last year's train to Queens noted, for example, that a number of Varsity fans on said train had worked themselves into such a frenzy of spirits during the trip, that, by the time of arrival in Kingston, they were far too far gone to give any real thought to the game. On the other hand this same sleuth reported that by the time the game was done, an equally large number of fans were too weary to take a part in the evening's proceedings. This left us pretty much where we had started, so we went a few years further back, consulting an old Varsity staffer, Beauregard Yumpf by name, who enlightened us considerably.

Beauregard had most vivid memories of past weekends and volunteered any information we might want.

"Now, Beauregard," we asked, "in your day were the weekends as riotous and exciting as they are now? Were there the same fights, parties and general celebrating that we see today?"

"For sure, fellows," was Beauregard's answer, "Why, in my day they were even better. Did we have parties. Did we have dances. Did we go wild. We certainly did. Why I remember a time when we were feeling a little high about 4 in the morning. We were in a little hotel, in a little town, darn—I can't remember the name, way up in a fourth floor penthouse. Well I had this bottle of (censored) and didn't feel like finishing it and there was this constable, the nicest fellow, promenading under the window and he really looked thirsty, so I poured the bottle down on him. That would have been all right but it hit him and he was a poor sport about the whole thing. But then there were good times too."

"Yes, Beauregard," we hurried off the subject, "But what about the football games? How were they in your day—how did they stack up against what we have today?"

For a moment there was silence. Beauregard's brow creased. The eyes squinted. Then with great effort, through heavy concentration, came the answer.

"Football games? What football games?"

Squash Men Begin Intercol Practices

Varsity's Intercollegiate Squash team will begin practices for what is hoped will be a successful season this Thursday eve in Hart House.

Under the direction of Ralph Rimmer, Ontario champion of two years ago, the squashers will be practicing three times a week in preparation for the Intercollegiate tournament sometime in February. This is an improvement over last year when the aspirants only met once a week, and is expected to produce gratifying results, according to Jim McClelland who is back for another year with the Senior team.

In addition to McClelland, Phil Ketchum, IV Trinity, will be returning along with UC's Pete Larmour and Marty Friedland. Skule's John Haig and Varsity grad Don Faurett, now at OCE, will be trying for a berth on the team, as will Norm Seagram, a promising player from TCS.

Exhibition matches are planned for the fall with Western and McGill, as well as a weekend trip to Buffalo to test American competition. The team will travel to London at the same time as the Blue football squad to play Western and also to Montreal for the match with McGill, while return matches are scheduled for Hart House.

The introduction of a Novices' tournament to be held in February is another feature of the revamped squash set-up on the campus. Last year an Inter-faculty squash series was instituted in Hart House during the winter.

Plans are afoot for an Intermediate team which will play in a league with McGill, Western, and RMC. Last year the Senior team stood third in competition with Western and McGill in the Intercollegiate tournament.

Varsity Blues and Life Capture Top Headlines At Queen's This Week

Last Saturday, while Varsity and Western were holding themselves to a 9-9 tie, the Golden Gaels of Queen's University were smashing a week McGill Redmen squad by a score of 46-11. This Saturday Varsity Blues leave the safety of home at Varsity Stadium and travel to Kingston to meet these dark-horse Gaels. The result of this meeting will decide first place and whether Toronto has any right to title hopes.

Third placers last season, the Tri-colour has lost but few of their players through graduation and field a powerful and proven team. How they will match up against rested Varsity and Western will determine the standings this year. The Blues who had a better running attack than the fine one of Queen's last year, have added passing to their game and should be able to do better against the Tricolour in this department than they did against Western.

With a large number of veterans back along the line the Gaels pose a real threat to the Varsity attack. If they can do as they undoubtedly wish, and break through to rush the Varsity quarterbacks, the Blue passing will not go to well, but if the Blue line plays up to its standard this shouldn't happen.

The biggest thing about this weekend, though, is the promised coverage by Life Magazine. In its regular feature of "Life Goes to a Party" the American photographers will cover all facets of the Queen's Weekend. Tickets for the big do are already on sale in the SAC Office, just upstairs from the Varsity. Should be a real party.

Varsity's Top Line Backer Bill Horton's Key Roll

At the end of last year, Varsity's flying wing position was left vacant because of the graduation of Al Haig, who was also the team's regular kicker. As a result Bob Masterson was required to select from one of his more experienced men someone who could both catch a pass and block well. This man was Bill Horton, who, with the Blues two years ago, held a regular position at end.

During his high school years, however, Bill, for four years to be exact, was quarterback at Scarboro Collegiate. At Varsity, in his first year, Bill quarterbacked the Engineering squad.

BILL HORTON

In 1952, when Bill tried out for the Blues, Bob Masterson discovered that Bill would benefit the team most as an end.

This year, Bill's purpose on offense is twofold: he will block and decoy. On wide end runs he will block downfield, and when passes are to be thrown by the quarterback, he will, as you might often see, run far downfield in order to lure a defensive halfback from his zone position thus leaving a gap in the defence.

His most important task, many feel, is his position on the defence, that of linebacker. To play this position requires what coaches call "Football know-how." The ability to perceive when a play is about to be run around the end and when a pass is about to be thrown, is "Football know-how." Bill has this, with the result that he is playing the linebacker spot.

During the summer Bill keeps in shape by working in mines. This work also gives him practical experience in the field he hopes to undertake—Geological and Mining Engineering. The main hobbies of this alert 23-year-old are basketball, softball, and swimming. Because he is filling Haig's former spot, Bill, who is playing his last year of football, will probably be watched closely by all attending the Blue games.

On The Sideline

BY JO RATCLIFFE

The week following the opening of the football season is always a good time to talk about fashions. Now, what we have to say will not be what who wore to the opener; it does have something to say about a new fashion in Phys Ed uniforms.

If you have happened to pass by Trinity field any Tuesday around noon, you may have noticed a smart looking group of young ladies all done up in short grey skirts and white tops. These are none other than our own Phys Edders out for a lesson in field hockey. Except for the lack of a hilly background, Trinity Field, on such occasions could be a scene from Scotland or a New England campus.

We have waited a long time to see these classes opened to students outside PHE. This is really the first year we have seen this happen. Last year we suggested getting a campus wide group interested in this activity, the reason being that field hockey is one of the most sidely played sports in the West and in the U.S.

Weather was a good argument against its initiation on the Toronto campus—but not good enough! So field hockey we have, Tuesday at 11 or 12, Wednesday at 9 and Saturday at 10 o'clock.

The only intercollegiate match on schedule is one with McMaster late in the Fall. It was so late last season, the poor shivering ladies were snowed out! It would be really something if we could get this sport rolling in interfac groups. At any rate, it's certainly worth giving some thought to the matter.

Sr. Tennis At McGill Wednesday

The Intercollegiate senior tennis tourney will be played at McGill on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week. Universities of Toronto, Ottawa, McGill and Montreal will be competing in both singles and doubles play. Laval University applied for entry in the tournament but it is doubtful whether the officials will be able to come up with a suitable plan for a five team draw. Last year Raymond Page of Montreal took the singles crown and is a heavy favorite to do the same this year. Ken Lawson, top seeded Varsity player, and the now graduated M. Lukk captured the doubles crown for Toronto. The intermediate intercollegiate tennis tourney will be held in Toronto on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Heading the Varsity contingent will be Ken Lawson who recently won the University of Toronto championship. His fellow members will be Robin Logie, Robin Arnold, Barry Smith and Bill Grove.

Girls' Swim Here Soon

Come on, you swimmers! Only seven regular practices left. However, beginning next week, there will be noon practices also at the Lillian Massey Pool between 1-2 p.m.

This year, the Speed and Diving Competition will be an open meet, each college may enter as many swimmers per event as they are able. The date is Oct. 30th, and the place is the Hart House Pool. Per usual, the PHE squad is the favourite, but St. Mike's might prove a dark horse this year.

Interest in synchronized swimming has proved it worthy of a separate meet this term, and it will be held at O.C.E., on Oct. 27th. Included will be solos and duet routines, with emphasis on style.

Both events are promising keen competition, and should help determine the inter-Collegiate team, for the big meet in November.

Interfac Track On Tap Today

The tempo quickens in track and field this afternoon. The occasion is the University track Championships, an event which is open to all undergraduates. Not only does this meet provide an opportunity for athletes to gain Reed trophy points for their Colleges, but it is an official tryout for the Intercollegiate Teams. The first two athletes to finish in any event win the right to represent the University in the Senior Intercollegiate meet next week. The two competitors who finish third and fourth will represent Varsity in the Intermediate Intercollegiate meet which is held the same day.

Coach Hal Brown is enthusiastic over what he refers to as "the makings of one of the best teams that this University has ever produced." On the strength of this statement Varsity can be rated as a strong favourite to win both the Senior and the intermediate Intercollegiate Track titles again this year.

Starting time for the meet is 1:30 P.M. As usual there will be no admission charge for this meet, however it is well worth seeing.

Baby Blues Pushing Offensive Winter, Papsin Come To Aid

BY FRED GRAY

With the seasons first win behind them, Varsity's Baby Blues, under the watchful eye of coach John Kennedy, are drilling hard for their next encounter with Queens, Saturday. Licking their wounds and counting their injured sustained in last week's encounter with Ryerson, the team is concentrating on their offensive, a commodity that seemed rather hard to come by in their last outing. The victory over the Rams was not without its price though, as end Jim Bell will probably miss the rest of the season with cracked ribs. Dan Mucci, hero of the Seconds first touchdown

Friday, will sit out the next game with a badly dislocated finger, while guard Gerry Canlett will also sit the next one out with injuries. Ted Lotocky, another stalwart lineman, sustained a back injury against the Rams but will be back in action this weekend.

In the offensive department the team will receive a considerable boost with the addition of Stu Winter and Fred Papsin. Stu comes directly to the team from the Blues. Working in practice at the quarter spot Winter seems to be the offensive spark needed. Fred Papsin, a fullback injured at the Blues training camp, dressed for the first time Tuesday night and will probably see action in the next game also.

(At last report, no absent-minded professor, lost 30 years in the stacks, has been found.)

As the 250,000 books on Humanities and Social Studies are moved out of the old stacks, 100,000 science books are re-arranged and 150,000 medicine are moved in. In theory it works like this. A section in the new stacks is designated for a certain subject of the Humanities, say "War". Thereupon the 3,000 periodicals, dead or alive, dealing with this art are taken from their shelves; the 225,000 monographs written on this science are searched out, and the 56,000 pamphlets of proper subject matter are assembled together, at last, in their new section.

The spaces left by "War's" removal are used to rearrange the science, of, say Fleas. Thereupon all Flea literature on Flea Mites, 600, Flea Bites, 2,800, Flea Lights, 150, Flea Circuses, 880, are brought together and medical books, Flea Medicine 200, and Flea Repellent, 5,000, are brought up and put beside the Flea Science.

In practice, it works almost as in theory, except the order is more tricky. Certain subjects have to go first and some numbers have more significant figures. The old stacks were overcrowded and not all was in place. Periodicals, monographs, and pamphlets were stored separately; subjects were mixed; temporary expedients were becoming permanent, and the shelving was complex. In the new library, all the bits and pieces will be assembled in a happy and efficient order.

Two departments, Order and Cataloguing, have already moved into their luxurious new home and except for the hammering, sawing and the constant quarter-mile hike to the catalogue, find it wonderful. The Cataloguing Department has marked with special blue cards all the books to be moved. The next time you send a poor librarian on a half-mile hike—quarter-mile there, quarter-mile back — and then explain it was really another book you wanted—be prepared!

For their work in connection with the moving of the library, the librarians deserve a great deal of credit (and an apology for that nasty crack about "sergeants"). Though at times limited to one hour, library service has never completely ceased. There is an incident duly noted where a book was selected off a moving book-cart. For these, their half-mile marches and many, many other unnoted acts, we owe much to the dexterous, well-trained efficient, intelligent, courteous and hard-working librarians of the U. of T. (Librarian Fran, how about a date?)

One last detail, what shelf space should be left for books that will be purchased in the future? This question has been masterminded by the use of a slide-rule, faith, 7% place log tables, hope and a crystal ball. The magic formula — fill only 5/7 of the available shelf space and only 3/4 of every shelf with books. This ideal shelving will have room for all books purchased for the next ten years before its full.

And in ten years, the library starts moving all over again.

Hart House Art Open To Co-Eds

Professor of Art and Archeology, Charles Comfort, will give an informal talk on the present exhibition in the Art Gallery of Hart House tonight at 5.00 p.m. Co-Eds will be welcome. The exhibition by New Brunswick artists is a collection of paintings currently on a tour through the Southern Ontario Galleries Circuit of which the Hart House Art Gallery is a member.

Mock Parliament

Last year, more trouble was fermenting between the IPA and the Political Economy Club. The club at first again refused the Independents the right to run, but later in the year, revised their stand and permitted IPA five seats.

More complications arose when an error in The Varsity confused the time voting was to take place for the five independent members. (The vote was held about a week before regular elections for Conservative, Liberal and CCF members.)

Just as nominations for the five seats closed, a large crowd stormed into the meeting hall and demanded they be re-opened. Students voting for independent members were not permitted to cast votes later at the general election.

"It is to try to get away from the kind of trouble we had last year," Millard said, "that we plan not to hold an election this year."

Millard said the emphasis this year, he hoped, would be less on representation than on the presentation of political points of view by the parties forming governments. He said the Progressive Conservatives, Liberals and CCF — and perhaps the Communists — would be permitted to form a government one night.

Sessions will be held during January, likely in the 90-member Ontario Legislature at Queen's Park. Millard said, "If we don't hold it in the legislature, as was done last year, we may hold it in Convocation Hall," Millard said, "in which case there will be no limit upon the number of members able to take part."

Student beer hall opened in Osaka. Managers, bartenders, and waitresses are students. This caption along with a suitable picture appeared in the recent copy of the Japanese Student News Service which just reached our desk. The schooners of the foaming brew shown in the picture hold at least a quart and from what we can find out their price is about five cents. Another caption reads, "A scene of a reception at Osaka Fair Hotel. Each of the foreign delegates was presented with a Japanese doll." NFCUS, WUSC, SAC, COTC, UNTD, and university officials inform us that exchanges with Osaka University cannot be arranged at the present time.

Apparently all is not rosy over at the University of Western Ontario. Western boasts more Cadillacs per capita than any other Canadian University, but apparently they have a few plebians too. The Western Gazette for last Friday carries a front page story describing a way of clipping the telephone-using public. Apparently the best method is to stuff some paper up into the coin return slot of each pay phone, preferably during the early hours of the day. Later return and pull the paper, along with a handful of coins from the chute. Actually it's a lot harder than it sounds. We stuffed fourteen phones and only collected $465. Hardly worth the effort.

From the Queen's Journal comes another front page story about telephone thefts. The Bell Telephone Company claims that a key is being used to get back money after long distance calls. In the process, damage is being done. Certainly the use of a key is more in keeping with the superior skills and intelligence of University students. Unfortunately all the keys we tried do not work.

The first prize for the best editorial in the CUP last week goes to Julius Koteles of the Manitoban. Writing on the subject "NFCUS survives" he points out many facts that lead to the obvious and reasonable conclusion that NFCUS is a waste of time.

For example the budget for the present academic year calls for expenditure of $20,415. Of this over $16,000 are devoted to organization. This means that four-fifths of the budget is set aside for administering the other fifth. Perhaps we are prejudiced by an innate love for money but we think this smacks of inefficiency.

Teach Sanskrit And Japanese In East Asiatic Studies

BY OKE

Housed on the second floor of 5 Wilcocks St. is the East Asiatic Studies Department, a field which few know anything about. Since its inception four years ago, EAS has gathered 40 students into its ranks.

The subject matter of the course consists of the art, philosophy, religion and language of India, China, and Japan. At the moment only Chinese is taught as a language but Sanskrit and Japanese are soon to be added to the curriculum. The many dialects of these countries are not taught because they are not written. These scholars are interested primarily in understanding the cultural influences which have molded these people as our culture has molded us.

Speaking to Prof. W. A. Dobson, Head of the Department, and Mr. R. Robinson, we learned that EAS is expanding, will open a library with a $40,000 grant from the Carnegie Corporation. Already they have 100,000 books; the library will be the finest of its kind in Canada.

We learned something about the Sanskrit language. From 1500 to 800 BC it was spoken to transmit oral literature from generation to generation. As a written language it was roughly contemporary with The Classical Greek period. Today it is read by educated Hindus as Latin and Greek are read among us; it is still used for creative prose regarding solemn religious rites.

Professor Dobson summed up the purpose of his study: "to learn as much as possible of the ways and thought of these people—as it is directed by their language—with a view to understanding them today in the face of the rising Nationalism. The professor recently came back from a trip to eastern Asia, where he witnessed this trend himself.

Test Frosh English Thursday Morning To Tell Student Where He Stands

All freshmen at University College, whether or not they are registered in an English course, will write an English exam this Thursday. The examination is also required for all first-year students taking an English arts course in UC—students in the School of Physical and Health Education, the School of Nursing, and the Faculty of Music.

"The examination is a college matter, provided by the Department of English, at the wish of the college council", said Professor Harris of the UC English department. "Its purpose is to tell the student where he stands." He said that students could possibly fail at the end of the year through faulty English

Special instruction is provided for students registered in an English course who fail the exam, said Professor Harris. Other students failing are interviewed and told where their weaknesses are. Opportunity for instruction is provided, if they wish to take advantage of it, he added.

Usually the exam is held at the end of September. However, this year it has been held off for two weeks, so that those registering late can be included in the first examination, the professor said.

The exam will take two hours as it has in previous years, said Professor Harris. It takes place from 8.00 a.m. till 10.00 a.m. on Thursday, Oct. 14. First year UC students have been notified by letter where they are to write. I-PHE writes in Rm. 52L, UC; I Music writes in Rm. 71 UC; I Nursing writes in Rm. 101 at the School of Nursing.

Mambo Craze Hits US Campus

The Daily Californian carried a story last week telling of the latest dance craze sweeping the land of L'il Abner and Senator Joe. Apparently a Mambo Concert was held in an auditorium and given the title "Mambo Craze."

A man called Cal Tjader who led a group of "Afro-Cubans" was apparently in charge of music and it was reported that "two dancers will exhibit the complicated rhythms and tempos that contribute to the pace of the mambo." The story went on to tell how a special long playing record of the event would be sold on the campus at a later date. A veiled warning was postscripted to the news story which ended with the words: "Tickets are selling on a first-come, first-served basis."

year, an examination will not be held there, as in previous years," said Professor Barker of the Trinity English Department. "Instead, he said, the remedial course will be based on the results of the first-term essays." "The course should be under way by the end of November," he added.

Students taking any college subjects (not just English) will be included in the survey," said the professor. "Students of all years, not just the first year, will be concerned," he said.

"The course is not compulsory—but strongly suggested—for those who do poorly in their first term essays," said Professor Baker. "It is not just a course in remedial writing but a course in essay writing."

"The general purpose of the course is to teach people how to write essays," he said. "It will teach students about bibliography, footnotes, and all the things they eventually learn through experience. We already have several people who want to take the course," Professor Baker added.

VICTORIA

"Victoria does not have a regular program of remedial English," said Miss Jenkins, of the English department at Vic. "There are no remedial classes offered, nor is there an exam at the beginning of the term," she said.

"Occasionally," she added, "faculty members will meet with students who know they are poor in English." "The only way to judge students," she said, "is by first term essays, which are usually held quite early in the term."

"It is generally the feeling of the department," said Miss Jenkins, "that the job should be done in the high schools; it is not their job. The department would rather hesitate to start anything like that," she said. "It is difficult to tell how far it would go."

ST. MIKE'S

"At St. Michael's there is one regular remedial English course as in UC," said Father Madden of St. Mike's English department. "However, they do have a complete introductory course in English for students from Quebec and South America," he added. "The course covers all aspects of English. It is a 'House' course, and has no university credit."

SAC TURNS THUMB DOWN ON IUS

A Dancing Faculty Goes Swing Wise In Latin-American Way

Professors and other faculty-members here may soon be stepping it out to the hot rhythms of Latin-American music.

The Honorary Secretary-Treasurer of the Faculty Union, George Lewis, said yesterday that a 10-lesson course in ballroom dancing would open in Hart House October 20, for all members of the University of Toronto faculty.

Being sponsored by the Faculty Union, the professors and lecturers turned students, will measure the intricacies of such popular dance steps as Latin-American congos and rumbas, now becoming increasingly popular, Lewis said, with fox-trots, waltz-steps and swing.

George Lewis and wife Mary will take charge of the classes which they hope will be attended by at least 30-40 faculty members.

"We are offering the instruction," Lewis said, "in anticipation of more social evenings for faculty members this year."

Official Toronto Policy Adopted For Conference With National Stress

Representatives for nearly 10,000 students of the University of Toronto turned thumbs down here last night to any affiliation at this time with the International Union of Students.

Students' Administrative Council voted 12-5 to take the anti-IUS stand.

The vote means that Toronto's official stand at next week's conference of some 22 member universities of the National Federation of Canadian University Students will oppose membership in the IUS.

SAC's motion was that it "goes on record as opposed to Associate membership of NFCUS in the IUS, or any other kind of membership of the NFCUS in that organization, at this time."

The motion was proposed by the Publications Commissioner, Ian Scott, at last night's session. It was opposed by Clyde Batten, Editor of The Varsity, who advocated in its place the adoption of "a positive policy". Batten contended that NFCUS should either commit itself to definite membership, or abandon the consideration completely. "It's time we Canadians took our place in world affairs," said Batten.

This IUS decision was part of a six-point policy program adopted by the SAC as the official Toronto policy at the forthcoming NFCUS conference which will be held in Toronto next week.

Although the SAC managed last night to interest Gordon Hurlburt, an Engineering student, in taking over the reins of chairmanship of the local NFCUS organization, he will not be an official representative at the conference. The SAC chose Hurlburt to fill the missing rank of its last year's NFCUS chairman who didn't return to the campus here this year. Since Hurlburt will have been connected with NFCUS for only a few days before the national convention, he will be —although Chairman of the Toronto delegation—merely an observer. He will have no vote.

Among the other issues decided after considerable discussion were:

- (1) The investigation of other national student organizations,

NFCUS Fate To Depend On Strong Future Policy According To Enriquez The National President

"The fate of NFCUS—The National Federation of Canadian University Students—will depend on a strong national policy."

Such was the prediction of Antonio Enriquez, national president of the organization who delivered a 15-minute talk to a regular meeting of the Students' Administrative Council here last night.

Enriquez outlined a six-point program for economic and social advancement of university students which he said he would lay before the forthcoming NFCUS conference. The conference is due to open here Monday.

The six points:

1. Implementation of plans recommended by the Massey Commission for aid to needy students. He said NFCUS would press the Federal government for action.
2. Call for an increase in tax exemptions for parents whose children are attending Canadian universities.
3. A plan to investigate by statistics the earnings of students employed during summer months.

4. Proposed an enlargement of student placement services in the 22 Canadian universities.

5. A strengthening of the overall aspect of the organization with an emphasis on "the national."

6. A greater development of NFCUS publications.

The six-point program on economic and social improvements was followed by a four-point program having to do with the cultural life of the student. The four-point program was:

President Enriquez called for immediate steps which might lead toward a more "concrete" policy for the future.

Enriquez said that the object of the organization was to "preserve Canadian students on the national scene". He said it was impossible for Canadian university students to have prestige abroad if they were weak on the home front.

1. An expanded program of national art, short story and photography competitions.

2. More incentive to spark debating activities in Canadian Universities.

3. Proposals for inter-regional exchange systems for musical groups and speakers, etc., among universities.

4. An active establishment of university seminars among the universities to study "the Canadian Scene."

Enriquez told the SAC that he planned to recommend a partial decentralization of the organization with greater emphasis on regional activities.

Enriquez, in concluding, said that he would advocate at the forthcoming national convention that the organization revise its stand in connection with the International Union of Students.

apology

It was inadvertently reported in The Varsity yesterday that there would be no elections this year for the University's mock Parliament. The report should have read: "There will likely be no elections..." Allan Millard, the President of the Political Economy Club said although it was probable the elections would not be staged this year, the matter had not been officially decided. He said furthermore that the leaders of the three political clubs on campus had not "agreed among themselves" but rather, had given him verbal approval so far as they personally were concerned. The clubs, he stressed, still must ratify the plan.

St. Mike's Rally Becomes Snakish And Girl Grabby

A St. Michael's pep rally turned into a skirmish between Victoria's South House and St. Michael's last night.

It all occurred when South House infiltrated into the St. Michael's snake dance that meandered by their house. Some South House men grabbed a St. Michael's girl and held her until later in the evening when St. Michael's invaded South House.

South House was "overcome by force of number," said Bob Nadeau, a resident of South House. He added that although South House fought valiantly, they lost their "prize," which had been "wined and dined" since her capture. The ending was a friendly one in that according to Nadeau, South House was left with only "admiration for St. Michael's."

A Welcome Amidst Confusion To Latin Americans For WUS

Local student authorities were scratching their heads here yesterday when they received a sudden, unexpected telegram from the Catholic-sponsored Newman Club in Montreal.

The telegram informed them that six Latin American students would be arriving to take part in the Canadian conference of World University Students to be held here this week-end.

Ron Gould, the University of Toronto chairman of the WUS said, "we had no idea at all, that the South American guests were coming."

A few hours later—as if to add to the confusion—the Latin Americans were stepping off the flyer from Ottawa at Toronto's Union Station. But instead of six delegates, there were nine, one of them the wife of one of the visitors.

"We had no official word from anyone to book them at a hotel as guests of the conference," Gould said, "although the telegram from Montreal stated that they were being financed by some American foundation."

Student authorities finally booked the nine guests at the downtown Walker House hotel—the official stopping-off spot for other delegates to the WUS conference which swings into action tomorrow.

Met at the station by officials of the Toronto branch of the Newman Club, the nine South Americans reported a summer-full of globe-trotting and conference-visiting.

Sponsored by the Catholic-backed Pax Romana organization, the students—all believed to be undergraduates attending South American universities—hopped over to the August powwow in Portugal of the Romana Assembly for Intellectuals.

Later the students slipped over to Switzerland for an International Union of Students' meeting and then took a several week's swing through other European countries.

On August 8—just about a week ago—the nine student tourists got off the boat at Montreal, spent a few days in Canada's largest metropolis, then took a spin up to see the nation's capital.

After sitting in as guests at the WUS conference this week-end and the National Federation of Canadian University Students' meeting next week, the Latin Americans plan to wind up their world trip with a visit to a handful of important east-coast US cities, returning home early in November.

NOTICE

Two pieces of advice are offered herewith to contributors to The Varsity: First, letters to the Editor should be kept brief and to the point since space limitations make the publication of lengthy offerings extremely unlikely, if not impossible. The letters-to-the-editor section is limited mainly to the space available on the editorial page. Second, all contributions written in longhand—including notification of "Today and "Coming Up" events—should be legible. The Varsity cannot accept responsibility for the publication of coming events or letters which cannot be deciphered.

Carabins Come To Campus

The cheerful refrain of "We are the Carabins de Toronto, allo, allo, allo," will soon be heard again on the Toronto Campus, said Miss Jane Farquharson, Chairman of the SAC Weekend Committee. She announced that 40 students from the University of Montreal would make their annual trip to Toronto on the Weekend of November 18 to 21. The Carabin Visit will be returned by the Toronto students sometime next February, said Miss Farquharson. She also said, "The weekend tries to combine gay good times with serious discussion. As a result, many students, both French and English, come to understand another culture, a different point of view, which, even if they disagree with, they can appreciate. "A knowledge of French is not necessary," emphasized Miss Farquharson.

This year our programme will include a welcoming reception, discussion groups, lectures, dinner and square dance at Nobleton. Application forms are now available in the S.A.C. office.

IUS General Sec'y To Come From Prague As Return Gesture

Jiri Pelikan, General Secretary of the International Union of Students, is coming to Toronto from IUS headquarters in Prague, Czechoslovakia, at the invitation of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. He will attend the National Conference of NFCUS which is being held here from Oct. 18th to Oct. 21st.

Observers from NFCUS attended the IUS Conference in Moscow last summer, and it is as a return gesture that Mr. Pelikan has been invited to come to Toronto. Full-time National President Antonio Enriquez feels that this is only fair, especially since the report of the NFCUS observers in Moscow was not too favourable towards IUS.

SAC, B&W To Combat Apathy Hold Cheer-Writing Contest "It Can Be Done" New Yell

The Students Administrative Council in cooperation with the Blue and White Society is holding a cheer-writing contest which opens today and will end on Thursday, October 21. The prize for the winning cheer-writer will be a combination game and train ticket to either the McGill or Western weekend. Entries should be at the S.A.C. office before the 21.

"The contest begins the drive against the general apathy of the student body for which the Blue and White Society has been severely reprimanded," said Joe Divok of the S & W Society. He added that this lack of spirit was particularly evident in the last quarter of Saturday's football game when the team was backed against its own goal line and that "this is only the beginning of a drive by the S.A.C. and the Blue and White Society to bolster the spirit at this University."

Below is a cheer which the cheer leaders made up. "See if you can match it," said Divok. Fight, fight Blue and White

Hart House Debate Spurns PC Policy

Hart House debaters last night defeated the motion that "In the opinion of this House, Ontario has enjoyed good government in the last five years", by a vote of 55 to 41.

Donald C. MacDonald, Ontario CCF leader, guest speaker, charged that the Conservative government was a class government, working in the interests of business.

He said that while Ontario tops the list of Canadian Provinces in resources to meet education needs, and quoting findings of the Canadian School Trustees Association, it has now sunk to the bottom of the list in terms of applying its pocketbook ability to the educational job we face. He said that most people did not earn enough to buy eleven thousand dollar NHA homes, and that the need for low rental housing was imperative.

The public debt of the province has increased by thirty dollars per capita in the last year. He was contradicted on this point by Joe Slogan, IV Dents, first speaker for the government, who said that the public debt has decreased.

People of Ontario have demonstrated their approval of the present government of Ontario since the last general elections, said Slogan, by voting Conservative in the three recent by-elections. He added that these constituencies were not exceptional, they were representative of the province.

appointment of individuals to office not necessarily meaning whole-hearted support from their faculty.

On the subject of highways scandal he challenged the heckling opposition to another debate, in which, he said they would make as big fools of themselves as Albert Wren.

Al Borovoy, Law, first speaker for the opposition likened Premier Frost to the foe of Fearless Fosdick, Anyface, master of disguise, because he was "anything to anyman."

He accused the government of discriminating against religious minorities by using secular schools to propagate majority religion.

He said that since there were not enough hospital beds in the Province, expectant mothers virtually had to extend their period of pregnancy, before they could get into hospitals.

"I refuse to bring religion in—it has no place in this debate", said Ted Rogers, II Trinity, second speaker for the government. He said that "Anyface Tories were better than do nothing opposition."

Ninety Eight percent of educational grants go to poor districts, he said, and only two to the rich ones. He said that the universities got four times as much under the present regime as they got under the last Liberal government.

Much credit was due to the Federal Government, he said and the Government of Ontario for cooperating. The leadership we had was one of statesmanship, he added.

Ontario was behind all the other provinces in solving its housing problem, said Ed Lowry, IV UC, second speaker for the opposition. He added that Ontario failed to pay its teachers adequately.

SAC At Glance

Students' Administrative Council last night, besides discussing NFCUS and WUS, and listening to two guest speakers:

- passed over the suggestion that SAC decide on the status of the Independent Progressive Association. The suggestion re SAC action arose from the popularity the IPA question had received in "Letters to the Editor" column of The Varsity.
- passed a motion that the Mock

Parliament be held under UTDU authority and if not SAC assume no financial responsibility as it has assumed in past years.

- approved ticket sale on a 4 p.m. train to Montreal for the Queen's game this weekend.
- moved not to permit a fraternity float in the Float Parade.
- learned that the formal SAC picture was classed as administration expense.

made two presentations, an SAC Honour Award & Key to Professor Saunders and a gift to former Chairman Gwynne-Timothy.

- were introduced to the new Architecture Rep. W. Redpath.
- applauded Professor Hendry from the School of Social Work for his speech on the Red Feather campaign urging action on competition between the multiple campus appeals.
- were told members of all SAC organizations are invited to a tea by the Alma Mater Society at Montreal after the game. (Meet in front of the Students' Union).
- appointed Ann Stark III P & OT as member to the Opera Committee Board.
- heard Chairman Symons remark that the dull silence of the assembled mob astounded him, after asking for questions to be put to National NFCUS President Tony Enriuegez.

- were informed that the tape recorder had been returned to the SAC offices.
- were welcomed to attend the WUS conference starting Friday.
- discovered that they were to refer to Blake's "Delegate to his Constituency," concerning

Comfort Lectures On Art Emotions

A general approach to the understanding of art was discussed last night in the Hart House Art Gallery by Professor Charles Comfort of the Dept. of Art and Archaeology.

He discussed the subject of emotional conflicts as displayed by artists through the brush. An artist's state of mind is usually transplanted onto canvas, he said, and he illustrated as examples the paintings of a group of New Brunswick artists.

He said that the general intention of an artist was to express himself through form rather than colour and that the general intention and interpretation is often vague.

Discrimination Of Fraternities Causes BC Ubyyssey vs. Student Council Dispute

Vancouver, Oct. 13 (CUP)—Charges of discrimination against three fraternities at the University of British Columbia have led to a dispute between the editors of the student newspaper The Ubyyssey and the Students Council.

A heated two hour debate took place at a council meeting last week after the paper published the names of three fraternal organizations alleged to have discriminatory clauses in the constitutions. Alpha Tau Omega, Kappa Sigma, and Sigma Chi were the three fraternities mentioned.

The president of the Student Council, Dick Underhill is quoted as saying "We have no objection to The Ubyyssey printing the names of the three fraternities, only to the manner in which it was done."

The council passed the vote of censure accusing the paper of "poor taste" with only one dissenting ballot.

The editors of The Ubyyssey demanded that the vote of censure be rescinded and that a vote of confidence in the editorial staff substituted for it. They threatened resignation if their demands were not met.

The Students Council replied in a short paragraph which follows.

"The Alma Mater Society cannot submit to threats. Should the editorial board walk out on the students, Students Council will undertake to produce The Ubyyssey. And, with the help of the students, we will."

The whole question of who will resign is to be decided at a general meeting of the student body to be held today.

Form Divine

We can smile understandingly when Engineers run wild and destroy campus property. We can look optimistic in the face of seven days of rain. We can even remain composed in a world threatened by an atomic war. But the end has come to our patience with the latest fashions desecrating the female form.

First, they chopped off all the hair. Now blondes look like a half-peeled onion, red-heads like serrated radishes and brunettes . . . well, what can you say for a brunette that hasn't already been said.

Then they started spoiling other things. We always had our suspicions about Dior et al but after their latest attempt to convert the hour-glass shape to the test-tube profile we feel that something should be done about exposing these Fifis of the fashion field. We don't mind if M. Dior and his cohorts are merely changing fashions to make money. That is an acceptable motive in our society. We suspect, however, that his motives are darker. Having a preference for the masculine he is now attempting to make even the sugar and spice sex take on the snail-and-puppy-dog tail mien. We protest. It is time that hairy-chested, virile, broad-chested chaps took over the designer's pencil and made an attempt to return females to the ideal which Rubens established.

This change cannot come overnight. First, we suggest a return to the "New Look" of the post war era. The well-rounded figure combined with long hair would be a first move. From there it would be only a short step to well-fed, well-built strong-backed female which Rubens and all virile men admire.

From the above it probably seems that we are a narrow-minded reactionary intent on restoring the storied past without exception. We believe, however, that the best advances of the women's garment industry should definitely be utilized to create the ideal woman we admire. The sheerest nylon for stockings, the strongest rubber for belts and garters, and of course the softest foam rubber for shoulder pads. We would always include the provision that any prosthetic should be employed to achieve the ideal we have suggested. We definitely object to the new synthetic materials, rubber, and the rest being used to reduce the women on the street to the uniform thickness and appearance of thin-skinned frankfurters.

To quote a saying which we are told is very prevalent on the other side of the iron curtain, "Men of the world, unite, you have something to lose . . . your dames!"

our readers write:

Degradation of Morals

Dear Cavalier of the Streets:
Thank God I am not a Sophomore! To think that I should lose my treasured virginity if I were, and lower my ideals with but a shrug of the shoulders, considering myself still respectable.

This being my first year of College life, I find the program you have outlined utterly preposterous. I, and most others of my sex, have come here to further our education. True, cerebral activities do not involve all of my time. Social affairs are a part of my life. But contrary to your opinion, my studies are important to me. I trust that when I have completed my course, I shall have learned something to enable me to take up my career where I left off, with more knowledge and understanding.

Nor did I come here seeking romance. I do not consider myself to be timid, rebellious, disillusioned nor cynical. Curiosity and wonder are, I feel, natural emotions to me in a new environment.

After reading your article, every female student I met on the campus caused me to wonder — What are her moral standards? Does she respect and guard her virginity? Is she so frivolous and weak-minded as to lose sight of her ideals? I think not!

Had I read this corrupting article several years ago, I doubt that I would have enrolled at this particular university, for it seems to be the natural and accepted thing (by your own words) for young girls to experience this degradation of morals.

I am sorry that our appearance at Hart House has caused such bewildering woe. I am sure that many of the coeds will refrain from ever entering the portals of this edifice since it causes such heartache for the males.

I should think that the young men of the campus would have more to do with their time than to stand stupidly outside a department store waiting for the employees to disperse.

This article I consider to be the product of an egotistical, cynical, biased male mind.

Sincerely,
Disgusted, Respectable Female.

"Evaporated?"

The Editor,
The Varsity.

It appears that Monday's Consternated Cavalier has petulantly expressed his views on the opening of the sacred halls of Hart House to the Campus coed.

From the nature of this discourse, I presume that the gentleman, who seems to have little to do but go a-wooing on the city streets, has had some unfavourable experiences with a group of coed acquaintances. But, are they typical? From these influencing and obviously profitable affairs he has emerged a disillusioned man. Granted, the writer's escapades reek of variety, but are they not on a rather superficial plane? I wonder that he presumes to list the "evaporative emotions" of the coed when obviously his research has not surpassed emotions of a more sensuous nature!

Perhaps this dashing fellow could reconsider his impressions of the coed? May I boldly suggest that he will find an intelligent but, I hope, attractive student, endeavoring to prepare herself for a profession and/or to be a good wife, mother and member of the community.

As for the Arbor Room — we love it! We enjoy the "good fun in conversation and good fun in discussion" that Dr. Smith thinks the coffee shop would provide.
We are also enjoying the unexcelled companionship of the men!

If the discriminating employee of a downtown store does not stop to pat our eager friend on his bloop-covered head, perhaps he may come to discover the seemingly elusive virtues of the Varsity coed.

See you in the Arbor Room.
Shirley Ann Stephenson,
V Nursing.

and write Basic Institutions

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Let's face it — some people have an intellect that is capable of seeing only one side of any topic.
Monday's "Cavalier of the Streets" seems to have read so many Joe-College Novels and seen so many jazzed-up movies that he has been unable to face the reality of a Varsity coed when he arrived on this campus. I am only surmising that he knows one personally. Then again, maybe he has accurately described an acquaintance — but what huge generalizations. Of course women like to make themselves attractive to the male sex and to enjoy their company, but there are many here preparing themselves to make this world a better place to live in — the women planning to be teachers, doctors, physicians, occupational therapists, nurses, social workers, and ad infinitum also let us not forget those who believe in education for education's sake!

I suggest, my friendly, that you try talking to a few coeds rather than just looking at them, and see for yourself if they don't have a few brains and ideals. Included in these ideals may well be marriage and a happy home — our society would be in a rather sad state without these basic institutions. Women are here to stay — make the best of it, and might I add, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world".

Barb Lough,
V Nursing.

and write Sweeping Statements

The Editor,
The Varsity.

On Monday last, you saw fit to publish a letter obviously written by a crank and one who despises chastity in the heart of a large majority of women on this campus. No doubt if anyone was despicable enough to write such a letter in the first place deserves to have the nom-de-plum Cavalier of the Streets, if not only to protect himself from the number of irate women. This raises the problem of what street is he a cavalier? Jarvis Street, no doubt.

I am especially surprised at the statement he makes in regard to what he thinks is the highlight of a coed's university career.
Only a sex pervert would have made such a wide sweeping statement. I have a great respect for the many women attending the various colleges here and it is for these that I wish to refute that miserable slob's comments.
Many women attending the schools have expressed the desire to hang, draw and quarter that poor excuse for a man.

I am indeed surprised to see that the Varsity published such a provoking letter that placed a blot on every women's heart. It is a disgrace not only for the women on the campus but for the University as a whole.

There is no doubt that that letter was hastily conceived and written without much thought to the subject matter. But I do believe that if the crumb has enough gumption then, he will publish a retraction of his statement, or at least allow the editors of the Varsity to divulge his name so that he can be treated with the treatment that he deserves so well.

There are a huge percentage of women attending university who are not only young and exquisite examples of feminine pulchritude but virtuous as well. I'm sure that if some of the parents could have seen that article there would have been quite a row in front of the Varsity offices.

In conclusion may I say a word to the women commending them on the splendid way that they have carried themselves ever since I came to the University of Toronto. Any man who says differently is not a man but a cowardly chump who should not be attending this university in the first place.

Yours sincerely,
John W. Vojtech, St. Mike's

Critic In The Dark

On Daring

Ten go out. Only two come back. Between this beginning and ending are recounted the exploits of They Who Dare, the British volunteers who pioneered the Commando operations of the last World War. Despite its much-used subject and an unusual disregard for sex and horse-opera heroics, They Who Dare is an exciting story both told and filmed well.

The Eighth Army is at El Alamein and only the fear of Axis air-power, based on the Greek Islands, restrains Montgomery from opening the Second Front to clear the enemy from Africa. Six Tommie volunteers, joined by four Greek expatriates, form the first Commando unit and, assigned to the simultaneous demolition of the two German Bases on one Island, they are set ashore by a submarine on a dark and mysterious night. This is done with German E-Boats floating all about them and suitably exciting background music, which makes everything very suspenseful, or is supposed to.

Once ashore, the Commandos, who are depicted as very desperate men, give little care for the German security activities. In broad daylight they promenade boldly through the mountains, and without trouble reach their destination. The filmmakers may excuse their lack of realism in this instance with the excellent colour-filming of the picturesque scenery. At this point I was a little disappointed in the attention paid the actors when the mountains were so much more interesting.

It's hard to believe that the Germans were so successful in the War, watching the ease with which the commandos penetrate their guard of the Air-Bases. Almost absurd was my reaction to one incident, while the British are setting their charges on the planes, and one commando drops his binoculars almost at the feet of a German sentry. This particular guard is a wee bit blind it seems, because he just looks curiously about, then plods off on his rounds.

To this point all has gone smoothly and none has been discovered. But the young Lieutenant, commanding the operation, oversteps himself and tries to booby-trap a temptingly-large bomber, only to be caught in the act, revealing the plot to the Germans and causing the capture, thereby, of eight of their party. The remaining three borrow a leaf from the book of Ulysses escape from the Cyclops to evade the indignant German search-parties who come after them following the raid. Bored in by the searchers they crawl into a shallow cave and a friendly Greek Shepherd boy, playing a jazzy flute clusters his flocks about them, hiding the heroes from prying enemy eyes.

All this is climaxed when, with the German troops descending on them at their departure rendezvous, the desperate two that remain jump off into the Mediterranean Sea, swimming out to look for their submarine contact. By the merest coincidence, out in the middle of the Sea they find each other and all ends happily.

Much of They Who Dare is vague and unconnected scraps, some of which never quite fit in but the rest makes for a good story and, of course, the photography makes up for other deficiencies in the movie. I was most impressed by the Lieutenant CO, who although he forgot a proper measure of the water ration for his men, was thoughtful enough to bring the rum.

Joint Recital

A joint recital was given last Saturday night by Sr. Fernando Germani, organist, and Mr. Glenn Gardiner, baritone. A divided programme of this nature is not a happy affair as a rule, and on this occasion there seemed to have been no connection established between the two artists when planning their programmes. It was interesting to notice the way in which both were affected by the difficult conditions under which they had to perform. I understand that Sr. Germani had next to no time in which to get acquainted with the instrument earlier in the day, which bespeaks weakness on the part of the arrangements for the recital.

Sr. Germani is described as an organ virtuoso. His virtuosity is unquestionable, and in the F Major Toccata and Fugue by Bach with which he opened the programme, the technique, particularly in the pedaling, was superb; but the performance seemed wanting in a positive aim. It flowed smoothly enough, but the listener was not driven through climax after climax, nor the ear compelled along those swift seemingly infinite reaches of pedal-point, to be swirled around in the whirlpools of modulation. The registrata, particularly in the passages of organ-point, tended to be bottom-heavy, and much of the brilliance of the canonic superstructure was thereby lost. Bach's organ music was written for an instrument of less power than the modern concert organ and contrast was the criterion of good registration. On a modern organ, advantage may be taken of the increased dimensions and mechanical ingenuity, and at first Sr. Germani seemed reluctant to do this. In the second group, comprising modern English and French music he seemed more at home, and in Leo Soverby's Pageant, gave a performance of two-part pedaling that left one gasping.

Mr. Gardiner's programme contained a group of Schubert Lieder and one of British folk songs. I would suggest a closer adherence to the tack in Der Doppelgänger where Schubert has provided what practically amounts to a solid ground-base. In Der Mogensohn he sang cheerfully and convincingly, but showed that he should be careful not to swallow his vowels when he gets excited. He was happiest in the second group, and used sentiment and humour to produce a series of effective little dramas.

No Gargoyles?

Gothic Greatness

A rash of building seems to have broken out across Hoskin Avenue at Trinity College. Trinity grads at the Homecoming Weekend in 1955 will hardly recognize their old alma mater. A new chapel which is arousing admiring murmurs from architects in the United States and Canada, a new residence partially closing off the quadrangle on the North side, and various relocations of common rooms, lecture halls, staff quarters, reading rooms and the library will combine to make the alumni of 572 feel the weight of years. Almost the only features to remain unchanged are the present residences and Strachan Hall.

The new Trinity chapel is the part of which Trinity may well be most proud. Outside of the cathedrals in New York City the Trinity chapel will probably be the only piece of Gothic architecture built in the traditional style in North America, said Eric Arthur, professor of Architectural Design. No expense has been spared to make the new chapel as perfect an example of Perpendicular Gothic architecture as possible. The architect, Sir Giles Scott of England, designed and built Liverpool cathedral at an early age, and is now considered the world's leading authority on Gothic style. The Trinity chapel will be over 100 feet long, just short of fifty feet high from the floor to the point of the stone vault and just over twenty-five feet wide between the stone piers. The overall effect will be one of great height and strong verticality. The North end (ecclesiastically "West") will have a gallery and organ loft, and the students entering the chapel will have to descend several steps from the level of the main college floor. The South end, on Hoskin Ave. has a round apse, in front of which will be an elaborately carved rood screen behind the stone altar. The vault will be entirely of stone without steel reinforcement, and the thrust of the vault will be carried down the columns and the buttresses on the outside. The lights are planned to be recessed inside the columns and shine forward.

Professor Anthony Adamson of the school of Architecture said that the history of the Church of England was now exemplified in the architecture of Trinity College. The new chapel, in perpendicular Gothic, represents a style contemporary with the Catholic foundations of the Anglican Church. The South side of the College is in the architecture of the Reformation era of Edward VI, and the South side of the quadrangle is designed in the Building or Wrecking?

This mass of scaffolding is not erected for engineers to perform acrobatics on, but is the basis for Trinity's new chapel. For some time people have been making nasty comments about Trinity being a hole, as they passed the gaping chasm in front, but when the best example of Gothic architecture in North America is completed, they may sing another tune. Plz song perhaps?

Elizabethan style at the time of the Protestant ascendancy in the Church of England.

At the present time the construction is delayed by a strike, but next will come the construction of the slate roof, and when this is in place the most difficult job, that of constructing the stone ribbed vault, will begin.

CREST THEATRE

Garbled Greene

The main impression left by Graham Greene's The Living Room is one of confusion. Mr. Greene appears to be setting himself continual problems without knowing how he is going to solve them. Apparently he is eager to discourage any charge of missionary zeal, for he makes both his Catholics and his psychologist unable to deal with life. In a way he is asking, "If neither faith nor atheism will save us, what will?" And yet he never presents this, or anything else, as a clear issue; he takes both sides alternately so that the issue at stake is lost in a maze of personalities that are not personalities. In building up the Catholic background which is the most effective one for dealing with a question of this sort, Mr. Greene becomes so involved in explanation and trivial detail that he forgets about his characters who emerge as empty shells. They are neither symbolic figures nor real people; they have a few characteristics but no character. Further, their confusion and vagueness of outline pervades the whole play, raising conflicts which are never resolved so that the final curtain leaves the protagonists as unhappy as they were in the first moments of the play: the crippled priest who suffers all his niece's pain because he is not able to save her; the psychologist who has "ruined two women's minds" and cannot understand his own; the ancient aunts, one doddering and bewildered under the guidance of the other's twisted mind; the hysterical wife who cannot live either with her husband or without him. Two of them found peace of a sort; Rose has killed herself; the doddering aunt has won a shadowy victory over the fear that her sister had implanted in her mind.

Against the unhelpful background of a dowdy set the depressing story unfolds. It has no message and it poses no universal problem; it answers nothing and it asks nothing; it is entirely empty of poetry; it is pedestrian. We are never told why a convent bred girl should go straight from school to the arms of a married man. We never know why it was that she died so wasteful a death; because she was too weak to bear the pain of renunciation, as she said herself; because the Church could offer her nothing, in her extremity, but the efficacy of prayer; because she had a neurosis fostered by the feeling of fear in her aunts' house? We know so little of Rose's character that we are unable to judge her. So bravely does Mr. Greene resist the temptation to preach that he takes no stand on anything at all. The general aura of aimlessness is increased rather than diminished by its production. Frances Hyland, to be sure, as the bewildered niece, turned in a pathetically appealing performance that confirmed our opinion that she is well on her way to becoming a really good actress. Amelia Hall had an excellent moment as the hysterical wife and Betty Leighton's portrait of the doddering aunt was a charming quintessence of autothood. Possibly it was uncertainty in the direction that made the actress hesitate between comedy and tragedy; probably it was uncertainty in the play that made the director uncertain. Perhaps it was miscasting that made Peter Mews such an uncomfortable priest and uncertainty of his lines that turned Donald Davis' fits of tenseness into moments of artificiality which spoiled an otherwise good performance. It was, after all, opening night.

NORM WILLIAMS COPS CODY TROPHY

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MOISHE REITER

Today, on the back campus, after classes end, Interfaculty Football begins.

A doubleheader opens the season, with last year's best in each league matched against the also-rans. But that was last year's standing, and, if claims from the Colleges concerned are believable, that is all to be changed.

The men of Skule, field two teams this year, and should have enough power for spreading between them to make both contenders. Today, the Engineering Firsts meet the Redmen of University College. After the blasts that have appeared in this paper attacking the lack of spirit at UC and the confident answers from the College, UC may be something to watch. Their managers have reported, at various times, that there are 35 players out, but our reporters have never seen more than 20. Still the UC people are sure of doing big things in Intramural sports this year, so we'll be on hand to watch how they make out with the Skulemen.

In the other half of the double St. Mike's face up to a rebuilt and more powerful Trinity squad. This match should give some indication of who will be representing Group II in the Playoffs in November. These two clubs are held to be the strongest in their league and it remains to be seen only which is the better. From last year's record the Irish hold the edge, but Trinity have gone at it hard and could upset the favourites.

Other teams in the league have had real difficulty, and two of them have even been on the point of scrapping their entries. Dentistry looked like a sure scratch two weeks ago, but they've been revived by strong interest around their faculty and they're back in the race. Still they, like Forestry (who are doing this for the second straight year), will go with less than 20 men. The Foresters dress no more than 16 and the Dentists have only 13. These clubs may have some trouble with injuries.

SHOUTING AND FIGHTING

... is what we're supposed to do for the Blue and White. Usually we do that, though this year we seem to have fallen down even there. In the Intramural League, however, most clubs come out to play, some spectators border the field and the manager shouts encouragement. Some Colleges — St. Mike's is the best example — come out strong with cheerleaders and supporting crowds to cheer their teams. There just might be some connection between this and the success of their teams in Interfaculty Sports.

Who knows? Maybe this year's Interfaculty League will show some colour and spirit.

Rookie Quarter With Blues Harry Wilson's Proven Good

Coach Bob Masterson of the Varsity Blues felt he had reached the lowest depths a football coach can achieve; he had to grapple with the idea of facing the 1954 football season without a tried veteran quarterback. But his cries of woe have changed to shouts of joy as he has come up with not one, but two able pivot men. One is Bill Stevenson; the other, Harry Wilson.

Wilson is an elongated lad towering to a height of 6'6". Spread over this long frame are 200 lbs. of solidly packed football player.

Harry, a blonde, crew-cut kid, began his footballing days eight years ago with Riverdale Collegiate. Even in high-school ball Wilson quartered, and fired for a record number in pass completions each game.

His extraordinary height gives Wilson a good view of open pass-receivers, and he is a real target-hitter. His percentage has always been excellent and because of his uncanny accuracy, Coach Masterson felt he could alter his renowned running attack, which featured the Blues' play for many years, and attempt an overwhelming aerial attack. Since that alteration the Blues' quarterbacks have been hitting for a good number of pass completions.

Harry's greatest football thrill came when Riverdale played the East York Goliaths in an exhibition match three years ago. East York had been unbeaten for a few seasons, but Riverdale, with Wilson at the helm, put the Goliaths on the skids as he hit his pass-catchers for an unprecedented 1,000 average. He completed 15 passes in 15 attempts.

When Harry is not pitching strikes from the pivot position

Harry Wilson, ex-Riverdale grid-star, is an important cog in the 1954 Blue Machine. Passing is his specialty and this fits in well with Bob Masterson's new Multiple Offence. —VSP by Paul Kyselka he switches to pitching on the baseball field. He rounds out the year with a bit of Inter-faculty hockey.

Harry comes by his football prowess somewhat by way of his older brother John Wilson, who played with the Varsity Baby Blues for a year and is now assistant coach at Harry's Alma Mater, Riverdale Collegiate.

Harry will be around for another three seasons before he gets his Bachelor of Arts degree, after completing his Physical Education course.

Leads Vic To Interfaculty Title Engineers Run Close Second

By FRECK

Skule, in spite of their impressive showing last week, failed to beat Vic in the University Track Championships yesterday. Norm Williams turned out a terrific performance, winning the Cody Trophy with a total of twenty-two points, and sparking his team to the championship. Dick Harding starred for S.P.S. with a total of fifteen points.

The results of the meet were impressive, with the winning teams in most events comparing very well with Intercollegiate competition as well as past interfaculty performances. Some of the freshmen athletes, were especially outstanding, as they secured positions on the Senior Intercollegiate team, by placing second or better. Among these were John Ramsell, whose discus throw and shot putting were excellent, although his shot put did not equal his record of last week, it was still some inches in advance of the old interfaculty record.

One of the most outstanding performances of the afternoon was the three mile in which Herb Tilson, veteran three miler, succeeded in lapping all but one of the field as he ran one of the fastest times of recent years. The second place was taken by freshman Bruce Hughes, who upset veteran distance runner, Jimmy Nicholson.

Another surprise event was the 220 in which Dick Harding was pressed all the way by galloping Clint Husband to run a full second faster than the winning time in last year's Intercollegiate meet. Husband, coming back after a full year's layoff turned in a sterling performance as he backed Harding in the 440 as well as the 220.

The mile race, which had promised to be a record breaking event, was only average as freshman Bill Gelling came from behind at the half mile mark, to beat miler Bill Eckersley. The 880 was also of mediocre quality, as Peter Watson ran three seconds slower than his last year's performance, taking Ross Linton of U.C.

Peter Potter, of basketball fame, also came back after a year's rest, placing second in both the hundred yards and the high jump and third in the broad jump. As usual Bob Hamilton finished second to Williams in both hurdle events, then went on to win the broad jump.

Varsity seems to be a sure bet to win the Intercollegiate high jump again, with Malcolm MacLeod nosing out Peter Potter in the trials with a jump of 5'10 1/2". Another good bet in the field events will be John Christolm, who won the javelin event with a throw of 151 feet and then after the event was finished threw 165 feet.

If today is an indication of what to expect next Wednesday, the Intercollegiate meets should be well worth seeing.

Vic Edges UC 6-4 Eyeing Softball Title

Victoria College, last year's softball champions, showed yesterday that again this year they are the team to beat. UC put up a good fight, however, and for a few minutes in the last inning it looked as if the UC ladies were going to pull an upset. But they seemed to run out of steam and the final score was 6-4.

UC got off to a good start in the top half of the first inning with two runs. In the bottom half of the same inning control proved to be the deciding factor when Karen Woolings issued five consecutive walks for two runs. Mary Foster then stole home for the third run of the inning. But that was all for Vic gals in that frame.

Three up and three down was the story in the top half of the second with Marg. Ann Gemmel doing the pitching honours for Vic.

Net-Jousts In Montreal Varsity In Second Spot

Montreal, Oct. 13 (CUP)—The Senior Intercollegiate Tennis tournament opened today here with McGill University playing host to teams from the University of Toronto, Ottawa College, and the University of Montreal.

The first day's results found the French-speaking University of Montreal well out in front of the other teams having won three doubles matches and five singles matches. Toronto picked up two wins in the doubles and three in singles while McGill won one doubles match and three singles matches. Ottawa College trailed the first day's action with a lone win in the singles tournament.

The Varsity team, composed of Ken Lawson, Rob Logie, Bill Grove, Barry Smith, and Robin Arnold, suffered only three setbacks, all from the Carabins. The Toronto doubles team of Lawson and Logie bowed to Page and Messier 6-2, 8-6, while Messier overcame Smith 6-3, 1-6, 6-3, and Desjardins topped Grove 6-0, 12-10, after a gruelling second set.

The Carabin team, apparently the strongest, did not lose any matches today, but came very close on two occasions while playing the University of Toronto.

FIRST DAY'S RESULTS

Doubles: Chapman and Northy (McG) over desMarais and desMarais (O), 6-1, 6-2; Messier and Page (M) over Chapman and Northy (McG), 8-6, 6-3; Bourgeois and desJardins (M) over (Continued on Page 8)

Soccer Ends In 2-2 Draw With Ryerson

Varsity's Intermediate soccer team came from behind to effect a draw with a surprisingly good Ryerson team yesterday on the front campus. Losing 1-0 at half time the Baby Blues scored twice in the second period to one from Ryerson to gain a 2-2 tie in their second outing of the young season.

The Ryerson team were much better than expected after losing a close game 4-3 to a combined Junior-Senior team from OAC. Varsity right fullback Paul Yuen played a standout game covering the rear of Blue territory and giving goaltender Arnold Niitenburg plenty of protection.

George Ochrym and Pahapill tallied the Toronto counters in the second half, after a scoreless first frame that saw the Blues hemmed in on all sides by the Ryersonians.

The intermediates are partners to a double fixture on Saturday against the visiting MacMaster teams. Game time is likely to be 11:30 in the morning.

Will the following sports-writers please be in the office at 1:15 today to pick up assignments for next week: Chuck Dolman, Harold Cohen, Ed Beder, John Voitech, Max Rosenthal, Tom Lally, Walt Schmid, Doug Gerde. Will the following photographers please be on hand too: Paul Kyselka, Dave Wong.

Mural Football

Interfaculty football gets under way today in its sixty-first season of competition for the Mulock Cup. Both games scheduled will start at 4:00 P.M. on the back campus. S.P.S.I. meet Vic on the East field while St. Mikes are matched against Trinity on the West field.

Last year the Cup was won by a powerful S.P.S. team who defeated St. Mikes in the play-offs in Varsity Stadium. The question this year is whether they lost their power by entering two teams instead of only one. Trinity will take the field tomorrow, resplendent in new uniforms while the Irish will be starting in new jerseys.

St. Mikes were the victors in their division last year and despite the loss of a pair of last year's guards, they look even stronger than last year. They have abandoned their traditional T formation in favour of a spread, which promises to show plenty of power. Although Trinity dropped two games to the Irish last year, they may be depended on to produce a hard fought game as always.

S.P.S.I. will undoubtedly be a strong contender in the battle for the Mulock Cup. On the other hand, U.C., their opponents tomorrow, were weak last year and unless blessed with a wealth of new talent will probably go into tomorrow's game as the underdog.

These two games are the only ones scheduled for this week but football really gets under way next week with a game every day from Monday to Friday.

The season runs for approximately five weeks. At the end of the season the winners in both divisions and the runners-up play off in the semi-finals. The winners of these games will play in the final in Varsity Stadium; the winner receiving the coveted Mulock Cup.

Interfaculty

The opening of interfaculty action in box lacrosse yesterday afternoon, the UC I's squeezed by the Meds I's 10-6, while Pharmacy A's shutout Forestry 7-0.

Nobber Watson was the key man in the UC attack, scoring five goals, while Dave Stephen, and Bruce Lee with two each, and Bruce Sonley with one rounded out of total. Urquhart, Jones, and Petrovitch scored for Meds, while Kerr pulled a hat trick to give the Doctors their total.

Doug Fatum notched three for the Druggists, Don Watson two, and Bob Phillips and Romeo Franceschini one each.

One game is on record in the volleyball action in Hart House, which also began yesterday. Junior SPS B took the first game from Junior UC easily 15-1, then dropped the second 15-12, but came back to take the third 15-7 and the round.

One lone soccer game on the back campus saw the Trinity B's and Pre-Meds fight to a 1-1 draw. Bill Rainey scored for Trinity, while Baxter snagged the Doctors' counter.

Cossar Leads Varsity Golfers Team Third In Kingston Meet

In Kingston for the Intercollegiate golf tournament at the Cataragui Golf and Country Club Varsity's Senior entry managed to cop third place out of seven contesting Universities with a team score of 668, just ten strokes short of McGill, the meet winners.

A driving wind, coupled with wet greens and fairways made the morning scores higher than average as Western and Toronto came in leading the pack with 333 strokes each. However, a late afternoon 79 by McGill's Bob Hanna helped the Redmen to an after-lunch total of 325 and the team championship.

Best individual performer was Ray Coole of Queens' who carded 151 for the 36 holes, one better than the mark of last year's champion Jim Neale of Western. McGill led the tournament with 658, Queens' were second with 660, while Toronto held down third place with 668. Other Universities competing in the meet were Western with 672, Carleton College with 676, the University of Montreal with 730, and Ottawa University with 763.

Don Cossar led the Varsity golfers with a 36-hole total of 160 to rank fifth in the individual scoring. Bill Miller carded 167, such as the American NSA and the British NUS, from the viewpoint of Canada's own problems;

(2) the abolition of the National President with salary, but the retention of the officer as a nominal figurehead;

(3) the division of the National Secretariat into two branches, travel and administration, to facilitate the functions of the national office;

(4) the shortening of the national conference by a number of days; and

(5) the concentration on national rather than international activities.

The last proposal aroused the most discussion, and involved the deepest implications. President Angus pointed out that NCFUS is essentially a national organization, as its title implies, and that its primary obligation was to promote the unity and interests of students within Canada. This would result, according to Angus, not in a neglect of international affairs, but in an emphasis on national development which would better prepare us to assume a place of world leadership.

The Finance Commissioner, Alan Walden, stated that he could think of several better uses for the $1,600.00 paid annually by Toronto to NCFUS as proportionate to our student population. Several members of the Council expressed general agreement with the doubts of the value of NCFUS, and the suggestion of Editor Batten that the Toronto SAC withdraw from NCFUS received consideration.

President Angus pointed out that the adoption of such a policy would seriously damage any worthwhile contribution which Toronto might make to the Conference.

Finance Commissioner Walden suggested that delegate Angus should "diplomatically suggest" the fact that Toronto had again considered the question of withdrawal, but that no official policy for the conference should be adopted.

student tours europe

Paris Likeable, Vienna Gay

A study of international organizations was the object of a World University Service-sponsored tour of Europe taken by Doug Hamlin, IV Vic, this summer. Hamlin was on the Czechoslovakian Tour, one of five offered by WUS, and was one of three University of Toronto students representing that organization abroad.

Hamlin visited ten European nations during his four-months stay, but found it difficult to choose between Paris and Vienna as his favorite city.

The tightly-packed program for the study group began in Paris, where they visited the United Nations Economic, Social and Cultural Organization and got a glimpse of the daily work of this important branch of the United Nations. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Organization for European Economic Co-operation were also covered during their stay there.

After a brief stop at a student rest centre in the French Alps, Hamlin went on to Geneva. There, at the international office of WUS, he participated in group discussions.

In Prague, the next stop on the list, Hamlin visited the International Union of Students organization, the Czech Union of Youth, and a collective farm. There he also saw the 120-ton statue of Stalin which is now being built. While in Czechoslovakia he saw a Czech version of Hamlet in the factory town of Cesky Krumlov. A trip was also made to Plzen, Czechoslovakia's second largest city, where, he claimed, they make "the best beer in the world."

Hamlin, speaking of a visit to a polytechnical institute in Plzen, noted that there was a definite tendency to separate the humanistic and technical studies in European universities.

He found the city of Vienna "tremendously gay", although the unemployment situation there is very serious. The study group studied the four-power commission, composed of Great Britain, the United States, France and Russia, in Vienna and noticed a marked difference between the situation there and that in Berlin. Whereas in Berlin there was a noticeable difference between the sectors, there was none in Vienna. Hamlin thought this was probably because Austria was a "liberated" country, while Germany was "conquered." He called Vienna "a good place to be stranded in."

Returning to France, the group went to Strasbourg to study the work of the Council of Europe. This is a supra-national organization which acts as a consultative assembly but has no actual power.

Hamlin then went to England where he attended a conference held at Oxford and a WUS seminar in Hertfordshire, where "Tensions in Our Time" was one of the topics under discussion.

Although a well-filled program allowed the study group little time for ordinary tourist activities, Hamlin managed to attend ballet performances of Swan Lake in three different European cities. He found the Moscow production the best and said that stage productions there were superior in many ways to those he had seen in other parts of Europe.

In Moscow, Hamlin acted as U of T observers at the IUS conference held there, also attended by Clyde Batten, Varsity Editor. In Zagorsk, 50 miles east of Moscow, he visited the Russian Orthodox Monastery and Seminary, the center of Orthodox thought in Russia.

Hamlin was impressed by the Moscow subway stations, which are very modern and decorated lavishly with chandeliers and large mural paintings. In Moscow he also saw the Lenin Library, which has 17 million books and is claimed by the Russians to contain every book in the world. "But I looked up a few that weren't there," Hamlin said.

In Warsaw, the group was the guest of the Polish Youth Commission. There they saw the new Palace of Culture which is being erected by the Russians as a gift to the Poles. Hamlin noted that people in Warsaw were generally better dressed than those in Moscow.

More Publicity This Year In Scholarship Campaign

By Carol Hoffman

"More scholarships and bursaries for students" has been a cry on Canadian campuses for a long, long time. Since 1947, committees have been formed to investigate the situation — and present their reports.

The publication in 1951 of the report of the Massey Commission on Arts, Letters and Sciences added fuel to the flame. Petitions have been drawn up for the implementation of the recommendations dealing with scholarships. Delegations have been sent to Mr. St. Laurent. So far, no federal action has been taken.

This year, working through sub-committees of NFCUS, students across Canada are planning another effort to interest the federal government — and the voting public — in the scholarship recommendations of the Massey Report.

The Massey Recommendations are for:

- (1) 100 Canadian scholarships, worth $500 per year and tenable for four years.
- (2) 250 National Scholarships, worth $500 per year and tenable for four years.
- (3) 2,000 bursaries of $500 per year tenable for four years and awarded partly on the basis of financial need.

(4) A student loan fund. Supporters for the implementation of the recommendations point out that there are a substantial number of Canadians who are qualified to obtain higher education and who do not obtain it because they lack the necessary means. They point out that Canada lags far behind other countries, particularly the United Kingdom, in the amount of assistance provided students (14% of Canadian students are assisted, over 70% of British students).

Finally, they point out that in the Report, no method of implementation is suggested, leaving the way open for a formula for distribution properly respecting provincial rights and University autonomy.

The plan tentatively and unofficially proposed for this year generally consists of a well-publicized campaign. This will include contact with local Members of Parliament before they leave for Ottawa, student letters to Members of Parliament, and resolutions passed by student bodies across Canada. Publicity in local newspapers and the support of off-campus groups will be sought.

A mandate (for which Toronto is a likely candidate) for the Massey campaign will be given to one university at the NFCUS conference next week. At the conference, policy for the campaign, and its general outline, will be decided upon.

Out-of-Town Visitors Will Attend Three-Day WUS National Conference To Further International Relations

WUS Secretary Makoto Fujita Addresses SAC

"I should like to express my thanks to you for the work of the World University Service of Canada," began Makoto Fujita, Executive Secretary of WUS, in his address to the Students' Administrative Council on Wednesday evening. "You are the strongest contributing WUS community in the world, along with the United States and Great Britain."

Fujita is visiting Toronto as a representative of Japan at the WUS Conference, to outline the plans for the International Seminar which will take place in Japan this summer.

Testifying that he had seen students who were literally starving on the streets, Fujita said, "A glass of milk could have saved them, and WUS has given them that. 'This,' he added, 'is what you are supporting.'"

"WUS means for you not a charity or a relief organization," Fujita explained. "You give not because you are rich, but because you are sharing your privileges with students throughout the world."

Fujita went on to give several examples of instances in which WUS had shown its international potentialities, both from the Canadian and Japanese points of view. Among these were the construction of a tuberculosis Sanatorium in Japan, and the restoration of a medical library destroyed by fire.

"Through WUS, the Japanese students are learning at last to share their mutual responsibilities with the students of the world."

In closing, the Executive Secretary wished to welcome those who will be coming to Japan this summer with the International Seminar. He described the Japanese as "so much excited" with the WUS proposal for the seminar.

"We are not rich, but we are friendly, you will find," promised Fujita.

About 500 out-of-town delegates were expected to sit down to the opening session of the World University Service national conference which opens here today at 2.30 p.m.

The delegates began arriving in the city two days ago by plane, train and bus from some 18 WUS-member universities all across the nation. One or two "guests," and "observers" from overseas countries were also believed to be on hand for today's opening.

The three-day conference swings into action with a welcoming address by the organization's Canadian chief, Dr. John Coleman, a University of Toronto mathematics department professor. It is slated to wind up by suppertime Sunday.

Described by Jane Farquharson and Ron Gould—both WUS officials—as "something like a service club," the aim of the organization was said to be the furthering of better international relations among students.

"We attempt, by offering travelling scholarships and maintaining contacts around the world, to promote better international understanding," Gould said.

The organization sponsors, on alternate years, world seminars, where students collect to discuss international problems (next year the world seminar will be held in Japan) and travel tours in which students visit foreign countries.

"As an example," Gould said, "over 20 students from Canadian member universities of WUS visited countries in Europe this past summer."

Three of the touring students—Jane Farquharson, Doug Hamlin and Scott Symons—will be interviewed over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's television hook-up at 6.30 p.m., Sunday. All three are fourth-year students at University of Toronto.

Highlight of the conference is expected to be a speech by Lewis Perinbam, executive-secretary of Canadian WUS. The full-time, paid secretary will discuss "Issues Facing WUS Today."

Two other speakers at the big conference will be Makoto Fujita, Japanese secretary of WUS, and Virendra Agarwale, secretary-general of India WUS.

One-Eye Tells All,—

Gazing at Benny's Ball

By ONE-EYED BENNY

Being as it is the day before the big trip out to the Colonial Centre of Kingston where the Golden Gaels of my old pal Frank Tindall, are awaiting the heavily-favoured Varsity Blues, I feel it is time that I come out with my infallible prediction as regards the inevitable outcome of these goings on.

This boy, Tindall, is known to me as a very shrewd article and so when he starts crying that he is worried about the chances of his Golden Gaels beating my Blues, I am becoming a little leary of betting against him. But my natural and unbiased preference for the power-house Blues leads me to lead with the Long Green in their support.

I am reckoning on my Blues coming up with four touch-downs and the Gaels, because Frank Tindall is saying they are so weak, are getting maybe three of same. This is meaning that the Blues are ending up over the Gaels by a singleton in touch-downs.

In the matter of Western and McGill, the Montreal boys are being dark horses with an outside chance of winning. The trouble is being that the chance is being outside of possibility and so I am calling the Western Horsies to be winning by maybe five touch-downs.

These being my sure-fire predictions on the events that are happening this weekend, I am hereby off the air and taking same. Bye, bye Fish, and remember that I am expecting prompt payment on all debts.

SAC Book Exchange Pays Up, Closes Up

A whopping $8,000 for some 6,000 books has been chalked up this year by Varsity's Student Administrative Council book exchange.

In a progress report on this year's operations, exchange manager Henri le Sueur said 2,000 buyers have snapped up the offerings of 730 sellers since business began September 30. The exchange closes today.

NOTICE

Today, October 15, is the last day that students can change their addresses for publication in the Students' Directory. Changes will be accepted at Simcoe Hall before 4:30.

Students will be listed alphabetically this year for facility in finding names. The practice in previous years has been to list them by faculties.

UC Debaters Prefer War to Reds

War is preferable to Communism. This decision was reached by the University College Debating Parliament when the resolution, "This House would prefer Communist domination to a third World War" was defeated yesterday in the Junior Common Room. The hall was packed.

"Better to lose face than to lose head."

Prime Minister David Powell, third-year student, thus summarized the argument of the Government. The United States, he said, is too afraid of losing face to make necessary compromises. This policy prompts them to uphold Chiang Kai-Shek in China over the Communists, under whom, in his opinion, the Chinese are better off. He also deplored the policy of re-arming a Germany so recently under Nazi domination. "The United States, as leader of the Western World, has no conscience," he said.

He stated that few people can conceive of what a thermo-nuclear war would mean. "It would be a case of who could push buttons fastest. There would be no winners; only losers."

"Give me liberty or give me death," demanded opposition leader Peter Martin, third-year UC (quoting the venerable nineteenth century platitude of S. C. Taylor) as he asked the House to consider what life under the Communists would mean. He pointed out that most university students are members of the bourgeoisie, and therefore not only their rights and property, but quite possibly their lives would be in danger. He warned further that a decline in living standards would inevitably follow Communist supremacy, as has been the case in Europe and Asia.

Jean Fox, a fourth-year debater for the Government observed that every war was fought "to end all wars," but wars still go on. She then cast a critical eye over the democracy which we try so hard to defend. She considered it a sham, hiding behind such catch-words as "Liberty" and "Equality."

"Prime Minister", David Powell sets forth the Government's argument at the U.C. Debating Parliament yesterday.

In the U.S., she said, liberty means the right to go to University, "and if you go to the University of Southern California, you will be required to take a loyalty oath." This, she concluded, is not freedom. Miss Fox compared the Russian educational system, which is based solely on merit.

Miss Fox maintained that democracy is just as blameworthy in forcing its ideology on other nations. "Nations should be allowed to choose their own government," she concluded.

Cathy May, fourth-year student, of the Opposition, defined Communism as being based purely on the underdog revolting against the privileged group. This class hatred, she maintained, more than fear for our property, is what turns us against Communism.

Under Communism, we would have two alternatives — to submit and become converted, or to resist and be in danger of liquidation. Survival with no meaning to life, she said, would be worse than the horror of war.

TV To Feature Battle of the Sexes Fashions in Umbrellas and Smoking

"The Battle of the Sexes" is the theme for next Sunday's television programme, Exploring Minds. This, the second of the programmes for 1954-55, is one of a series concerned with changes in the human race. The series is produced by the Anthropology department of the University of Toronto, and directed by Professor E. S. Carpenter.

The point brought out in this Sunday's programme is the effect of men's styles on women, and the result of the tendency of women to follow masculine ideas. Treads in umbrellas and clothes will be featured, said Prof. Carpenter.

Habits of smoking will be one highlight of the programme. For about fifty years, a few centuries ago, the habit of smoking was completely dropped. So many women smoked, that men considered it unmasculine — and consequently stopped. Once the men stopped smoking, the women followed suit. Smoking became temporarily unfashionable.

She expressed the opinion that thermo-nuclear weapons could become so dangerous that opposing nations would hesitate to use them. War in that event, she suggested, would become a battle of ideals . . . "and that is what I think is going on now."

An unusual flavour was injected into the debate by Vello Sermat, a second-year psychology student who said he had lived under Communist domination in Estonia for one year.

Speaking against the motion on the opposition side, Sermat listed some "true life" experiences and declared that life under the Russian heel was worse than war.

When Speaker E. Berger (who also found himself doubling up to play the part of Governor-General) rapped his gavel for debate's end, the government motion was defeated 61 to 38.

A Religion for Our Time

Creative religion draws men from the shadows of superstition into the light of truth. As man's knowledge increases, creative religion unfolds, for it accepts the findings of science and sees no conflict between reason and religion.

Unitarians are united in the endeavour to create a faith that has truth and meaning for the men and women of today. We challenge all ideas that do not stand up to the test of reason; we welcome the discoveries of all men, regardless of their race or religion, if they help to increase our understanding.

If you would like to share in creating a faith to meet the needs of today, we hope you will join in our church service this Sunday.

Fine Phrases

Last Wednesday night the SAC listened to the report of Tony Enriquez, president of the National Federation of Canadian Students.

In an earlier editorial we suggested that Mr. Enriquez' presentation at this meeting would do much to crystallize the thinking of the members of the council on the subject of NFCUS.

This has undoubtedly been achieved.

We regret profoundly that it was not within the president's power to allay the fears of many of the council members that this year's conference would follow the same pattern as those of previous years.

It may be of no consequence to the national president that the resolutions and recommendations he presented constitute almost a verbatim extract from the minutes of the national conference of last year.

In other words the conference this year seems doomed to follow the same interminable routine of passing resolutions "to reaffirm our past endorsement" of any number of finely phrased, universal desires.

We sincerely trust that either Mr. Enriquez' personal ability or the latent strength of the national federation will prevent such a fiasco.

Sharp Contrasts

It gives us genuine pleasure to welcome the delegates of the various WUS committees to their ninth annual conference being held this weekend in Hart House.

In sharp contrast with the program of inactivity sponsored by NFCUS, are the projects undertaken by World University Service.

The twenty-five years of its history have been marked by substantial contributions to the international community of students and a genuine regard for the welfare of other university students.

Since 1946 Canadian students have contributed through their WUS committees over $180,000, which has been devoted to student service throughout the world.

In addition the travel program has enabled more than 250 Canadian students to visit Europe, Asia and Africa. What these visits have meant in terms of understanding fundamental human problems can only be left to the imagination.

Our sincere congratulations on a vigorous program and best wishes for continuing success.

Moral Paralysis

Once again the forces of social disapproval have won the day. Wednesday night's SAC meeting voted to oppose NFCUS membership in IUS.

The chief arguments against affiliation continue to be (a) it would split NFCUS internally and (b) outsiders would disapprove such membership.

The first of these is axiomatic and though regrettable is at least valid. The second, however, represents a pondering to society which is the chief blight of student governments.

Either we believe it to be right for NFCUS to apply for membership in IUS or we do not. When we entertain questions of social disapproval we lay ourselves open to grave charges of hypocrisy and moral paralysis.

What the CCF Stands For

BY BILL GRANT

"The C.C.F. is a federation of organizations whose purpose is the establishment in Canada of a Co-operative Commonwealth in which the principle regulating production, distribution, and exchange will be the supplying of human needs and not the making of profits"; so reads the preamble to the Regina Manifesto which remains to this day the guiding principle behind the C.C.F.

There are two ways in which the C.C.F. is strikingly different from the other parties — in its structure which is democratic rather than leader-oriented, as in the other parties, and in its values or principles, with which we are here concerned. C.C.F.'ers call themselves "Socialists" not because they believe that state-ownership of industry is the be-all and then end-all of their party, but because they believe in a society where the emphasis is on economic planning for public welfare. They reject the anarchy and injustice of the so-called "free" enterprise economy. Economic planning on the scale necessary to create a balanced economy and a just society is impossible under old-party governments because they have an inherent prejudice against government intervention. A C.C.F., or democratic socialist, government would be prepared to take over those industries which must be publicly owned to make such planning possible — steel, transportation, communications, and such industries which hinder the public welfare when privately owned. A C.C.F. government would put an end to combines and monopolies by taking over an industry which indulged in price-fixing practices, or by taking over part of an industry so that competition is restored.

Only a small part of industry would be nationalized — the basic industries, transportation and communications. Some others would be under provincial ownership — telephones, buslines, brewers' warehouses and distribution of gas. Still others would be municipally owned, such as milk distribution and fuel. These three levels of government together would probably own less than half of the nation's industry. The choice of these industries is determined by requirements of the over-all plan for the nation's economy and on the need to protect the consumer and the farmer. The C.C.F. would encourage the growth of co-operatives so that eventually a large proportion of wholesale and retail trade and services, produce marketing, etc., would be operated by cooperative ownership. A significant part of industry would remain in private hands, although it would fit into the national plan, and would be subject to certain supervision by the state through credit controls. There are some industries where it is practical or even necessary to retain private ownership.

Although the C.C.F. is best known as the party of socialization of industry, an especially important aspect of the party is its continuous advocacy of various welfare measures, some of which even business-oriented governments have had to initiate as a result of popular demand. Upon election to office the C.C.F. would institute a national health plan, automobile insurance, bigger pensions, higher mothers' allowances and provide more extended welfare services generally. In a separate category are such things as penal reform, electoral reform, conservation of resources, promotion of the arts and recreation, and a more just and effective labor code.

In summation, the C.C.F. believes in the dignity of every human being, they believe that the real development of the individual is impossible where there is hunger and insecurity and where all values are subordinated to the profit motive.

Dear Disgusted, Respectable Female;

"Thank God," you cry, "that I am not a sophomore." To think that I should lose my treasured virginity if I were, and lower my ideals with but a shrug . . .

Do you think it would be possible, Disgusted Respectable, if we were to arrange a formal introduction, say, this time next year?

The coeds seem to be bitter. We have just finished perusing three rather nasty letters to the individual who calls himself the "Cavalier of the Streets". The Cavalier, I am sure, was simply expressing in a humorous fashion his thoughts on coeds. The humour, dear Virgins, was a humour of exaggeration.

Never have we seen so much defended virginity! To think that every girl on the campus is sheltered and pure gives us rather a severe blow. We had always thought that there might be some who didn't love the God of Virginity. There are some who make him their fetish, but their position is arbitrary, and therefore perfectly justifiable. More power to them.

But people who regard their particular set of values as the only set of values bug us. These impassioned retorts are all based on the values (or prejudices, call them what you will) of the writer. Surely these girls are a little bit skeptical. They see things from one point of view quite as much as the Cavalier does.

But we are being serious: this is dreadful. We'll end up haranguing the populace on the evils of university life, or passing laws prohibiting communication between the sexes until the age of 45. Or we'll burble away on the other side of the question.

Sex, sex, sex! Let's discuss politics, shall we?

Musicians

The Editor

I would like to point out to all music lovers, that last year there was no Share Band Competition. This left a definite gap in the cultural development of the students.

The Engineers' gift to music, the Lady Godiva Memorial Band, perennial winners of this contest (except the year Victoria cheated) are anxious to defend their title again this year. The trophy, the valuable old Share-o-varius violin has been carefully stored under a pile of old lab reports, and could again be awarded the victor.

Let's make the Band Competition an annual event.

CRITICS IN THE DARK

Pickwick Papers

Pickwick Papers, the film of the Charles Dickens novel, is at present playing at the newly-redecorated International Cinema. Perhaps it would be just as well if it weren't, as it may confuse a lot of well-meaning, high-minded people into the impression that the movies have finally come to something, contrary to all their predictions. Excellent entertainment though it is, Pickwick Papers is no more a film than the Statue of Liberty is an epic poem.

Despite a gallery of fine performances, and an excellent production, complete with all the details of the Dickensian nineteenth century (supervised by the Dickens Fellowship, I understand), and a fine, bedlam-like scene in Fleet Street Debtor's prison, this film could as well have been produced on a stage, with hardly more left out of the book than has already been removed. The events are literary in nature, developed in terms of dialogue, not in terms of action and implication, as would befit the film medium. The camera is rarely used as more than a recording device, instead of the probing, illuminating observer it should be. One of my pet peeves is the idea that the motion picture form is a sort of handy adjunct to the novel or the drama, with a similar nature and similar demands on its material. Material which is suited to one of those mediums may be quite unsuitable to another, and Pickwick Papers is a case in point.

Well, as I said before I started griping about the real nature of the film medium, and how this movie in no way measures up to its demands, Pickwick Papers is excellent entertainment. This is due solely to the fact that it contains a dozen or so masterly performances by a Who's Who of the English stage and screen. George Robey plays a tiny part as Tony Weller, Athene Seyler appears, Mary Merrill, the Hermiones Baddeley and Gingold, Joyce Grenfell in her traditional portrayal of an exalted games mistress (all right, you figure out how they worked that into Dickens!), Kathleen Harrison, Donald Wolfitt, and a dozen others. The best performance of the whole picture-gallery, to my mind, was Nigel Patrick's Mr. Jingle, a job of acting which proves this actor's great worth entirely, though he has rarely been cast in anything but light roles. Laboring under the greatest of obstacles, he makes a real person of the strolling actor who throws a monkey wrench into the Pickwick Club's sojourn at Dingley Dell. James Hayter, as Mr. Pickwick, and James Donald as Nathaniel Winkle, are only a short step below Mr. Patrick in calibre. I guess the only person they did leave out of the cast was Alister Sim.

Praising Caine

Herman Wouk won a Pulitzer Prize with his novel of The Caine Mutiny. Stanley Kramer's film adaptation ought to do as well with the movie awards.

Given the problem of bringing an outstanding best-seller, and a good work in spite of this, to the screen, the Stanley Kramer people have done their usual fine job. The novel has been trimmed to fit movie limitations but most of the original power is kept while the small sub-plots are cut away. Filmed in Technicolor, The Caine Mutiny, now at The Sheas is a pleasure to see, with a number of beautiful ocean shots, particularly a magnificent record of The Caine in the rage of a Typhoon.

It was during the Typhoon that the dramatic action hit its climax, as Steve Maryk, the Executive officer on The Caine, relieves Commander Queeg of his command, but I was too fascinated by the struggle between Caine and Typhoon to worry much about what was happening on the bridge among mere men. How Hollywood managed to stage so wonderful an action I can't understand.

Unfortunately, the movie's major deviation from the novel's pattern left The Caine Mutiny carrying some plot ballast. Whereas the novel grew from the life of Willie Keith, the Princeton boy prematurely cast into Life's rough current, and develops around his growth into manhood, The Caine Mutiny, on film, uses Willie as only an incidental character.

Parts of Willie Keith's life, scattered through the story, therefore, are somewhat detached from the movement and interest of the Mutiny. May Wynn, for example, looks suspiciously like a Hollywood attempt to work a woman into the deal somehow, instead of taking the important place in Willie's life allotted her in the book. Through the movie May Wynn does no great harm to the story, in fact she's very nice to look at and a little love is needed in this story of bitterness and intrigue, but when the picture is dragged on past what could have been an apt and perfect ending, to show what happens to Willie and May in their romantic difficulties, I got a little tired.

Contrary to some talk about miscasting in this movie, I was impressed with the playing of all the major characters. Humphrey Bogart was an excellent Queeg, neither hateful nor lovable—just interesting; Van Johnson's Steve Maryk proves him more than just a handsome bobby-sox idol, in fact a good man in his role; it was strange to see a nice fellow like Fred McMurray cast in the villain's part, but he was a wonderful rotter, though portrayed somewhat differently than Wouk's original Tom Keefer. Keefer, in the novel, was a man of ambition, ruthless in his means of gaining it, but the movie's Keefer is just a nice mixed-up sailor, who plots, not out of thirst for power, but from anger against Queeg for prohibiting him from working on his novel.

Best, by far, though, is the man who can do only right—Jose Ferrer. As Barney Greenwald, the Navy lawyer-flyer appointed to the defence of the mutineers, Maryk and Keith, Ferrer holds the screen alone. Even in the famous trial scene, speeded up as it is in the movie, he plays with a brilliant ease, a man doing a job he hates, yet doing it with precise skill. So good is Ferrer in the party-scene where he delivers his denunciation of Keefer's plottings that I felt it would have been the perfect place to end the movie, with everyone shuffling shamed from the room, following Greenwald leaving Keefer standing alone while Greenwald's drink drips down his cheeks and onto his tunic. Hollywood disagreed and skips thoughtlessly into a finale of the final resolution between May Wynn and Willie Keith. But this is a minor fault and is hardly noticeable in the whole of excellence that is The Caine Mutiny.

Gothic Garbage

BY C. H. WILLIAMS

A rash of building seems to have infected the already sickening sight across Hoskin Avenue at Trinity College. A new chapel which is disgusting and dishonest is stimulating cries of protest and horror from architects in the United States and Canada.

The new Trinity Chapel, like the rest of the College, is a product of sentimentality and ignorance. Outside of the hideous cathedrals of New York City, the Trinity Chapel will probably be the only piece of genuine hypocrisy built in the last six weeks. No expense has been spared to make the new chapel as phoney and unimaginative as possible.

The architect, Sir Giles Scott of England perpetrated his first crime against the human race when he designed and built the Liverpool Cathedral which is universally recognized as one of the most unimaginative, inorganic, piles of stone to ever desecrate the face of the earth.

Surely it is only reasonable for the architect to take the best materials he has at hand, and then apply available men and machinery to them to produce a building that is comfortable, useful, expressive and beautiful. Essentially, this is what the builders of the middle ages did as they developed the various stages of Gothic. They used stone, hammers, chisels, and comparatively crude equipment to express something they really felt.

Certainly the twentieth century with improvements in machinery and skills and a wider range of materials can produce buildings that are superior to Gothic in comfort, utility, and beauty. We also have architects, with ability and understanding.

Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Mies Van de Rohe, all leaders of the contemporary "schools" of architecture have many disciples in this country. Disciples who are capable of taking advantage of Canadian conditions and producing buildings that are certainly more at home than any of "perpendicular Gothic, Reformation-era-of-Edward IV-Gothic, or Elizabethan style at the time of the Protestant ascendancy of the Church of England."

building or wrecking?

This mass of scaffolding is not erected for engineers to perform acrobatics on, but is the basis of Trinity's latest contribution to the already large collection of decadent architecture on the campus. For some time people have been making nasty comments about Trinity being a holy mess. They may soon sing another song.

GAELS CAN UPSET

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

A little bit of knowledge is a dangerous thing. So the sage said and we're inclined to believe him. Feeling inquisitive the other day, we strode into the Athletic Office for a glance at the Intercollegiate Football Union's Constitution and the results actually set us thinking.

Last year, with McMaster in the league, a playoff between the first and second place teams was mandatory. However with the exodus of the Marauders the league has reverted to the old rule whereby the second place team must have defeated the first place team in order to force a playoff.

In view of the tie last week between the Blues and Western, the game against the Mustangs on November 6 becomes in effect a playoff. Assuming that both Western and Varsity will beat Queens' and McGill, the Blues must beat Western that day to win the title. Should Western win they will cop the championship, while another tie will cause a tie for first place and a sudden-death playoff. All this is without reckoning on the unknown quantity that is lying in wait for the Blues in Kingston tomorrow.

When the Blues do topple Western come the first week in November, they will have accomplished two fairly large chores. They will have all but won the Yates Cup for the first time since the fall of 1951, depending upon the following week's game with Queens' here. Should the Gaels win that game unending complications will follow. But besides the Intercollegiate title, the Blues will have won their first game in London since the fall of 1936.

One can readily see that Saturday's game shapes into a very important step towards the league title. This Queens' team have an awful lot of power hidden under those gold jerseys. Kocman, Stewart, and Schreider ran wild and almost at will last week when the Gaels trounced McGill 46-11. However, as Benny has said elsewhere on this page, the Blues should be able to hold the Tricolor down, and we'll go along with that.

We wonder while all this conjecture is flying about, if Life magazine could have taken all the factors into consideration when they decided to visit Kingston for a typical Canadian College football weekend.

Intercol Tennis Men's

Montreal, Oct. 14 (CUP) — The University of Montreal, favorites to take the Senior Intercollegiate Tennis tournament, continued their winning ways in the second day's play. The meet is being held in Montreal at McGill University.

The Carabins survived to-day's action without a loss, to run their skein to eighteen wins in two days. McGill University pulled ahead of the University of Toronto with eleven victories, while Toronto settled for ten. Ottawa College still trailed the other Universities with only one win from Wednesday's action.

Toronto's top doubles team of Ken Lawson and Rob Logie suffered defeat at the hands of McGill lost out to Montreal's ace, Page, 6-1, 6-2 while Logie dropped a match to Lamoureux of Montreal.

SECOND DAY'S RESULTS

Doubles—Messier and Page (M) over desMarais and desMarais (O) 6-0, 6-0; Chapman and Northy (McG) over Lawson and Logie (T) 6-4, 7-5; Arnold and Smith (T) over Valiquette and Baron (O) 6-3, 6-4; Carpenter and Semple (McG) over Bourgeois and desJardins (M) 6-1, 6-3; Bourgeois and desJardins (M) over Arnold and Smith (T) 6-1, 6-4; Carpenter and Semple (McG) over Valiquette and Baron (O) 6-2, 6-2.

Singles—Page (M) over Lawson (T) 6-1, 6-2; desJardins (M) over Cantin (O) 6-0, 6-2; Semple (McG) over Grove (T) 6-4, 6-0;

Messier (M) over Breber (McG) 4-6, 6-2, 6-3; Lamoureux (M) over Logie (T) 6-1, 6-2; Northy (McG) over desMarais (O) 6-1, 6-0; Arnold (T) over Carpenter (McG) 6-3, 6-4; Bourgeois (M) over Valiquette (O) 6-3, 6-4; Page (M) over Chapman (McG) 6-4, 7-5; Lawson (T) over desMarais (O) 6-0, 6-2; Arnold (T) over Valiquette (O) 6-2, 7-5.

Women's

The four winners of the women's interfaculty tennis meet left yesterday for McGill to battle with the rest of the intercollegiate teams for top honours.

From the 26 contestants in the interfac ranks, Di Walker, UC 4, Ann Kilgour, POT 2, Ann Manuel, SMC 3, and Ann Innis, UC 4, made the grade to the intercollegiate meet.

Matches will be started this morning and are scheduled to continue till Saturday afternoon.

Ann Innis is playing first singles, Di Walker, second singles, while Ann Kilgour and Ann Manuel battle in the doubles department.

Five universities are being represented at the annual event. Last year Toronto came out on top of the meet, followed by Queens, Mac, McGill and Western.

Of the foursome representing the U of T, Ann Manuel is the only new member. According to Ann Innis, head of tennis on the campus, Manuel is a very strong contestant so that the strength of the new squad should equal if not better that of the previous season.

Tyndall's Terrors Loaded Could Smash Blue Defence Lineup Packed With Veterans

BY MOISHE REITER

Too many people have already written off the Intercollegiate Football league as strictly a two-sided argument with Western and Varsity in the fight and the boys from Queen's and McGill along for the ride. That may be true about the Redmen from Montreal, but any move to forget about the Tricolour is, for fools. A team that can score 46 points in one game, no matter how weak the opposition, is powerful and despite Frank Tyndall's professed pessimism about a lack of depth in his Golden Gaels, Varsity will probably have a hard time in Kingston tomorrow.

Aside from the attraction of the big party, so big that Life has seen fit to cover it, planned for the weekend at Queen's, the football game is certain to be full of surprises. Both the Blues and the Gaels have troubles along the line and both have tremendous quality in the backfield. It's doubtful if there are any trickier runners in the Intercollegiate league than the Tricolour's Ron Stewart and Al Kocman, and with Gary Schreider at the full back spot there's plenty of speed and power in that lineup.

Of course Varsity has a good bunch to throw in against them tomorrow. I have yet to see an all-round match for Steve Oneschuk in this league, or for the driving knees of Phil Muntz scattering opposition tacklers. Then, too, the Gaels tacklers will have trouble catching up to Bob Pinkney once he breaks away, in stopping the runbacks of Ross Woods or the end sweeps of Al Riva, while Wally Mellor and Norm Dyson, Gaels quarterbacks, aren't likely to match up to either Bill Stevenson or Harry Wilson in passing or play-calling.

The big factor on both teams, though, is sure to be the front wall activity. Frank Tyndall is said to be very worried about his team in that section and likewise Varsity's Bob Masterson has an unknown quantity on his line. Back in the lineup for the game are Frank Palermo, a guard, who hasn't seen action since two years ago, and who is rated by some as the top guard in the Blue lineup. If Frank is able to avoid injury in the game he should be a big factor in patching the big holes that Western was marching through last Saturday. Also returned is a star of other years, Ray Yakasovitch, who will replace defensive centre John Bodrug. Though his left wrist is wrapped in a cast, guard Don Johnston is back in uniform and is likely to add strength there.

Kicking is one department where the Gaels are probably ahead of the Blues. Last year, down at Kingston it was the tremendous booting of Frank Geard that pulled the Tricolour out of trouble repeatedly and kept the Blues working their way back down-field. This year Steve Oneschuk is handling the kicking and is to be helped by Ross Woods, but it's doubtful that they can match Geard or Jocko Thompson. But then again maybe this year the Blue's new passing game can make up the difference.

If the Blues win they'll be in first place, tied with Western, if the Mustangs beat McGill.

Baby Blues Battle Queen's Saturday's Tilt At Stadium

With both Blues and Argos St. Lawrence loop, Queen's joins playing out of town this weekend Varsity's Baby Blues leap into the football limelight. Billed as the only football fixture in town this Saturday the Intermediates tackle Queen's Seconds at Varsity Stadium in a regular league game.

The clash will provide top football entertainment for the spectators. Students will be admitted with A.T.L. cards, while the general public will be charged $1.00. Although lacking some of the colour of the Senior games the Intermediates, with many future Blues in the line-up, provide spirited football.

This will be the first meeting between these two squads since 1951, when Varsity defeated Queen's in Kingston for the Canadian Intermediate Football title. Playing previously in the the league this year to replace O.A.C. Out to avenge their previous defeat the Kingston crew could well field a team, as indy Jynt, will probably be directing Gaels this season, capable of dumping the Baby Blues.

With many fine players at his disposal, coach Jack Kennedy will be forced to go without several of the boys to meet the roster limit. Fred Papsin, although showing well in practise, is understandably still a little rusty in signals and will sit this one out. Also running well but forced to miss this encounter will be John Tattle. Injuries in practise have half Don Brown and end Dan Nelson on the sidelines, Danny probably for the season. Freshman quarterback, Larry oynt, will probably be directing the Intermediate pass attack along with Stew Winter.

Skule Swamps Tigers Led by Larsen, Moulton

By MAX ROSENTHAL

In the first intramural football game of the season, last night, the powerful Engineers vindicated their press notices by completely submerging the University College squad, 27-0. The issue was never in doubt as the Engineer backfielders end, led by the excellent ball-handling and passing of their quarterback, Marv Larsen, stupefied the U.C. defence.

The score remained 1-0 for Skule until early in the second quarter when U.C. fumbled on its own 5-yard line, and lost the ball to Skule. Larsen pitched the ball to halfback Ron Lyons, who scooted around the end for Skule's first major. The convert was not good. In the dying moments of the first half, Larsen threw a flat pass to Bill Karpski who went over for the major. The convert was not good. At the end of the first half the score was Skule 11, U.C. 0.

In the third and fourth quarters, the virtual slaughter continued, as Jim Parke, Jim Moulton, and Ken Selby all scored for Skule. The final score was 27-0, obviously for Skule, who have now won nine in a row. The defending champions won all of their eight games last year.

Mural Bill

There were three games on tap yesterday in the soccer intramural league. Knox defeated Law 2-0 on goals by J. Yoes in the first half and C. Costerus in the second half. Forestry defeated Architecture 4-0 on goals by K. Karovich and Story scoring one goal each while Wynia netted two. The Sr. Med. team defeated the Jr. SPS team 5-0 as D. Shier scored two goals and G. Tucker, J. H. Ben and A. Teglas countered with one each.

In Intramural volleyball, Sr. UC took two games from a surprisingly weak St. Mike team 15-8 and 15-1.

In the only lacrosse game SPS 1 defeated VIC 1 9-7. D. Kearny and F. Wawrychuk scored all of the SPS goals, with the former scoring five and the latter four. G. Little and J. Tweddle scored three goals each.

Soccerites Meet Mac

Tomorrow at 11:30, at the Back Campus, Varsity Soccer teams will go into action against McMaster. The Blackwood Trophy winners, Senior Blues, should not have any trouble in downing their less experienced opponents. The Senior team last year, literally walked over their opponents, while winning the championship and without losing or tying a game scored 29 goals against 3 in 6 games.

Ernie Gacser, in the goal, veteran John Hubicki and newcomer Bill Sweeney on the defence should better last year's performance of only 5 goals against in 10 games. Ernie Ounpuu, Ron Williams and Bill Leach on the halfback line, can play both offensively and defensively with equal ability.

The strongest line, Rod Green, Ray Griffiths, Bill Webb, Jose Atucha, showed their ability last week by bashing in 7 goals.

Karl Tamberg and Mike Lethbridge will be missing tomorrow's games due to injury and illness. But the aid of Sal Liz is expected to make up for the loss.

The most improved team this year is the Baby Blues, who lost the championship to OAC in the '53 season. Goalkeeper, Amo Nittenberg is one of the reasons why the squad has picked up. The team also boasts a good defence and offence.

Trinity Scores Upset

Yesterday afternoon a fighting Trinity team took the field against last year's division champs, the St. Mike's Irish, and edged out a seven-six victory in the closing minutes of play.

The game opened with St. Mike's kicking to Trinity. Ollie Babirad, St. Mike's end booted a short low kick that bounced off the shins of a Trinity lineman and the Irish recovered. Working from their new spread formation they drove down to the Trinity thirty-five before they lost the ball on downs.

Trinity then took over and proceeded to move the ball in a series of off-tackle slants with fullback Jim Loucks carrying for a couple of big gains and a first down.

The game seesawed back and forth during the first quarter with no scoring threats. St. Mike's gained more on the ground than Trinity but were kept at bay by the tremendous punting of Pete Gordon. The Irish fumbled three times in the first half and produced only one sparkling play; a forty-yard gallop by Dick Kosterski on a tricky double reverse. The half ended shortly after Gordon got off another tremendous punt into the Irish end-zone for the point which gave Trinity a one-to-nothing lead at the half.

In the third quarter, St. Mike's began to move with Fusco, Kosterski and McGuigan tearing off big gains; but their attack bogged down after a series of penalties and two costly fumbles.

Trinity's quarterback, who had completed two out of three of his previous passes, hit Jerry Aziz at midfield with a thirty-yard pass; and Aziz raced down the sidelines to paydirt and a six-to-nothing lead for Trinity. The attempt to convert was unsuccessful.

The final quarter saw a change in the St. Mike's team. They played a much better brand of ball. Again it was the tailback Fusco and half McGuigan sweeping around the ends and off the tackles for four consecutive first downs. The Irish line blocked beautifully and Fusco charged over the Trinity right end from fifteen yards out for the major. Fusco carried again over the other end for the conversion and the score was tied six-six.

St. Mike's started another drive down field later in that period but lost the ball on downs after a holding penalty. Then, with a little better than a minute to go in the game, Gordon got off his best punt of the day on a Trinity third down. The kick carried a good sixty yards in the air and bounced up against U.C. The Double Blue failed to run the ball out of the end-zone, and Trinity went out front seven-six. The Irish drove down to the Trinity forty-yard line on fine runs by Kosterski and Fusco but lost the ball on downs and the Red and Black proceeded to run out the clock.

Although the Irish racked up eight first downs to Trinity's four, Trinity definitely had the better passing attack and a great kicker in Gordon.

Follow the Blue V Trail For Soup, Scenery, Fun

The Varsity, in order to meet the competition of the big time dailies, announces that a "V-Tour" will be held this coming Sunday. The Highways and Byways, northwest of Toronto, on the road to the Caledon Hills Farm, will be placarded with large blue "V" signs to mark out the Varsity trail.

The "V-Tour" route lies through the beautiful, scenic countryside of the Caledon Hills just north of Brampton. This Sunday, October 17, is open Sunday at the Caledon Hills Farm. The facilities of the Farm, operated by Hart House, will be open to all students, faculty, graduates, and friends of the University.

Soup and coffee will be served at the Farm for the price of fifty cents.

For the benefit of students who lack automobiles, buses will leave for the Farm from Hart House at 10:30 Sunday. They will return from the Farm at 5 P.M., and the bus fare is $1.75. Tickets are now on sale at the Graduate Secretary's office in Hart House, the SAC office, and the Engineering Society Stores.

For complete instructions as to the route to be followed, see the accompanying map. The scenery in the Caledon Hills district will be exceptionally beautiful this autumn Sunday.

Watch for the big blue "V" signs on the route to Caledon Hills. Remember the "V-tour" is this Sunday.

GOLDEN GAELS TOPPLE BLUES

By JOHN WILSON

A football team gets breaks in two ways; it either makes them for itself or it has them handed to it on a silver platter. It was a combination of both that gave Coach Frank Tindall his best birthday present in years last Saturday when the Golden Gaels whipped Varsity 20-0.

Queens' flashy halfback Ron Stewart and Gary Schreider, now running one-two in the league scoring race, punched holes in the Blue defence all afternoon as Stewart scored two of the Gaels' touchdowns. The Tricolor defence appeared to hold the vaunted Varsity attack when it was most needed, inside the Queens' twenty yard line.

Time and time again the Blues would march from deep in their own territory into the Gaels and, only to have their scoring chances smothered by an intercepted pass, a fumble, or a loss in the backfield. Most indicative of this was late in the third quarter when the Blues were already down 18-0. Starting at their own twenty after recovering a Queens' fumble, Varsity marched unhindered to the Gaels' twenty-one, rolling up five first downs, and four completed passes in five tries. Then little Al Kocman, one of Queens' standout pony backs, came out of nowhere to snag a pass meant for Don Smith at the Gaels' nine yard line.

The Blues almost broke Queens' back in the first quarter as they started to march only to lose the ball on a fumble at centre field. The Gaels drove to the Varsity five behind long runs by Stewart and Kocman, but the Blue line held on third down. Once again Varsity started out as Muntz and Oneschuk went to the forty-five in three plays, then Bill Surphlis intercepted Stevenson's pass and went to the Blue forty.

From here Queens drove in again and just after the opening of the second quarter, Stewart skirted the right end for his first major getting beautiful blocking. Schreider converted to make it 6-0 for Queens.

Receiving the kickoff, Varsity went to the Queens' three in nine plays, then Surphlis broke through to nail Pinkney on the

WUS Annual Conference Held Here Plans International In Scope

Coleman Outlines Program At Opening Session Friday

Delegates to the opening session of the World University Service's National Conference here last Friday, were told that the whole theme of the organization was based on international understanding.

Dr. John Coleman, the chairman of the Canadian Administrative Council of WUS and a mathematics professor here, gave the three-fold object of the association as:

1. Help by students in well-off countries to fellow-students in distressed lands.
 2. A concrete medium for the exchange of ideas among students in widely-scattered areas of the world.
 3. The promotion of understanding among students all over the world.
- Professor Coleman stressed the third object as of increasing importance. He stated that a system of international world seminars and expenses-paid tours for specially-chosen students was proving highly advantageous to Canadian students. But he added that much remained to be done.

WUS began at the end of World War I when a live-wire Dutch student organized assistance for about 200 destitute Vienna students, he said.

Close on the heels of this action, Dr. Coleman said, American students answered the call and by the end of World War II the organization had mushroomed into a gigantic international concern.

Dr. Coleman said that in the five-year period following World War II, the Canadian branch of WUS helped settle some 60 displaced European students in Canada.

"A few years ago we felt that we should do something to give our Canadian students some direct contact with students in other countries," Professor Coleman said. That "something" was the scholarship fund which send a group of Canadian students on overseas tours every other year.

On alternate years, he said, Canadian WUS delegates are sent to international seminars held often in overseas countries. Next year's seminar, Dr. Coleman said, would possibly be held in Japan.

Going abroad, Dr. Coleman said, was the best way for a Canadian student to really see

Residences Report Mysterious Thefts

A series of thefts have been reported by University residences.

Three thefts took place in the U.C. Men's Residence, on Saturday night between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 12:00 p.m. Bill Tepperman missed a clock-radio and Carl Riehms a club-bag and a pair of shoes. Both of them have rooms on the first floor, and had left their windows open.

Nelson Watson, whose room is on the third floor, had twenty dollars taken from his wallet while he was in the shower. He said that his door had been open.

St. Hilda's College, the Trinity College Women's Residence, has also reported a theft. Last Saturday, a total of eighty dollars was taken from several rooms on the second floor.

As yet there have been no new developments as to the identity of the author of these thefts.

NFCUS Explained

A National Federation

There has been a great deal of talk lately about NFCUS, and the question may well arise, "Just what is this NFCUS?" Since the Annual Conference opens today at Toronto, it might be a good idea to explain to the uninformed, what NFCUS actually is and does.

The National Federation of Canadian University Students was formed soon after the First World War when the need was felt for a union to represent the University Student body of the whole of Canada. The object is, to quote from its Constitution, "To promote in every way possible, a better understanding among all Canadian University students, a greater degree of co-operation and correlation among all Canadian Universities for the effective promotion of student interests and to provide a means for developing international relationships with students in other countries."

The membership of NFCUS includes eighteen universities across Canada. Every student at these universities is automatically a member of the organization, and contributes toward the operation of the national office in Ottawa. At Toronto, twenty cents comes out of the $5.00 all students pay into the Students' Administrative Council on enrollment.

National government of NFCUS is in the hands of Full-time National President Antonio Enriquez, a secretary-treasurer, and four vice-presidents, each representing one of four regions: the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and the West.

NFCUS has initiated several student services. The more successful of these include:

A Regional Exchange Project. A student at one university may study at another of a different region in his third year, with free tuition and exemption from student union fees. He then returns to take his degree at his own university.

A reduction in railway fares. Through the efforts of NFCUS, students returning home for Christmas pay only single-fare-and-a-quarter.

The Canadian University Press, CUP is a wire service for campus newspapers, making it possible for one paper to cover the news of other universities in Canada at a reduced cost.

A National Short Story Contest, to which students of all Canadian universities may submit entries.

A National Art Competition, in which all Canadian students enter paintings. Last year the competition was held at Toronto.

The Canadian University Debating Association, in which all Canadian universities may enter teams.

At present NFCUS is engaged in an educational service to promote the putting into effect of the recommendations of the Massey Report on Arts, Letters and Science. In connection with this, a survey is being made of the Entrance Scholarships offered at all Canadian universities, so that information will be readily available to all those graduating from high-school.

pressing problems

Leaders Address Annual Conference

"The first challenge for World University Service is world poverty," said Lewis Perinbam, Secretary of Canadian WUS, speaking Friday night to delegates at the WUS conference here. He emphasized the poor health and lack of food for students in Asia, and said that WUS tries to meet their needs. "WUS makes available funds, experience, and knowledge," he said, "and thus provides fellowship which gives Asian students courage."

Perinbam asked whether WUS, especially in Canada, was doing enough to fulfill its commitments and pointed out that the United States carries a large share of the WUS financial burden.

"Another challenge of WUS is to be an effective force in society beyond university." Students must understand other nations and their problems.

"Canada must realize its opportunity and responsibility in international affairs. People in other countries trust Canadians and have faith in them."

Perinbam stated that if Canada helps to build up other countries it will eventually benefit her. He concluded by saying: "Our prosperity in Asia will be your prosperity in Canada. Our future is your future." He emphasized that the main value of WUS is not materialistic, but is "the spiritual unity gained by sharing, and by thinking of what we can give, not what we can get."

Virendra Agarwale, from WUS in India, spoke next and said, "WUS is a movement rather than an organization." He also told the WUS delegates that only mutual understanding, which depends on mutual knowledge, can produce solidity and unity in the world and in WUS. He emphasized that "the human heart is essentially good."

Agarwale, referring especially to universities in India, stated that WUS assistance is not in itself sufficient, but the WUS spirit encourages the Indian government to contribute, and also gives the students much hope. He said, "the challenge for each member of WUS is to educate students about WUS, and the needs and problems of Asia."

Makoto Fujita, Secretary of WUS in Japan, said that WUS is small, but important. As an example he used the WUS Sanitarium in Japan. It is small, but provides an encouraging symbol for students. He hoped WUS, which is not a charity, would continue its great work, and do

U.B.C. Student Council Censures Campus Paper

VANCOUVER — (CUP) — U.B.C.'s Student council received a vote of confidence in their motion of censure against the campus paper The Ubysey at a special meeting on Thursday.

The motion was passed following a news story on discrimination in university fraternities which was entitled "For the information of rushees". The council objected to the "lack of good taste" in the way the story was printed.

much more than it does now.

After the speakers, reports were given by delegates who were sent last summer to WUS to such countries as Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Scandinavia, and the Gold Coast. Informally, and at times humorously, they gave their impressions of these countries and the students there.

Dick Underhill, president of U.B.C.'s student council said that he felt that the paper was campaigning against fraternities in general instead of working positively against discrimination.

The Ubysey's editors threatened to resign if the motion of censure were not rescinded, but later decided with the council that their position would not depend upon last Thursday's vote.

The motion which was tabled by Ubysey's Editor-in-chief, Peter Synowich reads as follows: "Whereas the Ubysey in its statement naming the fraternities with discriminatory constitutions in the way in which it did, in no way violated its obligations as a University newspaper;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Alma Mater Society rescind student Council's motion of censure against the Ubysey for the way in which it named the three Discriminatory fraternities."

The discussion of the motion turned on the inability of anyone to define "good taste". After a heated debate, the special meeting upheld the council's motion of censure by a voice vote. Dick Underhill estimated that 1800 of the total student body of 5700 were present to make up the quorum of 20 percent.

"Since only 600 UBC students belong to fraternities, it is evident that this the AMS motion was upheld by the general student body as well as by members of fraternities," said Underhill.

The Ubysey's editorial answer to the outcome reads as follows: "God was on the side of the biggest battalions. Still, we believe in God."

Remedial English Exam at UC

Almost 500 first-year students at University College struggled through a two-hour examination last Thursday, designed to trip them up on the intricacies of English composition.

The examination was broken into four parts. The first part called for simple definitions and examples to illustrate such punctuation devices as the comma, colon and semi-colon.

Question two required candidates to reduce to 100 words a rambling and somewhat unintelligible 400-word account about the meaning of rationalism.

The third question demanded an outline for a 1,200-word essay on, "Why I have chosen to Register in My Particular Course?"

The final obstacle called for the composition of the first three paragraphs of the essay.

An official of the English department said after the examination that results would be posted in the main rotunda of the college in about 10 days or two weeks' time.

Classic Professor Passes

Professor Emeritus Gilbert Norwood of the Classics Department died in his sleep Saturday morning. He had not been in good health for some time.

Prof. R. J. Getty said of his friend: "Professor Norwood was a scholar with an amazingly wide and intimate knowledge of the classics. With his vivid personality, liveliness in oration, ready wit and merry humour, and—above all—for the big-hearted generosity and friendliness in his nature, he will always be remembered as a brilliant teacher, a great scholar, and a loyal friend."

Professor Norwood was born in Sheffield, England in 1880. He received his BA and MA at Cambridge, being at first a scholar and then a Fellow. From 1908 to 1926 he was Professor of Greek at the University of Wales, which conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Literature. From 1928 to 1951, when he retired, Professor Norwood was head of the Classics department at the University of Toronto. During this period he became the first resident Canadian to be a Sather Professor of Classics at the University of California, and was visiting Professor of Greek at the University of Chicago. For a few years he was chairman of the Board of Syndics of Hart House Theatre, and he acted as judge at the University Drama Festival.

Professor Norwood wrote a large number of books, reviews, and articles, especially on Greek and Roman drama. He received a most unusual distinction on his 70th birthday and retirement: a book, Studies in Honour of Gilbert Norwood was published to commemorate his achievements.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frances Norwood, a member of the staff of the Department of Classics. The funeral will be held on Tuesday at 2:00 p.m.

President Sidney Smith paid tribute to this scholar: "As head of the classics department from 1926 to 1951 and as one of the great classical scholars of his generation, Professor Gilbert Norwood was a major figure in the life of this university and in the intellectual life of the whole nation."

"He was known and esteemed wherever classical literature was read and studied. His influence went beyond the area of school lectures. To many he was a witty and genial companion, a brilliant essayist, and a perceptive and lively critic of life and literature."

"He will be missed greatly by his academic colleagues here and throughout the world and by the many students he inspired."

Prof. Norwood

Masthead

There will be an extremely important meeting of The Varsity's extinguished-looking Masthead tomorrow at 1:10 p.m. All members of the Masthead are requested to attend —IN PERSON.

Beard Fondling Woman Usurps Male Position

"The present-day woman is engaged in satisfying her turbulent instincts or in driving man out of his time-honoured realms" was the conclusion reached by Professor Carpenter on the TV programme "The Battle of the Sexes", another in the series "Exploring Minds".

According to Professor Carpenter, the first invasion has taken place in the cigarette field. "Although her main motive was the emulation of the stereotype portly gentleman engulfed in reams of smoke, she also felt that smoke would discourage gnats and mosquitos," said Professor Carpenter. Men are starting to stop smoking with the result that tobacco companies are apparently contemplating manufacturing "perfumed cigarettes in various pastel shades for women."

Professor Carpenter next turned to women's clothing to show how they were gradually coming to dominate the field of fashions. He described the changes: "The evolution has been from eighteenth century lace to nineteenth century funeral black. In the 1920's women tried to look like twelve year old boys just entering the public period, in the 1930's like spindly marathon runners, in the 1940's like greasy construction workers, and in the 1950's like slopy bums in dirty white buckskins, old jeans, and filthy sweat-shirts."

Professor Carpenter concluded that woman was replacing man everywhere. He pointed out that they have become butchers, engineers, and wrestlers who "assume gorilla-like poses and fight like farm beasts in combat".

He also felt that women continually used men to achieve their own ends. He stated the men would prefer each sex to develop that which is essentially and differentially theirs: thus men could grow beards while women had long eyelashes and pink toenails.

One conclusion was that to women "the first marriage has spiritual sweetness", but that those following have "business-like qualities".

Seminar Examiner Colonial Living

The International Relations Club is holding a Seminar at Caledon Hills Farm this weekend, Oct. 23 and 24. The topic will be "Colonialism".

Commenting on this topic, IRC President, Tom Virany said, "I think that it will have to be narrowed down considerably to specific geographical areas, as the participants decide."

Virany said that they expect the students who won World University Service scholarships to lead the discussion, and that members of the staff in related fields will take part.

There is room, the president said, for twenty additional students to attend. They may leave for the Farm either Friday night or Saturday morning. Those wishing information are asked to call Nick Vitorovich at WA. 2-3936, or Tom Virany at BA. 1-7715.

My Dog Has Fleas

I never gave much thought to buying a pair of white buck shoes, but it seemed the next logical step after I learned to play the ukulele.

All the boys at the big Eastern colleges wear them. I saw them in a battered copy of Esquire I found at work last summer... Handsome ivy-covered fraternity houses, nostalgically strumming ivy-league songs on their ukuleles, as the harvest moon climbs slowly over the ivy-covered Library tower. — They were wearing white bucks.

I was jolted from my reveries by my boss who snatched the "Esquire" from my hand. "Get back to work," he snarled, "and make sure the urinals are clean this time."

DECISION MADE

But I didn't care what he said; that afternoon I scrubbed and shined with a will, singing as I worked. For I had decided that I, too, was going to own a pair of White Buck Shoes.

As soon as I had sold the hubcaps from the family car, I went downtown, and walked into a shoestore. Already I could see myself, walking hand in hand with my sorority sweetheart, down stately tree-shaded walks, swinging my tennis racket and scuffing the piles of dead leaves — with my new White Buck Shoes.

"I want a pair of white bucks," I said to the clerk.

"Hey, Larry," he shrieked, pointing his finger at me, "C'mere and see the kid what wants white buck shoes!!"

Larry came from the back of the store, swinging his hips and giggling. He passed one moistened finger over his eyebrow, winked at the other clerk, and motioned me over to a seat.

"Well, Liberace, what is your pleasure?" "I want a pair of white buck shoes," I said, averting my eyes. I wondered if those boys back East went through this every time they bought a pair of white bucks. Maybe they had them sent from the factory in plain wrappers.

Larry stopped his simpering, and strode into the rear of the store. In a moment he returned with a dusty box. "Here, put 'em on," he said. I put them on and turned to a mirror to view the effects. Six inches below my knees, my legs disappeared into a huge expanse of dazzling white. There was still room in those shoes for the previous occupants.

"They're a wee bit too big," I suggested shyly.

"Only pair we got," he said. "We don't get much call for them since Mulligan closed down the Castle Hotel."

"But I'm from the University," I protested.

"So was Mickey Jelke, kid. Now give me your money and scram. We got other customers."

I sauntered down the street undaunted, admiring myself in every store window. Of course, I didn't look exactly like those boys in Esquire, but then, they weren't wearing Caribou Brand bib overalls. Perhaps, if I got a pipe...

As I gazed at my reflected image, my eyes caught another pair of White Buck Shoes approaching me. A fellow sophisticate, I thought. With that instinctive camaraderie that distinguishes the true cosmopolitan from the common herd, I extended my hand in a gesture of well-bred welcome. I hoped he wouldn't notice my McGavin's Quarterback Club beanie.

"Hahvud?" I enquired casually, although he didn't really look like Harvard in his laven-suit. Yale, maybe.

"Listen, buddy," he snarled, "my girls are working this section of town. G'wan back to the Pent-house."

Giving my beanie a swipe with his switch knife, he sent me on my way. Doubt was beginning to enter my mind.

"SECLUSION" ...

But suddenly I realized where I belonged. I would go out to the University, and live MY kind of life, among MY kind of people, dwelling in scholarly seclusion, the casual, cloistered well-bred environment of West Point Grey, far removed from the coarse ugly life of downtown.

Ignoring a drunken tourist who breathed heavily on me and enquired about girls, I boarded a bus and assumed an air of aloofness to the snickers that followed me down the aisle. I even ignored the small boy who asked, in loud tones, "Why has that boy got girl's shoes on, Mommy?" "Shhh, dear, he's probably from University," she replied.

As I stepped off the bus the late afternoon sunlight slanted goldenly through the russet trees, casting long shadows on the close-cropped grass. White-haired professors doddered across the Mall... healthy young people strolled hand in hand, their diamond-encrusted fraternity pins sparkling... It was a world of peace, of quiet, and of order... mine.

"MONEY BACK?"

I wandered casually down the Mall, glorying in my new-found security.

Suddenly it happened: A mob of red-shirted boos descended on me, screaming, "Look it!! A real Joe College! Feed him to Spooky Annie!!!" I was seized roughly, and passed from hand to hand through a frenzied crowd. "Geetz!" they shrieked, "Dig those shoes he's got on, will ya?"

After a scholarly intonation of "Sic transit Fruit Boots" by a scholarly looking youth in a tweed jacket and a black gown, I was dumped unceremoniously into a large wooden tub, filled with water.

I dragged myself from the trough, amid shouts of laughter, and sloshed over to the nearby telephone booth.

"Hello, Boot Shop? ... I want a pair of good substantial British boots".

Inherent Strength

For many years the National Federation of Canadian University Students has been criticized for its relative inactivity and lack of strength.

Several universities have seriously questioned the value of retaining their connections with the organization.

However, it lies within the power of the delegates to this conference to establish a tone of action and positive unity.

We greatly fear that this will not be the case.

Judging from the recommendations handed down by the NFCUS president at last week's meeting of the SAC, we are bound to hear the same resolutions as have been passed for the last four years.

We believe that the idea of a national union is a sound one and that its need is paramount. We are not convinced that the NFCUS has in any way measured up to the inherent strength of its own organization.

Shouting and Tumult

We have finally discovered what is the trouble with our cheerleaders.

When we compare our girls and guys with those from other universities we are struck by two dissimilarities.

The first of these is that the majority of Toronto's cheers are too complicated either in wording or in accompanying gymnastics to catch the imagination of the crowd.

The second obvious difference is the apparel our cheerleaders wear. Many argue that the blue blazers give tone and distinction to the leaders.

However, it seems that tone and distinction are not what is wanted or needed. The cheerleaders job is to produce a howling mob. It is unlikely that this can be done while they are garbed in such formidable relics from St. Stephen's.

If cheering and colour are a necessary adjunct of the football game, and we are by no means convinced of that, then let us take the bull by the horns and go the limit.

An integral part of that process would be the dressing of the cheerleaders in the more appropriate sweaters and skirts.

THE EARTH

When earthly problems 'gin to touch my brain
On days when all of restless nature sleeps,
I cannot help but see the toll and strain
Of a civilization struggling in the deeps.

A civilization wondering at the stars—
That shine in distant space.
A civilization living 'hind great bars,
Huge giants, halting all the progress of a race.

All this goes on; yet few do look ahead,
Who see the possibilities and fret,
Lest that which builds a nation to its height,
Misused, turns light into a endless night!

massey scholarships

By BOB BROWN

Last year this campus saw a long and persistent campaign — chiefly under the auspices of the Toronto NFCUS Subcommittee — in favor of the establishment by the Federal Government of a national system of scholarships as recommended in the famed Massey Report. Although this proposal was given a generally sympathetic hearing by university officials, and widespread support from students all across Canada, Federal officials gave the NFCUS delegation presenting the proposals a very polite but firm brushoff.

This year it appears that the story will be repeated — the same fervent appeals for student signatures, the same series of conferences, reports, briefs, memorandums, — and the same brushoff.

Therefore, before we all get back on the merrygoround, it might be wise to examine this issue again and see why the scholarships proposal has been so persistently supported by students and so persistently neglected by Federal officials.

The reason for the nation-wide student support are not hard to find. For one thing, students are no more adverse to subsidization than wheat farmers, gold miners, or any other group in the nation. However, student enthusiasm for the Massey National Scholarship proposals go far deeper than this.

It is, I think, undeniably true that the high cost of present day higher education is keeping many potential students from attending university, to their own and their nation's detriment.

But why does the Federal Government turn such a deaf ear to the proposal to implement the plan of one of their own officials when the need for action is so urgent? The fact is that the Massey proposals and the subsequent UFCUS agitation in favor of their implementation have ignored many basic political realities in Canada today.

It may be that the NFCUS committee has felt that it can afford to ignore the fact that Education, as laid down in Canada's Constitution is a field for exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

But Federal politicians of any political party can hardly ignore the reality that Canada today in certain fields like education is not so much one country as 10 provinces or two cultures.

The Federal Government has already offered a form of relief to universities and thus indirectly to students in the present federal grants to Canadian Universities. Such relief amounts to roughly $100 a year per student on this campus. The Federal Government makes many and large grants for research in Universities and finances a plan for foreign scholastic training for Canadian students abroad.

The Federal Government has taken all these steps — and more — in a field that is reserved for the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

When one considers the trouble that these limited forms of federal assistance have already run into — especially in the province of Quebec — it is rather naive to expect the federal Government to proceed much farther in this direction.

As long as there is no popular support for the Massey-NFCUS proposals — and there isn't — and as long as there exists a great deal of opposition to further federal encroachment upon a field which constitutionally belongs to the provinces — and it does — then nothing is likely to be done at the federal level on the Massey Scholarship proposals.

This is not so much due to the evil machinations of politicians as it is to the political facts of life of a democracy. It might be suggested to the Toronto subcommittee dealing with the implementation of the Massey proposals that instead of attempting to besiege the Ottawa Government with their cries for aid, they might accomplish something more concrete if their publicity was put to a more practical use.

The committee might also investigate the possibility of an extension to existing Federal-Provincial student aid program — such as the Dominion Provincial Bursaries. Some study might also be given to the Facet of Federal Government contributions to University research programs, which are usually to cover only the direct cost of such a project.

Open Letter to Tony Enriquez

Dear Mr. Enriquez:

This past summer you headed a Canadian delegation to the International Union of Students (I.U.S.) council meeting in Moscow to investigate Associate Membership in the I.U.S. As was mentioned in your article (Varsity October 5, 1954) the NFCUS executive was mandated to investigate Associate Membership in the I.U.S. and the report of this investigation to be given at the 1954 NFCUS conference. As students interested in improved international student relations, we would like some points cleared up in regards to the investigation carried on by the Canadian delegation.

The I.U.S. in 1953 added to its constitution the following amendment re Associate Membership:

"Associate members shall be admitted, such members to be national union of students who within the limitation of their own constitutions accept limited obligations and in return receive certain rights of associate membership. These obligations and rights shall be determined by agreement between the I.U.S. Executive Committee and the organization concerned, and must be ratified by the I.U.S. Council."

This new membership clause allows for very broad agreements between NFCUS and I.U.S. As a result of this new clause three prominent western national student unions — the National Union of Students of England, Wales and Northern Ireland (N.U.S.), the Union of Israeli Students (U.I.S.) and the National Union of South African Students (N.U.A.S.) joined the I.U.S. as Associate members at the recent council meeting.

Can NFCUS stand by while many western student unions join I.U.S. and while the contacts between students of East and West are expanding? We think not. NFCUS can follow the example of the N.U.S. of England, Wales and Northern Ireland and join I.U.S. as an Associate Member.

Since NFCUS failed to reach agreement with the I.U.S. we would like several points cleared up:

- (1) What steps were taken by the Canadian delegation to work out a basis for Associate Membership?
- (2) What steps were taken to come to agreements with I.U.S. on questions of exchange, education, travel, culture and sports?
- (3) What blocked agreements between NFCUS and I.U.S. such as were achieved between tween I.U.S. and N.U.S., U.I.S. and N.U.A.S.?

We believe Canadian students must play an active role in cementing friendly relations between students of all countries. We feel that the best way to do this is that chosen by the N.U.S., that is, of co-operation with the I.U.S.

We hope you will give careful consideration to the points raised in this letter.

Yours sincerely,
M. A. Moscarello

MUSIC MUSIC MUSIC

ALL-BACH

A recital consisting entirely of works by John Sebastian Bach was presented on Saturday evening by the New Music Associates.

The programme opened with a Sonata for Violin and Piano, in C minor, played by Mr. Morry Kernerman and Mr. Gould. Mr. Kernerman showed a conscientious technique, but he could not measure up to the more powerful personality exhibited by Mr. Gould. Mr. Kernerman could have helped a good deal, however, if he had tried for the more finely focussed tone needed to do justice to the intensity of feeling discovered in Bach's chamber music, especially in the slow movements.

The three arias from the oratorios that followed were sung by Miss Maureen Forrester, a contralto from Montreal. She produces an intonation as flawless and controlled as one could wish, and has nearly achieved that technique of two selections: Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris from the B Minor Mass, and Beretto dich Zion from the Christmas Oratorio, were a shade lacking in warmth of personality, but this was clearly present in the 1st voice part from the St. Johns

SWISH POSTERS

Billboard advertising in this country sometimes seems to be nothing but a fanatical attempt to protect the scenery from the probing eyes of the public. However, the Swiss have managed to turn the monster of outdoor publicity into a useful and attractive beast, if we are to judge by the posters on display in the Lower Examination Hall of Convocation Hall this week.

AISLE SEAT

A Billboard, as we know it, big and aggressive, is a rare sight in Europe. The poster is their chief medium of outdoor advertising. These posters may be large (roughly three feet by four feet is standard), but even mass displays of them rarely approach the size of the average American Billboard. The size and shape of such posters is one, but not the only, advantage they possess over their North American counterpart. The whole spirit of poster design seems to be to attract and impress with striking and tasteful design, rather than to snatch and overwhelm with size and blazing colour.

The Swiss artist tends to use a "symbol" where our experience of commercial art might make us expect photographic representation. To take a random example, a Swiss artist called Herbert Loupin made a poster to advertise ink. He avoided the obvious charm of a picture of a bountifully inked movie star displaying the fact that she always used it, or of a photograph of the bottle in which the ink is sold. Diagonally across his poster he threw a simplified representation of a pen nib writing the brand name "Peba" with the blocked words "Encre Suisse" in the lower right hand corner. That is a simple example. There are many less austere, more fanciful modes evident among the posters displayed. However, most of the Swiss artists work with the knowledge of Mr. Henri Temianka's Friday night violin recital at the conservatory prevented us from enjoying a well-selected programme by his lack of interpretive discrimination. An otherwise accomplished violinist, he succumbs to his healthy vigour and sound technique in misconceiving music.

The sensual opulence of 19th century virtuosity did little justice to pre-classical violin works structurally unfitted to bear the sweep of undisciplined emotions. Yet it was Conelli's La Folia which stood up most successfully against Mr. Temianka's attacks. Far from being unaware of certain stylistic misinterpretations it escaped the relatively unbounded vigour and scope of this set of variations provided Mr. Temianka with a more or less suitable outlet.

Somewhat jaded by the overly liberal use of rubato in the unaccompanied Sonata in B minor, I looked forward with some hopeful anticipation to Bartok's "Six Roumanian Dances," in which this rhythmically expressive device can very well be put to use. But it was not long before we realized that Bartok's pulsating metric jaggedness had lost its outlines in Mr. Temianka's rosy drawing-room atmosphere.

Wieniawski's Scherzo Fantastique and Sarasate's Romance Andaluz, given as encores, did alone justice to Mr. Temianka's romantic virtuosity by permitting this warm-hearted violinist to give as much from his emotions as he pleased.

art, music and drama

Passion. The cello obbligato in this last aria was played by Mr. Isaac Mamott, who gave a performance entirely unworthy of him.

As superlatives cease to have any significance when used to an artist of Mr. Gould's stature, and as I cannot do justice to him without them, suffice it to say that his performance in no way failed to come up to the distinction that we have learned to expect from him in the last few years.

GEORGE LONDON

George London's concert at Eaton Auditorium last Thursday evening provided a particularly happy blend of the familiar and the unusual. At first he failed to establish the necessary quiet mood of longing and regret. Soon, however, both interpretive coldness and the hooded tone, which was so disturbingly evident in Mr. London's singing last season, disappeared.

The remaining leader were charmingly presented as simple love songs of which Ich trage meine Minne was especially delightful. Mr. London negotiated Strauss's murderous intervals with seemingly effortless accuracy and displayed a range of amazing extent and evenness. Perhaps the most refreshing aspect of his leader

lily must wilt in shame. That the Alumnæ Players tackled it is good proof of their optimism; that they failed is equally good proof that even Homer nods. The difference in cadence between dialogues on the values of irresponsibility and monologues on the rewards of virtue is less than I had always imagined. If his wicked characters had not preached as lengthily as his pure ones I should have supposed that Wilde wrote the play as an illustration of the dullness of virtue — as it is, I cannot think of any reason at all.

Leonard Grainford's direction obviously aimed at schooling his amateur cast in that polish and sparkle essential to the playing of High Comedy. But except for the splendour of his witty and elegant sets and decor, he was successful only in occasional lines which caught the spark of Wilde at his best. Otherwise his actors stood and moved in the most unexpected places at the most inappropriate times. The Party of The Good, so to speak, underplayed so vigorously as to emerge with the meekly protesting air of missionaries about to be eaten by cannibals, while the protagonists of fiendish Vice and Pleasure were so flamboyantly emphatic that one suspected a collective insecurity complex.

enter in the Ontario Drama Festival. When I saw it on Friday night the company was labouring under the disadvantage of several missing players, a circumstance which was no doubt partly responsible for the heavy-handed pacing and general lack of sprightliness. If the Norvock Players are able to tighten their production and catch more of the play's persuasive humour, they will be in a very happy position.

The performance most worthy of attention was Hugh Watson's Stage Manager, around whom the whole play revolves. In a part which might have been designed especially for him, Mr. Watson employed with great success his particularly winning smile and an air of mildly contrived bonhomie. Another quietly effective performance was turned in by Isabel Lawson as Mrs. Gibbs, the hard-working and contented small town wife, resigned to fate but never defeated by it. Their combination of competent acting and skilful handling of production make the Norvock Players a group worth visiting.

Woman of No Importance

I should think that whenever Oscar Wilde's "seldom performed comedy," a Woman of No Importance, appears on the stage, somewhere a

This past week has been a busy one for theatre in Toronto. I saw three plays by local amateur groups in three successive evenings. One of them was by way of being a warning for the unwary, but the others were previews of considerable promise.

MISS JULIE

Of the latter "Miss Julie," presented by the U.C. Players' Guild, is a production with which director Leon Major may well be pleased. Although inexperience declared its presence in pacing and style, Mr. Major has fashioned a very creditable show from the unimpeachable material of an undergraduate company, considerably assisted by the technical smoothness of Liz Mariani's costumes and Milton Barne's music. Although I must agree to disagree with Les Lawrence's interpretation of Jean the valet as a boor with only two registers of expression, the sneer and the shout, it was a legitimate one. Charlotte Holmes as the cook, although a trifle unconvincing and unconvincing throughout the play, gave hints of firmer characterization in her piously light-lipped delivery of the "simple faith" speech. Charlotte Schreager's Miss Julie, lacking in depth as yet, nevertheless achieved an excellent balance between the imperious aristocrat and the flirtatious female.

OUR TOWN

My other looking into the future was prompted by the Norvock Players in Thornton Wilder's "Our Town," the play which director W. S. Milne will

INTERMEDIATES TRIP QUEEN'S 17-7

Speaking ^{1/2} OF SPORT

By MOISHE REITER

There will be no attempt made to replay Saturday's Queen's-Varsity game in this column. Grandstand quarter-backing is too easy to be interesting and, as pointed out elsewhere on this page, there was nothing solid to blame for Varsity's defeat. It should be mentioned though that Saturday's game was only the second of a scheduled six and that the Blues are still very much in the competition.

Still Defending Champions

... are the Varsity Track and Field Men, who must be favoured to repeat for honours this coming Wednesday when the Intercollegiate Meet comes up in Varsity Stadium. Last year the Blue runners went down to McGill, supposedly just for the ride, and ended up well ahead of the opposition. Then, it was largely on the efforts of Norm Williams, Dick Harding and Bill Hamilton that Varsity won out, and for this Meet all of those stars are back.

At Toronto only once every fourth year, the Intercollegiate Meet is our first chance this year to see Varsity win a championship. In fact, it will be a double opportunity, because the Blue Intermediates, also defending champs, go in their meet, concurrent with the Seniors.

The running and other activities start at 1:00 Wednesday in the Stadium. Interested persons, and there will be plenty of us, had better turn out on time.

The fact that the Blue and White Band and Cheerleaders will be out should make this a real attraction. Wonder what wondrous spirit-rousing deals the Blue and White Society has planned for this Meet?

QUEEN'S STAR HALFBACK Ron Stewart, puts in his effort on defence, tackled Varsity's George Stulac. Brian Wherrett is in the background. Stulac had just caught a pass on the Queen's twenty-one yard line late in the third quarter.

eleven. An incomplete pass and Queens took over and promptly caught the Blue backs asleep as Jock Thompson quick-kicked sixty-eight yards to the Blue thirty-three.

Two plays later Oneschuk fumbled and Queens took over at their fifty. Quarterback Wally Mellor threw the game wide open with a pass to Stewart at the Blue thirty-five and the mighty mite went all the way for his second TD. Schneider again converted and the Gaels led 12-0. Varsity had hardly begun another drive from the kickoff when Tiny McMahan intercepted a Wilson pass in the flat and raced twenty-five yards for the last major, while Schneider again converted.

The Blues began to assert themselves in the third frame, but the Gaels' linemen tackled hard and broke into the backfield constantly to squash the Varsity threat. Another interception early in the fourth quarter set Jock Thompson up for his second single of the season, then with less than three minutes remaining, the Gaels issued their final slap in the face as Schneider attempted a field goal from forty yards out. The kick was wide and Riva conceded a single to end the scoring.

Bob Pinkney and Phil Muntz starred in the Blues' losing cause, while spunky Al Riva snagged several passes and showed extra drive running back kicks. Don Johnston playing with his permanent cast stood out on the Blue defensive line, helping to keep Stewart and Schneider at a minimum.

Stewart was the individual star of the game, and perhaps can be rated among the best runners in the Intercollegiate Union this season. Gael captain Jack Cook was a driving force on the scrappy Queens' wingline, and was in on nearly every tackle. All the Gaels' defensive halves were good. As Surpliss put it after the game, "We just watched number 91 and number 81."

BABY BLUES UPHOLD VARSITY

by FRED GRAY

While the Seniors were receiving their trouncing in behind at half time to top Queen's Seconds here at Varsity to win 17-7.

Queen's opened the scoring after three minutes of the son's kick. Queen's continued to hold Varsity deep in their ing another route to their score.

Varsity broke into scoring position after defensive ends Dick Risk and Al Vaichulis had thrown the Queen's passer for a total loss of 20 yards on two downs. On third down the Queen's kicker fumbled and John Long fell on the ball for Varsity deep in Queen's territory. Held on two plays the Blues sent Al Wong racing down the sidelines from a kick formation on third down to carry play to the Queen's 17 yard line. The Kingston, Varsity's Intermediates were forced to come from Stadium. Trailing 7-5 at the half, the Baby Blues drove back first quarter when Al Wong was rouged by Clark on Simpson end and only a fine run by Wong prevented Queen's add-the defenders for the touchdown. The convert attempt was no good. With Skene and McDermint doing the bulk of the carrying, Queen's again drove Varsity back. Stopped once on pass interception by Pete Polecrome, the invaders notched their T.D. when Al Wong fumbled and the ball was recovered for Queen's on Varsity's 7. Two plays later Bob McDermint galloped around left end for the score. Cranston's convert attempt was good at half.

The Blues pulled ahead late in the third quarter. Cranston, playing a strong game for Queen's at quarter, fumbled when hit by a charging Toronto defensive line and the Blues gained possession. Don Bagworth, Joe Whitmore, and Dave Cresswell combined some great running to roll 40 yards for the score, with Whitmore crossing for the major. The convert attempt by Larry Joynt was good: Late in the quarter another Varsity T.D. was nullified by an interference penalty. Polecrome broke through to block a Queen's kick which Risk dropped on behind the line, but the play was called back and Queen's retained possession on their 10.

In the final quarter the Blues defensive line led by Izzy Pastushak and Walt Schmida held Queen's at bay until a recovered Queen's fumble on their 25 started the Seconds on their final touchdown march. Jack Rogers moved the Blues into scoring position on the 6 and Joe Whitmore scored for his second of the afternoon. Joynt converted again. Queen's final drive of the game was halted by Al Wong recovering a Queen's fumble and carrying back to the Queen's 45.

Scoring their second victory in as many games, Wong, Rogers, Whitmore, and Cresswell all showed well in the backfield. Pete Polecrome at center line-backer was a standout with two interceptions and a blocked kick to his credit. Cranston, Skene, and Dagenais were the pick of the losers. Lost to the Baby Blues for some time will be Bill McKenna, hard playing guard, who suffered a shoulder separation.

Mustangs Win Stand Second

Western Mustangs kept strong hold on second place in the Intercollegiate Football standings with a 25-6 victory over the McGill Redmen in London last Saturday. The weak Redmen, currently deep in the league cellar, one point back of the Varsity Blues, showed no power against the high-riding Mustangs.

The Redmen tried hard in the first quarter and managed to hold the Western team to a 6-6 standoff at the end of that frame, but two Mustang majors in the third period nullified the McGill efforts and another added late in the final quarter sailed the victory well away.

Fracas was top man of the day with two majors and four converts while Girvin and Simmons added one more apiece. O'Quinn scored the only McGill points.

Revealing Statistics

While Queen's won a football game on Saturday by a fairly lopsided score, the truth of the matter may be seen when the game statistics are examined.

The Blues were much superior in the yards gained rushing department, and rolled up three times as many first downs as the Golden Gaels. Thus we support our contention that the breaks at the wrong time went a long way towards a Queens' victory.

Phil Muntz was the best ground gainer for the Blues, carrying the ball thirteen times for 87 yards. He was closely followed by Bob Pinkney.

In the kicking department, the Blues are way behind, and this also has a lot to do with the outcome of the game.

Team mates look on as hard running half-back Dave Skene is hauled down by a Varsity tackler. Skene was the best of the Queen's backs on Saturday making many fine gains for the losers. Doing the tackling honors is the Baby Blues' fighting guard Walt Jaremo. Bearing in from behind to lend a helping hand is defensive end Al Vaichulis with his opposite end, Dick Risk, still on his feet in the background. Risk and Vaichulis combined to give the Queen's backs and passers a rough afternoon with their driving defensive work.

FLO MIDDLETON

While the Blues were coming out on the short end of the score in Kingston, the Varsity female tennis squad was sweeping away all opposition in masterly form at McGill over the week-end. In weather that was ideal for fans of the tennis courts, Toronto smeared the opponents from McGill, Queens, Western, McMaster by winning eleven of the twelve matches.

The teams from the various universities played each other all day Friday and again on Saturday morning in a round-robin tournament with total points to count. Toronto's only defeat was in the first singles when Varsity's Ann Innis, UC IV, bowed to Gloria Stanford of McMaster, 6-2, 6-2. This McMaster lass was the star of the tournament as she eliminated all opposition with her outstanding playing; however, from here on in Toronto was in command on the courts. McGill was the only college that gave the Blues any trouble and this was only in the second singles and in the doubles where the players were forced to play three sets.

In the second singles, DI Walker, UC IV, won all her sets, while the remaining half of the Blue and White quartet, Ann Manuel, III St. Mike's and Ann Kijore, II Pot were coming out on top in the doubles play. Reversing Toronto's only loss, this twosome handed McMaster a 6-1, 6-1, shellacking in the doubles play.

Rugger Blues Top Nomads Meet McGill Next Saturday

A new and more forceful brand of play by the three-quarter line of Varsity's rugger Blues helped the team to an 11-3 victory over Toronto Nomads II

Saturday. With the back camp surprisingly firm, considering previous weather conditions, the ball was just heavy enough and not too slippery for rapid-passing plays, and the three broke through often with considerable effect.

As regular hooker Kelly was unable to fill his usual key position in the scrum, it was well on in the first half before Blues settled down and managed to heel the ball out cleanly. At half-time, the score was Nomads 3, Blues, no score. Nomads having connected with a penalty kick.

In the second half, an improved scrum started to give scrum-half Campbell a few chances, after he had been making his own for the first part of the game. Berger made the first try neatly between perinbam reports success of international council

Lewis Perinbam, in his report on the World University Service International Conference, in Oxford, England, said that WUS has achieved success in last year's programme, in that it has become even more truly world wide than before.

Six Canadian students and three professors represented Canada at this assembly. More than twenty-nine other countries were represented by 200 delegates.

The projected programme for 1954-55 includes supplying Medical Scholarships to African students attending University of West Africa. This relationship with West Africa has just sprung up and it is hoped the next seminar will be held there. Canadian students may be able to go on a study tour of West Africa this summer. A summer seminar in Japan, to which Canada may send 20 student delegates and five staff members, and a study tour of the Caribbean for Canadian delegates has also been planned.

In the report of the Administrative Committee, the distribution of the $10,900 raised by WUS was outlined. The University of Delhi Health Centre — the major project — received $5000. The remainder was used to further the National Scholarship Plan, and to provide study tours. Of the 14 scholarships available, nine have been utilized by U of Alberta.

UBC, U of Saskatchewan, U of T, and Western. Here at the U of T we have a student from India, taking electrical engineering; he was sponsored last year and is now self-supporting.

In the Middle East, WUS hopes to furnish housing units in Egypt and Israel, and assist in establishing a student TB sanatorium in Istanbul, Turkey. Their activity also extends to the Far East and South-East Asia as well.

Closing his address, Perinbam said: "The conviction has grown deeper that the survival of humanity is at stake, and the universities are involved in that struggle for survival. In this struggle, we in Canada cannot remain isolated or uncommitted; and if we fail to face this challenge of human survival there will be no world and no tomorrow."

West Indians To Hold Meeting

In recent years there has been an increasing number of West Indian Students on the campus of the University of Toronto, said Egbert Tertulien, IV St. Mike's. "In the light of this increase," said Tertulien, "West Indian Students decided to revive the old West Indian Students Association."

"For several years," continued Tertulien who is a member of the organizing committee, "an organization has flourished at McGill and more recently at Sir George William College in Montreal."

"An invitation is extended to all West Indian Students and others from the Caribbean area to attend a meeting to be held on Monday October 18 in Room 115 in the basement of University College."

Student Employees Discussed On Radio

During the week of October 17, the radio series Canada at Work, will deal with the qualities which Canadian employers look for when hiring university graduates. Alex Gibson of the National Employment Service, suggested that the broadcast should be of value to Toronto students.

CKEY and CKFH will carry the programmes in Toronto. Canada at Work will be on CKEY at either 9.45 p.m. or 10.45 Sunday; on CKFH the program will be held at 9.15 Monday.

Stadium Scene Of Track Meet Wednesday

Varsity stadium is now the scene of feverish activity, as last minute preparations are made for the coming Intercollegiate Track meet. This will be the first time in four years that the annual classic has been held in Toronto, and also this year, Varsity is defending both the Senior and Intermediate titles. Thus an excellent opportunity is presented for every student to view both the Varsity teams.

At present every effort is being made to make this the most successful meet that the University of Toronto has ever held. It is expected that both the Band and the cheerleaders will be present to provide diversion between events.

Both teams are rated as heavy favourites to retain their championship titles, since a very high percentage of last year's athletes have returned, and an exceptional number of freshmen have turned out. All these teams need is support. The success of the meet depends on the size of the crowd. Coaches Hal Brown and Don McEwen both have stressed this need for student interest in the teams.

The meets will be run concurrently, starting at 1:00 p.m. Wednesday, October 20. Come out and support your teams.

Tony Enriquez

NFCUS Profile

To most people NFCUS means another set of odd initials or a proposed fee increase. To Tony Enriquez, its national president, it has meant a year of cross-country and continent jaunts, attacks by embittered editors and hard work, but it has still been "a great experience."

Antonio Enriquez was born in Mexico City, and came to Canada in 1946 for his first two years of high school, to learn French. In 1949 he returned to Mexico and spent the year as a sergeant in the Mexican army. (This compulsory military training must have come in handy in dealing with recalcitrant NFCUS members.) He returned to Ottawa, enrolled in Business Administration at the University there, and began his NFCUS career. At Ottawa he was chairman, and then Vice-President for the Ontario region of NFCUS. Last year at the McGill conference in October, he was elected to the national presidency, which necessitated his withdrawal from university for the year. It was a nine months job, but Tony generously spent two weeks extra.

He spent three and a half months speaking at the twenty-three member universities across Canada at COSEC in Istanbul, meetings. Enriquez represented Canada at COSEC in Istanbul, which is "some city," and this summer went to the IUS conference in Moscow.

Enriquez was most impressed in Europe by the tremendous prestige which Canada has abroad, both politically and in student life. He found that the students of other nations greatly appreciated both material aid such as Share, and moral support.

Despite all this activity, Enriquez' enthusiasm for NFCUS seems unimpaired. "You get criticized from all sides, but on the whole the majority of Student Council Presidents and editors have given extremely good support and co-operation," he said.

His job completed this week at the NFCUS conference being held in Toronto, Enriquez will have time to study, play some football, basketball and his favourite sport of swimming. He will have a chance to debate and perhaps work on the Ottawa paper, "The Fulcrum."

After graduation this year, there is a possibility of a scholarship in Harvard in Business Administration, for Enriquez, and then back to Mexico to enter business. He hopes eventually to go into politics, and to help organize a sorely-needed students' organization in the land of tequila.

NFCUS Timetable

The rest of the week will be taken up with committee meetings.

Social Work Has Series On Penal Treatment Topic

"Trends in the Treatment of the Offender", will be the title of an evening extension course offered by the University of Toronto Social Work, it has been announced.

Coordinated by Stuart K. Jaffary, Professor of Social Work, the series will start on October 18 and continue until December 20. Among topics for consideration are "Penal Reform in Canada", "The Alcoholic Offender and his Treatment", and "Rehabilitation, a Key Point in Treatment". The rest of the topics, ten in all, cover the judicial and penal systems, rehabilitation, and parole.

On December 20, the topic will be "The University and Penal Reform", the speaker to be J. A. Edmison, Q.C. Assistant to the Principal, Queen's University. At this session a Memorial to Miss Agnes McPhail will be presented.

The course will take place in the auditorium of the School of Nursing, 50 St. George St. from 7.30 to 9.30 on the above-mentioned dates.

Michener Speaks to WUS Delegates Assesses Value of United Nations

Possibility of world disarmament was viewed optimistically here on Saturday by Toronto's Member of Parliament Roland Michener, a special Canadian observer to the ninth General Assembly of the United Nations in New York.

Mr. Michener was addressing a banquet attended by some seventy-five delegates of the World University Service who convened here over the week-end. The three-day conference opened Friday and wound up yesterday.

The Progressive-Conservative member for St. Paul's riding said that he thought recent overtures concerning disarmament talk emanating from behind the Iron Curtain were "More significant than some Western skeptics are willing to concede."

being faced by the U.N. to-day could best be followed by budgeting two years ahead instead of one.

One of the criticisms Mr. Michener had of the U.N. was its division into blocs or groups of nations, such as the North Atlantic Treaty Organizations, the South American countries, and the Soviet bloc. These tended to split and break up the Assembly, he said, causing "recriminations . . . (and) stirring up animosities which should not exist."

Moreover, he said, the U.N. was being by-passed on several important issues. Among them was the question of re-arming West Germany, and the ticklish Trieste matter, which have been dealt with by special bodies outside the jurisdiction of the U.N. Such practice, he said, often made people question the worth of the United Nations.

D. R. Michener, M.P.

Mr. Michener is one of six Canadian observers in attendance at the sixty-nation U.N. Assembly. He pointed out that although last summer the Russians had turned down a plan for the abolition of atomic weapons, Moscow had recently about-faced on the issue, and had agreed to use the plan as a basis for further discussion on world disarmament.

"We have tended to become skeptical of anything emerging from the East," Mr. Michener said. "But, ostensibly at least, they seem to have had a change of heart."

The Tory M.P. pointed out, however, that the move could be a diplomatic smoke-screen to obscure issues in Germany and the rest of Europe.

Mr. Michener was discussing favorable and less favorable features as he saw them at Lake Placid. He spoke of the U.N.'s $44-million a year budget as "unrealistic". It was unrealistic, he said, because the U.N. has no money except that contributed by member nations. He thought that some of the financial problems

Serve Settlement By Swimming

Jimmy X — doesn't want to swim Lake Ontario or compete with Marilyn Bell. He just wants to learn how to swim. The University Settlement has made arrangements for the use of a pool, but desperately needs swimming coaches from their university to teach Jimmy and one hundred other children from a crowded downtown area, the dogpaddle.

If water makes you seasick, don't be discouraged. Perhaps you're fond of woodworking, or like children. The Settlement has openings for assistants in all branches of its varied program. Painting, sports, and music from the Nursery School Level to the Golden Age group, are some of the many activities.

The Settlement, which was founded as the University's own social service agency, by Sir Robert Falconer in 1910, is still administered by University faculty and the representatives of University organizations.

Students enrolled in Psychology 2b, spend some time there every week, but the best workers are those who volunteer, because they feel they want to do it. The only requirements are that you like people. If you have a special skill, this is a chance to pass it on.

Give up that extra cup of coffee in the Arbor Room, and spend the dime to call Mr. David Critchley at Empire-8-4335, to donate some time to a worthwhile cause.

Debate On Duplessis

Tonight at 8:00 P.M. in Alumni Hall the Victoria College Debating Parliament will open another season with the topic, "Resolved that this House upholds Duplessis". Debaters will be John Douglas, Don Cock, Pauline Sprague and Jim Carter. Speaker will be Ron Price.

Speaking for the government, John Douglas said, "Whatever one may think of his methods in his opposition to the swollen dictatorship of the Ottawa Premier Duplessis is Canada's truest democrat, and our best guarantee of future provincial freedom from St. Laurent's crushing bureaucracy".

Speaking for the opposition,

Pauline Sprague said, "I consider Duplessis a dangerous centrifugal force, dwelling upon diversity to the detriment of that unity so vital to our federal system."

WUS Conference Closes Discuss Budget For Year

At the final session of the World University Service Conference, held in the debates room of Hart House on Sunday, the Health Centre at the University of Patna, India, was adopted as the major project for this year. It was decided that 40 per cent of all funds raised in Canada for the International Program be earmarked this project, which will provide, along with proper medical care, adequate housing and nutrition for the University's 10,000 students.

The budget for the year 1953-54 was adopted, and the basic methods of fund raising were discussed. One of these in Toronto's "Student's Help to Asian Relief and Education" Campaign, which will be held next week. WUSC's goal this year is $20 thousand, which is an average of fifty cents per student. It was recommended that local WUS committee invite travelling secretaries to visit their campus a few days prior to the Fund Raising campaign, to stimulate interest.

The Treasure Van sale was approved by the Assembly, and it was decided that the sale would be held on campus whenever possible, instead of in the city itself. The election of the administrative committee for the coming year was held, and later Doug Hamlin and Lewis Perinbam were elected representatives to the National Federation of Canadian Students.

SHARE Meeting Plans Campaign

The first meeting of the canvassers for SHARE was held Thursday night. Louis Perinbam, in his address outlined the function of SHARE, Students' Help to Asian Relief and Education, in the World University Services organization.

Mr. Perinbam particularly stressed the necessity of relief in India. The SHARE project this year will largely be to establish a Health Centre in Patna, a university city in India.

To date, SHARE has collected close to $300 from parking cars at the football game, said Barry Cooke, chairman for this year. "Preparations are being made for a monstrous banquet; a prominent speaker is expected," he added.

Tickets for the banquet will go on sale by next Thursday in Hart House and the SAC offices.

The SHARE objective this year will be in the neighbourhood of $5000, less than 50c per student. A large percentage of this will be devoted to Patna, where 85% of the students are — by our standards — in bad need of medical attention, said Mr. Perinbam.

hurricane disaster

student fund launched

Students at the University of Toronto were being urged today to swing behind their own flood-disaster campaign.

As the Toronto area death toll threatened to climb over 90 and damage to run over $10 millions in this worst calamity in the city's history, University President Sidney Smith authorized a special flood-relief campaign.

The fund will be in the hands of the Students' Administrative Council.

Donations will be accepted from the University's 10,000 students immediately at the SAC Office in the Old Observatory. Total objective: At least $3,000.

"We hope to more than equal the $2,634.67 turned in by the students two years ago for the Holland and Great Britain flood relief campaigns," E. A. MacDonald, the SAC Secretary-treasurer said.

"The campaign is for everyone at the university," he added, "students and staff alike."

Hardly had the official fund been announced yesterday afternoon than students of University College handed in the first donation—almost $20.00.

Meanwhile, as rescue-workers in the inundated disaster areas started into their fifth day of finding the dead and rescuing the injured, urgent pleas are being voiced for student assistance to help with the clean-up.

From the Student Christian Movement came news that student work-parties are being formed to lend assistance.

Volunteers were asked to get in touch with the SCM office immediately at WA. 3-9727, or the University College Literary office.

"If you have a car or truck," said an SCM official, "please say whether you will use it to transport workers to the scene. Volunteers should wear knee-length rubber boots and old clothing and must be ready to leave on short notice. Transportation will be arranged."

Said the SAC's President, Bill Angus: "This a very worthwhile endeavour which deserves student support as a moral responsibility in time of need."

Hurricane Hazel swept in violently from the Atlantic Ocean last Thursday, lashing the US eastern seaboard causing widespread damage but little loss of life.

On Friday, the faded-out tail of the hurricane slipped over Lake Ontario and handed Toronto its most vicious swipe. The toll of lives was greater—to say nothing of the damage—than that handed out in its whole trail across the US.

Worst hit was the once agriculturally-prolific Holland Marsh area, which suffered an estimated $10 millions damage, had 3,000 of its homes destroyed, 7,000 acres of land inundated by ravaging flood-waters. The Marsh, now a deep new inland lake, had taken hard-laboring Netherlands, who emigrated from Holland, some 25 years to cultivate. It was undone in a night's storm.

Volunteers

At least 20 student volunteers are needed at the University Avenue Armouries today anytime after 8 a.m., the Salvation Army, in charge of flood-disaster work at the armouries, said late last night. Volunteers — men or women — should go directly to the armouries any time they are free during the day. Some will be engaged to answer telephones, others to pack clothing being rushed to the disaster area.

Anderson Leading Canadian Chessman

Canadian chess masters, paced by Frank Anderson, II arts, placed among the top six teams in the world chess olympics, recently concluded in Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

Anderson and his fellow Canadians ranked second behind Switzerland in Group II of the 26-nation, three-week tournament. In Group I, Russia came first followed by Argentina and Yugoslavia.

Highlight of the visit, marked by a whirlwind succession of tours, night club visits and a formal reception by the Mayor of Amsterdam, was a mammoth seven-hour banquet for all contestants the final night.

Student chess master Anderson gained national prominence in Canada last February when he took on Russian grand master Igor Bondarevsky in an international telegraphic exhibition. Anderson carried Bondarevsky to 41 moves before conceding defeat.

Montreal Quits NFCUS In Unexpected Move "Impractical... No Value"

The University of Montreal withdrew suddenly yesterday from the National Federation of Canadian University students.

The unexpected move was made at yesterday's opening session of a scheduled week-long national convention of NFCUS here.

Claude Dupre, representing the University of Montreal's 2,400 students broke the news and then left promptly to board a train back to the Quebec metropolis.

The move dropped the total number of Canadian universities in NFCUS to 21.

But at the same time, two other Canadian colleges were knocking on the NFCUS door. Late yesterday afternoon Windsor, Ontario's Assumption College and New Brunswick's Saint Francis Xavier University were officially admitted.

The number of Universities in NFCUS was bolstered to 23 with a student enrollment of 41,300.

First inkling of the University of Montreal's intention to pull out came when NFCUS President Tony Enriquez was handed a telegram from U. of M.'s student Council.

The wire announced that representative Dupre would arrive in Toronto for the opening of the NFCUS convention and leave the same night. Dupre's announcement was spoken in French. It had to be translated to the convention's English-speaking delegates.

He said the University of Montreal had decided to secede from NFCUS because it found the program and activity of the organization "impractical" and "of no value". He said his university felt compelled to observe the actions of this year's congress and to decide on that basis, whether to re-join next year.

President Enriquez objected that U. of M. had attended last year's conference in a similar capacity and added that certain vice-presidents of NFCUS appointed from the university had resigned.

Enriquez also said he had heard a debate at the University of Montreal recently which some 600 students supported NFCUS.

Representative Dupre replied that the council had voted 12-1 against sending delegates to this year's conference. He objected that there had been only 200 students at the debate of which Enriquez was speaking. The vote he said, had been about three-to-one.

Another highlight of the opening day's conference was refusal to permit Ben Shek of the left-wing National Federation of Canadian Labor Youth to take the floor. The delegates accepted a mimeographed copy concerning NFLCY handed around by Shek, however.

NFCUS Needs Nudge --- Wax

"The National Federation of Canadian University Students has always been the work of a few with little of the inspiration seeping down to the student for whom it was intended," said Dr. Sidney Wax, former International Affairs Commissioner for NFCUS, as he gave the keynote address to delegates who gathered in the Great Hall of Hart House last night for an opening banquet.

Wax said that he regretted the fact that the present conference was threatening to be as pitiful and insignificant as the previous "seventeen annual meetings." "NFCUS is a paper institution with a paper membership of 43,000 plus," he said, "and perhaps the basic aims need to be re-examined."

"Maybe this conference will succeed in finding the basic issues that will capture the interest and imagination of Canadian students. NFCUS and the campus student council is a marriage without love" he claimed, "some councils are like unfaithful husbands who do not want to pay the entire cost of their wives support," he quipped.

Wax went on to blast the national office and executive of the organization when he said that it was characteristic of NFCUS to prepare poorly for the National Conference. "It is a transgression against the student if delegates are so ignorant that they have to bone up on current topics on their way to conferences. Few other organizations would tolerate such action," he claimed. Touching on Book Neurosis?

Free Library With Free Love

By BILL SMYTH

We have always been afraid of libraries. It all started in our youth when we precociously tried to get an adult-type book out of a child-type library. We ran into a fearsome man with glasses who told us that "although current regulations prohibited a juvenile of under nine (9) years of age before September 13 with-drawing a volume of more than four (4) years vintage, I feel sure that in your case an exception might be made if you would like to apply to the Department of Juvenile Relations within..."

We came to university with a severe neurosis, hoping however, that in the free and tolerant air of the University we would at last find a library free of blithering, petulant, red-tape bound individuals who would let us get our little volumes in peace. But alas no!

One day we went in to get a simple little book called Social and Economic History of Rome written by a sterling chap named Rostovtseff. We stood in line for half an hour to find that we had to fill out either a pink, white, or blue slip and hand it in at another line. We did so. We waited. We found out that we had filled out the wrong slip. We found out that the book was not in and could we please fill out a recall slip. We bought the book.

The most disturbing incident that ever happened in a library was related to us by a friend. We have long been friends because of our mutual fear of libraries. This chap—his name is Henry—once went into a public library to get a book called Perfumes of Nature by Nasel.

Henry is a sensitive soul. That must be known to understand what he was going through as he waited for the book. What if the book was out? Should he tell the girl to put in a recall? Or should he go to another library? And what if she brought the wrong book? Should he take it and read it anyway, or ask for another? Henry, you see, is very timid. Those who disliked this tender soul called him mousy but they didn't appreciate his kindness.

The girl brought the book. Henry turned red; she had become confused and brought The Sexual Side of Marriage.

Henry has turned to sports as the only way out. Do you remember the letter about nude bathing in Hart House last year?

New Chapel Construction Hindered by Hand of God

Hopes that the basement of the new Trinity residence and chapel would be converted into giant swimming pools on the pattern of the great Roman baths was dashed yesterday as contractors removed several gallons of water and assorted Gothic garbage. Twelve Divinity students of the Trinity Committee on Un-Angli-can Activities were found floating in the water this morning after having investigated rumours that a tempestuous heretic called Hazel was lurking in the new buildings. No other lives were lost.

Building officials state that the water has now been completely pumped out and that there will be no delay in construction. A roving Varsity reporter fell into ankle-deep mud while following the call of duty, but was rescued and reports that the water which was once two feet deep in places has now subsided.

A small amount of water seeped into the stacks of the old library. Professor J. Cole, Trinity Librarian, reports that the situation is well in hand, and that there has been no damage done. A reporter found the floor completely dry and that living, loving, and letchery in the stacks had returned to normal.

Quit NFCUS UofT Threat Over No Vote For 20c Fee

Member Universities of NFCUS who have not paid the full 50-cents per-student fee will still be allowed to remain within the organization and vote at the conference now in session.

A resolution to this effect was made by delegates from the University of Western Ontario, and was passed by a vote of 11-4. There were two abstaining votes.

Toronto delegate, Bill Angus in discussing the resolution stated that if the University of Toronto were not allowed to vote because of its failure to raise the student fee to fifty cents, would have to secede. He further stated that because of the large Toronto NFCUS enrolment) and con-enrollment (almost 25% of sequent large amount of money contributed, NFCUS would be ineffective if Toronto were not given a voice.

Delegates from the Universities of New Brunswick and British Columbia made similar statements.

As the discussion continued, the McGill delegation stated that their University was prepared to pay the full fee provided they could report favourably on the conference. Saskatchewan delegates immediately objected to being put in the position of a paid performer upon whose performance future increases are dependent.

Alberta delegates felt that the question was primarily one of good faith, and suggested that those universities who have previously shown good faith in NFCUS be allowed to remain in spite of their failure to pay the full fee.

In opposition to this, delegates from Laval pointed out the difficult position in which member universities who have paid the full fee will be left should other universities be allowed to remain. So far, fifteen universities have paid the fee, while Toronto, McGill, Dalhousie, University of Manitoba UBC and UNB have failed to raise their fees to the new level of fifty cents. Toronto at present pays only twenty cents per student. Last year the Student's Administrative Council passed a resolution to increase this to fifty cents, but was refused by the Board of Governors who would not raise student fees.

Most delegates from universities who have paid the full fee felt that the support of the other universities is essential because of their large enrolment. The Federation could not be called a national one without their support, and on this ground they will be allowed to remain within NFCUS pending further developments.

The conference will continue for the rest of this week.

"You Come to Build or Bury NFCUS?"

"You have either come to build or to bury NFCUS," in these words Tony Enriquez presented the challenge to more than 100 delegates to the annual NFCUS conference which got underway in Hart House this morning.

"You are challenged to present a concrete program and if you do not you are not constructing a national organization but destroying it," he continued.

In reviewing last year's NFCUS program Enriquez said that, in his opinion, all major projects had been carried out. He claimed also that the work of the national office located at Ottawa had been successful in its co-ordinating activities of the past year. "If you feel nothing has been done in the past year, the fault lies with the resolutions passed by the National Conference and not with the executive at Ottawa."

In discussing last year's program in detail he said that some moral progress had been made in the matter of rail fare reductions although no lower fares had been offered. He expressed the opinion that "more active campaigning" would probably lead to concrete results.

"Three or four resolutions passed at last year's conference have been ignored because the national office felt they were impractical under present conditions," Enriquez admitted.

be drawn into IUS and used as a vehicle for propaganda.

Moving on to the organization and purposes of the Co-ordinating Secretariat at Leyden, Wax expressed the hope that it would sometime have more members than the IUS. "When COSEC is strong," he said, "We can demand concessions and guarantees from the IUS."

In summing up Wax urged the delegates to bring NFCUS back to the student and anchor the present drift into oblivion.

Tony Enriquez thanked Wax for a "frank, down-to-earth exposure."

year's conference and the recommendations which he would make, the national president said he felt a "grass roots movement" is essential. "We must get back to Joe College," he claimed. Enriquez said, too, that more money would be ploughed back into regional conferences, and suggested that regional conferences become mandatory, especially in the weeks immediately previous to the National Conference. "This will give delegates time to become well informed on important matters and thus expedite business at the annual meeting," he said.

In summing up the projects and resolutions for the coming conference, Enriquez urged delegates to ask themselves questions which he termed "basic." "Do you want NFCUS," he asked, "if so do something. You must develop a program which is concrete and which your national executive can work on."

In winding up his speech the NFCUS president extended his thanks to members of his execu-the subject of finance Wax said that something was definitely at fault in an organization which spent 15% of its budget on one meeting, especially when the meeting was poorly organized.

"Nothing startling ever came out of a NFCUS conference unless the delegates were fully prepared to speak out intelligently on one side or another of a question," said Wax, citing the Russian student visit of some years ago as the best example of a real issue that touched the interest of all students.

Wax felt that the establishing of the full-time presidency was a forward step. "This position should be made as attractive as possible," he suggested, "in order to get the best man in the job. We do not want some joker who is only looking for a soft touch and a year of travel to get the position," he said.

Shifting to the subject of International Affairs, his special field, Wax told the delegates how disheartening it had always been for him to return to Canada and find "student apathy" after finding the student organizations of other countries so strong.

No one has had more bitter experience with the International Union of Students than I," he claimed. Wax expressed the hope that Canada would never

Re: CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

The Ninth Series of Canada Savings Bonds is now being offered to Canadians by the Bank of Canada.

Herein is an opportunity to accumulate savings by means of an attractive investment and also to contribute to the public financing of our nation.

SIDNEY SMITH, President.

There have been provided for all members of the Staff of the University facilities to subscribe to Canada Savings Bonds, either for payment in full, or by the Payroll Savings Plan.

I would emphasize that these bonds are not subject to fluctuation of the markets and are redeemable at any bank at any time for the full purchase price plus earned interest.

"Unfortunately..."

Delegates to the eighteenth annual NFCUS conference in Hart House yesterday afternoon heard one of the strongest declarations concerning the national federation which has ever been produced.

Antomo Enriquez, president of the federation, while openly admitted many of the deficiencies of the organization, he called upon the delegates to present to their executive a program of concrete proposals which could be put into effective action and help to enhance the reputation of the National Federation.

We appreciate the sincerity with which the president presented his case. A great deal of what he said strikes a responsive chord in the minds of many students.

However, we are genuinely afraid that many of his proposals will find their deathbed in the wastebaskets of the commissioners and the final plenary sessions.

There has been an unmistakable call to action. This call has been reflected in the decision of the University of Montreal to rescind from the organization and in the attitudes of many of the other delegates.

We trust that this call will not go unheeded.

Brother's Keeper

At the time of the Holland Flood Disaster of two years ago the students of this university responded in a magnificent fashion to the appeal for funds.

Now death and destruction have struck closer home.

The storm which swept through the Humber River region last Saturday has killed nearly one hundred people, and caused property damage estimated in the hundreds of millions of dollars.

The president of the university, Sidney Smith, and Col. E. W. Phillips, chairman of the Board of Governors, have authorized the Students' Administrative Council to act as the official collecting agency for the campus.

Since charity and related virtues begin at home, we urge the students of the university to contribute generously in either time or money to this cause.

Now, indeed, we become our brother's keepers.

What Price Democracy?

In deciding to allow voting rights to those members who have not paid the 50c fee, the National Federation of Canadian University Students has considerably weakened its position.

In most cases the inability to pay this fee has resulted from decisions by Boards of Governors of certain universities. When these groups hear that the federation placed so little emphasis on the fee they will be unlikely to view sympathetically further requests for increased student government fees.

The federation would do well to register protests with the boards' concern over what constitutes a very real curtailment of responsible student government.

Rearmament Revisited

Mr. Mendes-France and Mr. Adenauer shook hands warmly a few days ago. Almost four years after the North Atlantic Council decided that German troops were necessary to West European defence, agreement has been reached on how to implement the decision. Ratification of the plan by all nine participating powers should prove speedy.

Even in France it is likely that the limitations placed on German rearmament, the absence of a superpolitical element in the plan, and the personal prestige of the Premier will ease the agreement through the National Assembly. Barring any sudden Franco-German flareup over the Saar or an indiscrete warning from Washington to Paris, the Wehrmacht will soon be reborn.

There seems no better time to re-examine the premises on which western defensive policy in Europe have been based. N.A.T.O. was conceived as early as 1946 as a method of deterring further Communist expansion in Europe without subjecting the plan to the inevitable Russian veto in the UN.

This was a time when the carnage of an Anzio beachhead was a vivid memory, when defence was a matter of mustering troops and planes according to tactical science. But from the beginning the Organization was plagued by the fact that its military arm, though strong enough to provide a mild deterrent to possible Russian invasion, was too weak to provide more than token resistance were an attack to come: even by 1950 we had only 8 divisions in Western Europe, the Russians 22. Britain and France were economically incapable of further effort. Germany was the crushed foe, damned to long-term pacifism.

In June, 1950, Communists armies crossed the 38th parallel in Korea; the ominous Bereshtschin squads had already been organized in East Germany. Faced with these concrete indices of Communist military strength, it seemed imperative that the West European defensive system be strengthened. Swift mobilization of West German troops seemed essential.

The French, still nursing the sores of war-time occupation balked at the new plan. Some limitations were necessary, they thought; some precautions had to be taken to prevent a complete resurgence of German militarism. Twenty months later, the French Foreign Minister produced a plan to provide, not only military integration of German troops into a larger European army, but an incipient political union of Europe. This plan — E.D.C. — soon proved unpalatable to more nationalistic Frenchmen who feared German military and political domination of the union. On August 30, 1954 the French National Assembly destroyed its foster-child.

Sympathetic Understanding

Editor,
The Varsity.

If a student is to believe that which he reads in The Varsity, he must surely have a poor opinion of this year's cheerleading squad. Fortunately, Toronto students attend football games personally and seldom read the uninformed opinions of Varsity editors.

One-eyed Benny, alias your distinguished sports editor has failed to come even close in his predictions of the big Blues intercollegiate contests. If he is therefore unqualified in his own field, who is he to deride the Blue and White Society?

For one awful moment as I read Miss Breslin's remarks on en marge of the Pageant (for surely such they were rather than a review) I thought that through some unaccountable mistake I had found my way to a different Coliseum, sat twice through a different Pageant from the one that disappointed Miss Breslin. She spoke of dances that were tedious; I had found them consistently fresh. The music she heard was unimpressive; I had spent the following day with tunes tinkling through my head. One of the conductors of last summer's Prom Concert remarked that some of the ballet music was really extraordinary. Were we at the same Pageant?

New Vitality

Editor
The Varsity:

Having gained a great appreciation for football during our career at Varsity we feel that something is definitely lacking at the games. The football is great but oh! those cheer leaders' uniforms! Has the old fashioned notion of sweaters lost its appeal at Varsity? Have we really succumbed to Dior and his flat flapper fashion? Give us the sweaters and if necessary the gay little "deceivers" that go with them. Bring new vitality, new bounce to our game. We want the sweaters of Western, Queens and Mac-Master.

The function of the Blue and White Society is to foster all-arsity spirit. It is not, as your sports editor assumes, "to fill Varsity stadium to capacity."

And you, Mr. Editor sir, complain one week of "ineptitude and lethargy" on the part of the cheerleaders, and the next week you whine that the cheers and gymnastics are "too complicated." My dear sir, you are obviously not of an athletic nature. The beauty of the cheerleader's gymnastics is that they are not so difficult as they are deftly arranged. As for lethargy, I personally saw you, Mr. Editor, joining in the songs and yells which the cheerleaders led all the way from Toronto to Queen's. No lethargy there. Or on the field for that matter!

A prophet is not without honour save in his own country. Although you accurately reported our team's failure last week, you failed to report the victory of our band and cheerleaders. When our cheerleaders led Queen's in a customary exchange cheer, the Queen's supporters were so enthused that they called the cheerleaders back, and led by Blazered cheerleaders yelled out the TORONTO yell. After the game, an enthusiastic mob gathered around the band, Shirley Eckel, the cheerleaders, and hoisting the girls on their shoulders, surged behind and around the band on its parade to the gym.

This victory you did not report. Is good news no news?

Lastly, while complaining, why did you not complain of Queen's policy of breaking up Toronto spectators into groups of 5 or less, thus preventing any coherent or loud cheering. This could have been a constructive suggestion on your part.

I think a word of praise for Tom Bell and the cheerleaders, for Stan Clark and the band is deserving. They work long and hard for your bars.

For you sir, I have nothing but sympathy.

Bill Harris, Chairman, Blue & White Society.

Jazz Concert

Editor,
The Varsity.

Sir:

Once again the Community Chest is canvassing for funds on the Varsity campus, and once again students are reluctantly dropping their pennies—I repeat, pennies—into the little box emblazoned with a symbolic red feather. Perhaps our hesitancy to donate to this worthy cause stems from the feeling that we are giving up our "cigarette money," but not receiving any tangible benefits in exchange.

So let's have a jazz concert. A red-hot, spontaneous, foot-warming jam session at Convocation Hall. Each college or faculty could enter a band, and with each band being allotted a certain amount of time, it could develop into a jazz battle royal, with each faculty trying to outblow the previous talent. With the musicians dressed in outlandish costumes, and our beloved cheerleaders passing the hat amongst the hand-clapping, foot-tapping spectators, this could turn out to be a real ball, climaxed by a massed jazz band of all the faculties screaming forth in the finale.

If this session were held on a weekday between 12 noon and 2 p.m., it would give most students a full two hours of exciting entertainment. With a full house on hand, and all proceeds going to the Community Chest, such a venture as this could prove highly successful, both financially and otherwise. I can hear it now!

D. McCrea, Architecture.

Disgusted

To the abused Coeds:

I am very surprised, (or should be), concerning the present controversy. In the first place, I am disappointed to realize that some Coeds would willingly, and publicly, voice their opinions on such a vulgar subject. Secondly, I am disgusted to find the ignoble sentiments of an individual raised to the position of being worthy of notice and comment.

Lastly, I admire the courage of the girl who quoted, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." I would be ashamed to admit, that I as a man, had anything to do with world affairs today.

Sincerely,
J. L. Drummond,
H.S.P.

Rearmament

It may be argued now that, in the six-year period since the formation of N.A.T.O., American and Russian possession of the H-bomb has rendered obsolete military strategy based on conventional military alliances, though these alliances were quite logical in 1948. West European rearmament now seems to be based more on political, economic and psychological considerations, of on military. If N.A.T.O. and its associated alliances are to provide a deterrent to Russian aggression, they must be capable of at least effective defensive action. As Field Marshal Montgomery said recently, "Our political masters have never shown great enthusiasm in giving us the necessary numbers to deal with Russian strength." Even with German contingents, the total strength of the West European alliances will be sixty divisions; Russia is rumoured to have over one hundred divisions in East Europe. Could we really prevent a Russian drive to the Channel?

The alliances perform their political, economic and psychological functions well, however. Germany's economic recovery has been spectacular. Side by side has been a development of nationalistic feeling which has demanded, on the one hand, sovereign status and rearmament with the West, and a counter-feeling, on the other hand, preferring German unification and neutralization. Chancellor Adenauer has recently hinted that a Western rebuff of the first-mentioned aspiration might cause Germany to turn to the East for an alliance.

In contrast, the West can well suspect the results of the counter-feeling: a unified, neutralized, Germany would, at present, be choice plucking for an internal Communist coup. Rearmament of Germany becomes, then, the practicable way of retaining West Germany on the roster of anti-Communist nations.

S.A.S.

Economically speaking, it cannot be doubted that military spending in the United States and Canada has aided continuing prosperity. In Britain and France military commitments are heavy drains on the national budget, and hinder concentration on projects of social welfare. However, while European defence as a whole costs Britain as much as she can bear, German rearmament will be a boon to many British industries. Unhindered by military production, Germany has fast become a major competitor of Britain in export markets.

The Trade Unions Congress, a supporter of German rearmament, undoubtedly sees in it, in part at least, a method of reducing German production of commodities for export, and the consequent easing of competition.

The psychological function of our defensive system is more subtle and may not even be part of an articulated policy. Field Marshal Montgomery continued the remark quoted above to state that because the military strength of the West is insufficient, we will be obliged to use atomic weapons in a new war. The Reporter, noted political magazine, admits that nuclear ground- weapons have made German units dispensable to western defence. Both remarks are significant; both remarks hint at the fact that atomic and hydrogen bombs have revolutionized modern conceptions of warfare.

Hart House this Friday. One of the leaders of the communist revolution, Rubashov becomes a victim of the regime he helped to establish, and from this position he sees clearly how the inhumanity of his actions defeated the ideals of his purpose. Thus the conflict in Darkness at Noon centres around ideologies in their relation to humans.

Kingsley's adaption of the Arthur Koestler novel boils down the contents, so that each thread of the story is represented by one sharp scene — a cinema technique.

"The most difficult part of this play", said Robert Gill, director of Hart House, "is the staging". Since the only literal place is Rubashov's cell and all other places come from his memory, the stage had to be divided down to an inch to keep the present and the past separate. The lighting also is considerably complicated by the memory sequences. A scrim is used, whereby the walls dissolve as Rubashov moves from one part to another and another part of past is spotlighted. Billy, up on the bridge at the lighting board will be kept-busier than a one-armed paper hanger with the 70 lighting changes.

Rubashov, who will be played by Robert Shiffritz, is an extremely demanding role. He only leaves the stage for two minutes during the whole play. Also he must make a quick psychological change of mood — remembering how he was at the height of his power in contrast to his present low estate. This allows the actor no continuity during which to build up a frame of mind. Finally the long break down scene leading to his confession demands a sustained intensity and careful accumulation of detail to make his action seem psychologically sure. And after all this, Rubashov must remain a man of dignity.

The smaller parts also have their challenge, in that the characterisation has to be established in a relatively short time. Aline Kamins plays Lub, Don Sutherland plays Gletkin the brutal interrogator, Stanley Daniels plays Ivanov, Edward Walker plays Prisoner No. 402, and Powell Jones plays prisoner 302.

the good old days

Taddle Creek

"How heartless is progress, I've heard people say. Here's an adage that couldn't be truer".

Thus the sweet gentle waters of old Taddle Creek Have progressed to a sweet gentle sewer."

One could almost get sentimental about the ill-fated little stream that once flowed through the university campus. But it's difficult to ignore the fact that in its later years, Taddle Creek had declined from the inspiration of poets to the frustration of health officials.

Entering the campus at Bloor street, near the present-day Economics Building, the Taddle flowed gently south along a route we now know as Philosopher's Walk. It dribbled toward Hart House and there formed a pool at the site of Hart House theatre. This was called McCaul's Pond, after the first president of the university. The waters surged on through a ravine, past the present Engineering Building, across College Street, and so on out of the campus, towards the bay.

A solemn article, in a past Varsity puts forth, "the history of Taddle Creek which goes back to 1870, is as deep and stirring as the creek itself." Said creek, I am forced to interject, was one foot at its deepest and practically stagnant. At the height of its career, however, Taddle was an inspiring addition to the scenery.

Many an ode was dedicated to its charming waters. Romantically inclined poets addressed it: "O beauteous Taddle, gently flowing stream," while a mundane few described it as "a total wreck, as broad as the views of the Senate."

Ten years later, Taddle no longer babbled merrily. In fact it rather dragged along due to the fact that it had become a receptacle of refuse and a last resting place for decaying animals. Budding romantics found it necessary to address it at a distance. Only freshmen were subjected to its fuming, germ-infested waters. No less degraded was the pond which had become a community splash party for dogs.

The pool was ordered drained in the '80's and later the whole stream was forced underground as a part of a sewage system, in order to satisfy building and health authorities.

Occasionally, Taddle Creek manifests itself in the form of a faint gurgle heard, on Philosopher's Walk, on quiet days or a damp basement in the library after heavy rains. Thus died a stream, fresh waters turned to stale. And with its death, so ends my Taddle Tale.

As We See It

By MARGE STERN and SUE DELMANE

to exaggerate our ignorance of other countries, and the difference between Canada and the U.S.

We didn't expect Toronto to be a land of Indians, Eskimos, and snow-shoe shops. And, as the maps show, although we won't admit it unless pressed, we were aware that there was a large (and even civilized!) country above us. We only wish that some of you had a little better idea that we, too, have reached a degree of civilization. For example, one inevitable question that comes up is if we miss our coffee at 4 p.m. Is also have the institution of tea in the States. But once clear of the standard misconceptions that everyone feels they have to joke about on first meeting us, we found that crossing the border is more a theoretical than a practical experience. Much as we hate to admit it, for the chauvinistic reasons embodied in those maps, parts of Toronto could easily be parts of either Boston or New York. And the old cliché about people being the same really seems to apply. We sing the same songs, go to the same movies... our only trouble is remembering that when they are not pledging allegiance to the everyone stands at the end of an event, United States with "My Country 'Tis of Thee".

One inevitable question that we never tire of answering, be it about the professors, your beautiful new subway or the architecture of Hart House, is "are you impressed?"... Very.

We came because we thought it worthwhile to get as broad an outlook from college as possible, attending two such different institutions as a women's college, and a provincial university gives us a "continental" viewpoint. People ask us if we feel we've lost anything. Our only loss on the Smith-Toronto exchange is the 34c on the dollar.

Not only have we not lost, we've gained a lot. The most noticeable thing, of course, is a rugby "football" team, of our own. Somehow, Smith never quite managed that as one of their athletic activities, and we had to visit other colleges to see a game. Win, lose, or TIE, this is better. Then of course we're getting a wonderful education in courses as varied as Spenser and Milton and Anthorp. Our list could be multiplied until it took up all eight pages of this issue, so perhaps we'd better sum up here. We of Smith College, in search of a wider vision, found a University. And your hospitality, your welcoming us in as real participants in your affairs, and as friends, makes us very happy to sing: "Toronto is our University."

We're both in English Lang. and Lit., but taking advantage of your wonderful opportunity to "sit in" on classes. Yesterday afternoon found us in Professor Carpenter's Anthropology class. He was discussing space concepts in primitive societies, and to prove his point, he brought in two maps. One was North America from a New Yorker's point of view; the other was a Bostonian's "idea" of the States. Manhattan was the size of the British Isles, and Brooklyn was even larger. Canada was shown with a mounted policeman, and a few trees. "Perhaps that's all there is to it," Carpenter jibed. The Bostonian's map had an extraordinarily large Massachusetts, England very close, with the Great Lakes reaching almost to the western coast. It listed some universities, such as Harvard, and mentioned that in recent years there has been some development in the wilds of the west. Perhaps we should point out here that Sue is from New York City, and Marge is from Boston. As we turned bright shades of red, Carpenter went on to explain that Boston considers itself the "hub of the universe," and that outside of Boston—well, is not. Whether Boston is the hub of the universe, or a primitive so-called, both Canadian and American tend to agree, it only proves our ignorance of other countries and, superficially, at

By JOHN WILSON

A quick glance at the calendar tells us that we have just entered the third week in October, and already Blue Hockey coach Jack Kennedy is thinking about the ice sport. While Mr. Kennedy is still guiding his Baby Blue footballers in search of their fourth consecutive Intercollegiate championship, hockey manager Ron Garlick is conducting outdoor training for the ice enthusiasts in preparation for their winter assault on the Queen's Cup.

This year's edition of the hockey Blues is shaping into one of the best clubs ever to don the Blue and White in Varsity Arena. Only two of last year's third place team will not be back: goaltender Jack Ross, and winger Harry Boyd. In addition to the first line of Don Cossar, Johnny Akitt, and Ross Woods, which played so well last season, Dave Jackson and Dave Reid, both of whom played with the Marlboros, and Paul Knox from St. Mike's, will be on hand. Jackson spent some time with the Leafs' farm club at Pittsburgh before the opening of University this fall.

Other standout forwards who will be returning are Red Stephen, who may move back to the blueline, Ken Lawson, Ernie Bodnar, Tom Riley, and Rob Logie. Blue stars of two years ago, Sandy Davidson and John Adams will also be back, and Intermediate sensation and ex-Marlboro Clare Fisher will be seeking a berth on the Blue club this year.

Back to grace the blueline on defence are Bill Moreau, Colin Ashton, Lou Appleby, and John Tolton, as well as several aspirants from last year's Baby Blue champs. Hugh Currie will be trying to fill the large vacancy left by the graduation of 1953 netminder Jack Ross, and there is a possibility that St. Mike's clever goalie Gerry Young will don the blades with the Blues.

The first league game is set for December 3, here with the Carabins providing the opposition. In addition to this, there are several exhibition contests lined up, among them an invitation to a College tournament at Troy, New York. There should be no worries about Varsity's hockey chances this year; the perennial titlists from the University of Montreal will be quaking in their boots already.

The Future's Bright

... on the ice lanes, and there's no reason to suppose it isn't just as bright on the gridiron. We remember the season of 1948, when the Blues started off the schedule by dropping a 20-7 decision to Western in London, and then lost to Queen's 8-6 the following Saturday in Toronto. They won the next four league games, and trounced the Mustangs 18-7 in a play-off to win the Yates Cup for the first time since the war. Don't sell the Blues short, the season's only a third over.

Information that makes the whole picture brighter is found in the programme sold at Queen's on Saturday. In the fifty-six years of Intercollegiate football competition since 1898, the Blues have won eighteen championships, Queen's twelve, Western nine, and McGill seven. The title was not contested in the years during the two Great Wars.

From the Blue Room ... Our old friend Joe Divok, who is directing the Blue and White's Annual Float Parade, tells us that a very important meeting of the College and Faculty representatives for the parade is being held on Thursday at 1:00. All the people concerned should be present to pick up their entry blanks for the parade ... The two soccer games scheduled against McMaster last Saturday were, of course, rained out, and will be played probably during the second week in November.

Carabins Win Tennis Last Day Rained Out

The Senior Intercollegiate Tennis tournament, held this year at McGill University, found itself rained out in its final day of competition last Friday. However, the University of Montreal had previously established supremacy, having won eighteen matches in two days.

McGill were second in team competition with eleven wins. Varsity won ten, and Ottawa College trailed far behind with one lone victory. Friday had been set for a challenge round to declare individual singles and doubles champions, but heavy rain in the morning left the courts too wet for play. To date, no official word has been received from McGill concerning the last day of the meet.

The Carabins' three top players, Page, Messier, and Lamoreux would probably have been involved in the singles championship. Raymond Page has played for three seasons on the Montreal teams, and won all his matches in last week's tournament as did his two team-mates.

The Intercollegiate Intermediate tournament, which was to be held at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, became a victim of the storm and was cancelled for this year. The University of Toronto won this title in 1953, so they will retain the championship until next year's meet.

Vic Scores 11-1 Win On Good Pass Attack Meds' Wheeler Best

By JOHN VOJTECH

A small, but powerful Vic team defeated a heavier Meds team 11-1 yesterday on the back campus. Billy Williams and Ron Bertram scored the Vic touchdowns and Julian Benson converted Bertram's major. Jim Wheeler scored the only Meds point on a rouge.

Vic started out strongly in the first quarter after the Meds fumbled on their twenty-yard line. It was a bad snap and the ball rolled to the Meds one-yard line. Vic recovered, and Billy Williams grabbed a short screen pass from Frank Ebenhardt. The convert was no good.

The game see-sawed back and forth with great running plays by Jimmy Wheeler of Meds and Billy Williams of Vic. Late in the second quarter Jimmy Wheeler kicked a long high kick that sailed into the end zone. There Lorne McLean was trapped by the kicker himself, Mr. Wheeler.

Jimmy Wheeler continued to keep the Vic team off balance with his long passes and kicks. He averaged at least forty yards on each punt. By virtue of Wheeler's long kicks, the Vic team found itself back on their own three yard line. From there Frank Ebenhardt took over for Vic. On a daring end run Ebenhardt almost got away, but Jimmy Wheeler caught him with a terrific tackle on the Vic thirty yard line. Vic fumbled for a loss of three yards, and then Ebenhardt let loose with a thirty-yard pass to Ron Bertram who shifted loose from Hugh Curry of Meds and went over the line for Vics second touch. Julian Benson converted. It had taken Vic exactly two plays and a fumble to go 107 yards for a touchdown.

In the fourth quarter Meds tried desperately to get back into the ball game, but Vic was equal to the task. Jimmy Wheeler, on a fake kick from his forty yard line, tossed a thirty yard pass to Al Cucetti to bring Meds into scoring range. John Hamilton hit Jimmy Wheeler with a surprise pass that was good for another fifteen yards. But Vic dug in for a last ditch stand and thwarted the attempts of a Meds team which only got as far as the ten yard line. Vic took the ball on downs from Meds who tried desperately to get a touchdown. Vic then played out the clock until the game was over.

Just notes: Although the Meds lost it was strange to see a team losing by two touchdowns connect on so many long passes ... Jimmy Wheeler, Meds, will soon prove to be the best kicker in intramural competition ... His passes are tremendous ... Billy Williams, Vic, was the most consistent ground gainer. Billy hit for seven and eight yards a try through left end. Both teams used a T-formation and Vic came up with a 6-3-2-1 defence that successfully bottled up all Med thrusts ... Cheerleaders from Vic helped keep the morale of the students on hand. Meds were cheering on their own which didn't help their team as much as organized cheering would have.

Centre Prendergast Gives Blues Power

Contribution, in the way of footballers, from St. Michael's College to the Varsity Blues has been lean in quantity but large in quality in recent years. St. Mike's, has not made a gift of a gridiron member for many seasons, but in 1951, after spending the 1949 season playing intercollegiate football for Skule and sitting out football for 1950, John Prendergast made the big jump from intercollegiate football to the Varsity Blues.

A good-looking, rugged individual, "Prender," as his buddies call him, is a quiet conscientious gentleman on the gridiron as well as on the campus. John has seen action at five various positions since his playing days at St. Mike's in 1948. That year he played end and quarterback with the Irish and with Varsity he put in a year at both wingback and fullback. 1953 found him in the role of a crushing and feared centre, his present position.

John has one more year of football left as he hopes to enter O.C.E. next year, a move which enabled teammate and co-captain Steve Oneschuck to play with the Blues this fall.

When asked if he had any "kicks" about the interference penalty called on him last Saturday when Gino Fracas attempted to make a catch, "Prender" just laughed, "The refs are not going out of their way to call any bad ones. Y'know, I ref intercollegiate hockey in the winter and can sympathize with the abuse the officials take." That type of comment is typical of the Varsity centre.

"Prender" said that he feels the team is really up for Saturday's game against the cellar dwelling McGill Redmen, and that he thought that the Blues will be hitting full stride and operating on all cylinders from here in.

Beamish, Blue Tackle

A national weekly news magazine recently featured an article describing the fabulous career of the B.C. Lions star tackle, Arnie Weinmeister. One of the main points of the story was that the offensive tackle position was the most inconspicuous spot on a football team. It takes a real ball player to do a standout job at that part of the line. The Blues, this year, have two such standout performers in Bill Beamish and Al Macklin.

Beamish, a quiet, likeable guy off the football field becomes a tough customer on Saturday afternoons. His 230 pounds, built around a 6'5" frame are an unwelcome sight to the other teams in the league. An experienced footballer, Bill played for five years in high school and starred last year for the Intermediates. He was named to the All-star team twice and was also a better than average performer at basketball and track. As one of the tackles who anchor the line in Varsity's T-formation, Bill has really shone this season. He was really impressive in pushing around big Ted Roman in the Western game.

For any co-eds who might be interested, Bill is still footloose and fancy-free, although, as any Blue footballer knows, serious attention to the sport takes quite a bit of time.

Track Meet Wednesday At Stadium

Last night the Blues track teams held their last workout. Light drill was the order for the night, with the athletes bundled up to avoid the cold, with the coach hoping for warmer weather for Wednesday afternoon.

The senior team elected veteran Herb Tilson as this year's captain. Herb will be competing in the three mile event, against John McDougall of Queens, who won the event last year. The final selection of the teams was as follows.

Senior team: 100—D. Harding, M. Harris, (P. Potter) 220—D. Harding, C. Husband, (B. Maclean) 440—D. Harding, C. Husband, (R. Linton) 880—P. Watson, R. Linton, (D. McEntee) 1 Mile—B. Gelling, B. Sailors In Kingston Blues Keep Trophy

Intercollegiate competition for the Colonel Grant Trophy was resumed after a one year layoff, as sailors from the University of Toronto, Queens, McGill and Royal Military College of Kingston met at RMC last Sunday afternoon.

The Varsity team, led by Doug Hall and Paul Henderson, managed to win two of the three races, and place second in the other to retain the title they won in 1952. Mac Johnson, who has sailed in the treacherous coastal waters of Prince Edward Island, Maurice Huskin from Holland, Jim Taylor from the National Yacht Club, and John Roberts from the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, made up the rest of the Blue crew. Hall and Henderson both sail at the RCYC.

With a thirty-mile-an-hour wind and very choppy water, the races were some of the best seen in Intercollegiate competition. Bluesoes, a 23-foot craft, were used for the races, each carrying three men. Hall skipped the Varsity crew in the first race and came in first in the three-and-a-half mile course, beating the McGill entry by about four seconds. In the second race, Paul Henderson took the tiller and ran a close second to the McGill crew. Hall again sailed the third and last race and crossed the finish line a good distance ahead of the McGill boat. RMC sailed third in all races, and Queen's placed an undignified last.

The Blues split up so that each member of the team sailed in two races. The course consisted of three legs, and was sailed in open water near the mouth of the St. Lawrence river. The Varsity team was selected from about 40 members of the U. of T. sailing club. Unable to obtain boats for a series of trial races, the selection was rather arbitrary, but proved successful as Varsity captured Intercollegiate laurels in another sport.

Meds, Vic Win In Interfac Lacrosse

In boxla activity last Friday afternoon the UC II's defeated Vic II's 5-0. Goal-getters for UC were Jeans with two, and Young, Urquhart, and Scott, with one apiece.

The Meds VI's lost a heart-breaker to a spirited SPS V squad by the score of 2-1. Going into the last period the two clubs were knotted at 1-1. But Pollock had one good shot left that beat the Meds goaltender and Skule squeezed by, by the narrowest of margins.

On Monday, in lacrosse, the Meds I's blasted SPS by the overwhelming score of 14-3. The Doctors, with three goals in the first period, five in the second, two and four in the last two frames, showed their superiority throughout the contest. Top scorers for Meds were Kerr with four tallies, Urquhart with two, Schwartz with two, and Bull with three. Varsity scored two of the SPS goals.

In volleyball action on Friday, Pre-Meds II defeated Vic IV two straight in a best of three match, 15-7, 15-8. The Pre-Meds IB squad took the Trinity B's two games to one. The Buttery Boys won the first game 15-10, but the young Doctors took the last two 15-8, and 15-10. Trinity A's lost out to Junior Vic 15-5, 15-6.

On Monday the SPS VI's defeated a highly rated UC III squad by scores of 15-10, and 15-3. Dennis and Grossman played well for the losers. Soccer activity on Friday was curtailed due to the havoc caused by the tail end of the hurricane on the front and back campuses.

What's news at Inco*?

Creating a fresh breeze a mile underground

Before long, in Inco's Creighton Mine, that portion a mile or more underground will become a hive of industry as men and machines begin to burrow a network of passages around and into the ore.

But first, provision must be made for the health, safety and comfort of the men. Fresh air is vital. So, from the present mine workings, a shaft 13 feet in diameter is being cut straight down through solid rock to a point more than a mile below the surface. Its upper end will connect with another airway to the surface. Through this shaft, all smoothly cemented like a silo, 350,000 cubic feet of air per minute will be forced down into the lower workings of the mine.

SPS Riot

Caput's Report

Following is the report of the Caput, the official disciplinary body of the University, on the incidents that occurred on the 23rd of September involving the injury of Professor McAndrew, Registrar of University College and the destruction of University property by rioting Engineering Freshmen.

Student self-government of non-curricular affairs has been bestowed for many decades on the Students' Administrative Council and on other student organizations in the colleges, faculties and schools of the University of Toronto. The University has vested in the student organizations rights and privileges which carry with them correlative responsibilities and duties. Having thoroughly investigated, with the full assistance of Engineering students, the raids on University College, Victoria College and Trinity College by certain Engineering students on the afternoon of Thursday, September 23rd, 1954, the Caput of the University of Toronto has found that the student organization known as the Engineering Society has been indifferent to, or incapable of discharging, its responsibilities and duties of self-government, and has thus demonstrated that it is unworthy of the rights and privileges of self-government.

The Caput has therefore decided that the constitution of the Engineering Society which conveys those rights and privileges shall be suspended forthwith. All powers of governance and direction of non-curricular affairs of the students of any kind whatsoever within the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering will be vested in the Council of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, that is, in the teaching body of that Faculty.

The Caput in its investigation has found that there were no ringleaders in the raids on the Colleges, and that the depredations were the result of mob action. There was no evidence to indicate that Professor W. J. McAndrew, the Registrar of University College, was assaulted by any student; he was caught by, and fell in, the rush of the students through the building of University College. The Caput has, however, determined that the raids with their lamentable consequences might have been prevented by a proper appreciation and discharge of their particular responsibilities on the part of the members of the Freshmen Reception Committee and the Publicity Director appointed by the Engineering Society to plan and to conduct the visit of the First Year students in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering to Hart House early in the afternoon of September 23rd, 1954.

For this dereliction of duty the Caput severely reprimands the members of the Freshmen Reception Committee and the Publicity Director of the Engineering Society.

In addition to the apologies that the Engineering Society has already made to the authorities of University College, Victoria College and Trinity College, and in addition to the compensation to be paid by the Engineering Society for the damage done by the Engineering students during the raids on September 23rd, 1954, the Engineering Society must pay a fine of $4,000 to the University.

J. C. EVANS,

October 20th, 1954.

Secretary of the Caput.

No Ringleaders Named In Caput Statement

The Caput yesterday laid a fine of $4,000 on the Engineering Society and suspended its constitution in the first disciplinary action aimed at students of the university in several years.

In a statement released late last night the Caput (the disciplinary body of the University) declared that the Society had been "indifferent to, or incapable of, discharging its responsibilities and duties of self-government."

Certain university officials refused to comment on the statement. However, Dr. C. T. Bissell, vice-president, said "the Caput's decision underlines the principle that self-government is not a gift but an attainment."

The Caput also "severely reprimanded" Woody Friedlander, the Society's publicity director, and the entire freshman reception committee and said the raid might have been prevented had they done their job properly.

No ringleader was named in the Caput's statement and blame for the injury to Prof. W. J. McAndrew was put on "mob action".

The estimated budget of the Engineering Society had allotted $600 for the freshman initiations. This was a $525 increase over last year's budget.

A spokesman for the society, who wanted his name withheld, said that of the $600, $100 was planned for the actual initiations and $500 had been laid aside for possible damages as a result of the initiations.

The proposed budget of the Engineering Society for 1954-55 estimated a total receipts of $15,595. The fine of $4,000 would leave well over $11,000 in the Society's treasury if the fine was paid directly by the Society without any additional levy upon the students. There are approximately 1,800 Engineering students (all members of the Society) and they each pay $5.00 to the Engineering Society.

President of the Society, J. N. Rossall and Publicity Director Woody Friedlander (who was censured in the Caput Report) were not available for comment last night on the Caput's action. Bill Deeks, 1st Vice-President of the Society, refused to offer any comment when informed of the Caput's Report.

Dean McLaughlin of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, although refusing comment on the fine and suspension did say that no "worth-while" activities of the Engineering Society would be curtailed. He was speaking in reference to a projected plan of the Engineering Society to send squads of volunteer workers out to aid flood-stricken areas in the Metropolitan district.

The action of the Caput leaves uncertain the position of Gord Hurlburt, Engineering SAC Rep. Hurlburt, who is NFCUS Chairman, Debating Commissioner, and Publicity director for SAC, said last night that he was sorry that he might not be able to continue his activities as NFCUS Chairman.

The entire incident arises out of a Freshman Tour of the Campus held as part of the SPS initiation last September 23rd. During the "tour", Professor McAndrew, Registrar of University College, was injured as an estimated 200 Engineers rioted through UC, Trinity and Vic tearing down bulletin boards, posters, and coat racks. Traffic was stopped on several city streets, a car was placed inside one of the doors of Hart House, and a huge pile of miscellaneous loot, including a soup-ladle and a ladder was piled outside of the Engineering Building.

President Sidney Smith, in a statement issued immediately after the affair, said that the incident "warranted the invoking of positive law and disciplinary action". He went on to say "this incident will be investigated and steps taken to ascertain the guilty parties to the end that this type of vandalism . . . will be exterminated forthwith."

Prof. McAndrew stated last night that he had not read the Report of the Caput, and "would have no statement to make in any case."

flood relief

"The enormity of the tragedy that struck at Toronto last weekend is just now beginning to hit home with us," commented E. A. Macdonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, who termed it "a tragedy beyond belief".

Among the international response to the appeal for aid to combat "the greatest disaster in the city's history" is the contribution of the University of Toronto.

Engineers

Highlighting the reaction of the University is the relief crew organized under the personal initiative of several Engineering students, Niel Irwin, Gordon West, and Bosko Loncarevic. With the hearty approval of the staff and the co-operation of the Army, the students launched a relief operation that will operate for as long as the necessity continues.

Unfortunately the Army can only utilize fifty men per day, but the organizers hope to find some other outlet for their excess workers. Under the present arrangement, the designated groups will be transported every morning from the Engineering Building to the scene of the disaster, for an all-day session of "hard labour". The leaders regret that only fifty men can be used, and extra volunteers will have to be rejected. The workers will need old clothes, rubber boots (if possible), and plenty of energy.

The schedule for each Engineering class is as follows:

Wed. Oct. 20 — 3rd and 4th Eng. Business
Thurs. Oct. 21 — 3rd Mech. Eng.
Fri. Oct. 22 — 1st Mech. Eng.
Sat. and Sun. Oct. 23 and 24 —

Mon. Oct. 25 — 3rd Chem. Eng.
Tues. Oct. 26 — 1st Mining Eng.; 1st Applied Geology
Wed. Oct. 27 — 2nd Civil Eng.
Thurs. Oct. 28 — 2nd Electrical Eng.

Fri. Oct. 29 — 3rd Eng. Physics; 3rd Aeronautical Eng.

This schedule will be subject to revision according to changing need. The aid of those not included in the schedule will be appreciated over the weekend.

Dean McLaughlin made it clear that there would be no wholesale cancelling of lectures, except of the specified class on the appointed day. He emphasized as well that the staff would do their utmost to co-operate in the effort, and that they supported the students in this to the fullest extent.

The Engineers have also contributed the skilled labour of several amateur radio "hams", who are helping to establish the vital communication link with the disaster area.

Relief Fund

The machinery of the Relief Fund sponsored by the S.A.C. will be set into operation tomorrow. Already the advance contributions amount to between $150 and $200 dollars, and the drive itself has not yet been launched.

"I feel confident that the drive will surpass the record established for the Holland Relief a few years ago," said E. A. Macdonald.

The results already indicate this. The tremendous need created by the tragedy is a staggering one, and I feel sure that the staff, students, and graduates of the University will spontaneously respond to the appeal.

Vic Claims Duplessis Is Menace to Canada

Premier Duplessis' Quebec administration was handed a 32-10 lack-of-confidence vote here last Tuesday night by the Victoria College Debating Society.

The 96-session of the college's parliamentary debating club opened with John Douglas, acting as Prime Minister, hailing the Quebec premier as the only able defender of provincial rights.

Said Douglas, "He is the only administrator capable of bringing Quebec out of her present social and economic plight."

"It is important that we recognize the full significance of the menace of Duplessis as a threat to Canadian unity," stated fourth-year Victoria Opposition leader Pauline Sprague.

She described the Quebec premier as a threat to universities in reference to the block which he imposed on federal grants to Quebec Universities.

"Duplessis is the greatest French Canadian since Laurier," said Don Cock, second speaker for the government.

Cock portrayed Duplessis as the defender of the Canadian constitution against debilitating forces from within and without. "His fight for the French is a larger one," said Cock, "it is a fight for Canada."

J. Carter compared Duplessis with South Africa's semi-tyrant Prime Minister Malan claiming that he thought of himself as a "god-sent administrator."

Refunds

Holders of tickets for last Friday's All Varsity Fall Dance will be given a refund, the House Committee announced yesterday.

A written application for refund and the ticket has to be presented in person to the Comptroller's office in Hart House before Friday, October the 29th, it was announced.

Future of NFCUS In Local's Hands

The NFCUS conference today heard reports and recommendations from regional officials and special bodies of the federation. The general tone was satisfaction with the year's activities, but a feeling that much more could be done by the local committees to put the resolutions of the national conference into practice. All agreed that the national art and short story contests should be made annual affairs.

Howard Ellsworth, the vice-president for Ontario, complained of the lack of communication between units and of support for local committees. He recommended a definite platform and more publicity for NFCUS.

Marcel LeBlanc, chairman of the international activities commission, described its work and recommended budgeting increased funds for its secretarial service.

Vice-president for Quebec, Rossaire Beaulieu, told of the presentation of a memo regarding increased government support in various forms to Premier Duplessis, who was sympathetic and promised to study it seriously.

Financial reports were given by J. Y. Pilon, NFCUS secretary-treasurer, who also advised considerable reorganization of the administration.

The Toronto local committee expressed satisfaction with the "achievements during the past year, notably the art competition, the Massey Scholarship campaign and the exchange weekends." They regretted that the U. of T. is unable to pay fifty cents per student instead of only twenty.

prof. friedmann to address irc

"Germany, Europe, and the London Agreement" will be the topic of an address given by Professor W. G. Friedmann today, at 4 p.m. in Falconer Hall. He will speak to an open meeting of the International Relations Club.

During the war, Dr. Friedmann spent three years with the political department of the Foreign Office. He was on the Economic Reconstruction Administration of Western Germany under the Eisenhower Command.

Dr. Friedmann was then appointed to the chair of Public Law in Melbourne where he lectured for the three years immediately preceding his present appointment to the University of Toronto School of law.

HH Archery Club Welcomes Novice Champion Alike

The Hart House Archery Club will hold an organizational meeting in the Rifle Range tonight at 8:00 p.m. "The Club welcomes novice and champion alike," Wilf Perry, staff representative of the Archery Club said last night.

Equipment is provided for those members of the house who do not own their own. The Club meets twice a week during the year, Tuesday and Thursday evenings in the Rifle Range.

Monthly tournaments are held in the Drill Hall with other clubs participating.

Two teams from the Hart House Club entered the Canadian Indoor Male Match last year and finished fourth.

NFCUS Probes Student Silver

How many students leave University because of financial difficulties? During the next two weeks, the Government Scholarship Campaign Committee of NFCUS will be conducting surveys on this and other Canadian campuses to find this out.

A canvass will be made of students who left University. Questionnaires are being distributed through the NFCUS delegates to students in most Canadian Universities.

Studies will also be made of the costs of attending University, residence fees and tuition. Various colleges will be compared.

A telephone survey will be conducted later this week. Students of this University will be asked how much money they earned last summer.

Re: CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

The Ninth Series of Canada Savings Bonds is now being offered to Canadians by the Bank of Canada.

Herein is an opportunity to accumulate savings by means of an attractive investment and also to contribute to the public financing of our nation.

SIDNEY SMITH, President.

There have been provided for all members of the Staff of the University facilities to subscribe to Canada Savings Bonds, either for payment in full, or by the Payroll Savings Plan.

I would emphasize that these bonds are not subject to fluctuation of the markets and are redeemable at any bank at any time for the full purchase price plus earned interest.

Quality of Mercy

We note with great satisfaction that the Caput has not found it necessary to fine or suspend some engineer as a sop for the anger of certain citizens of this community.

However, their concept of responsible government is somewhat unique, if rather unrealistic.

They say that the Engineering Society must bear some corporate responsibility for the actions of the freshmen. Having established this principle they then proceed to suspend the activities of the Society.

Had they accorded the Society the measure of responsibility they try to appear to have expected from it, they would have left the disciplinary action in the hands of the executive.

The Engineering Society has been tried as a body for the misdeeds of some of its members. It has been tried by a body of its superiors, without recourse to rebuttal. It has been condemned and punished in a manner entirely without relation to the fundamental problem. In short they have not received the privileges accorded to a common criminal in the courts of this country.

While the quality of mercy remains unstrained, the quality of democracy is reaching the breaking point.

Empire Builders

The delegates to the conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students have been treated to some plain thinking and speaking in the first two days of their meeting.

In the first afternoon, the president, Tony Enriquez, pointed out clearly that they have come to either build or bury NFCUS.

Later the same day, Dr. Sydney Wax, formerly International Affairs Commissioner for the National Federation, described the organization as one without a cause.

If the members of the conference have any sense of their responsibility, they will not only applaud these words, as they have done with similar ones in the past, but they will stir themselves to action.

To hope blindly for improvement without a corresponding willingness to work is to build Utopia on the shifting sands of self-deceit.

Good or Acceptable

Unfortunately delegates to the Annual conference of the National Federation of University Students are again considering the sponsoring of what they call "cultural contests".

A careful consideration of the whole subject of contests would indicate to the delegates that such contests are both impractical, and lack a firm basis in principle.

We say that short story contests in particular are impractical because no one has the time or the facilities to conduct such a contest. The Canadian University Press, which, unlike NFCUS, has an efficient national organization, abandoned contests of any kind last year on the grounds that the results obtained were not worthy of the effort expended. The CUP reached this conclusion after three years of trial and error.

It can also be argued that cultural contests are conducted with no particular principle in mind. Art, unlike sport, does not thrive on competition. No one paints, writes, or creates anything better just for the sake of winning a prize. A man is either an artist or he is not. Prizes do not make him either more skillful or more imaginative. Besides "the very best", which contests are supposed to promote, can never win because selection is always a compromise between what is really good and what is acceptable.

We therefore urge the NFCUS delegates to give more consideration to the whole subject of contests. We further urge them to abandon such projects as impractical and unprincipled.—C.H.W.

Rearmament Revisited

We can go on to say that they have made obsolescent all former military thinking — in fine — have made obsolescent conventional military alliances.

The West and the Soviet bloc must realize that a future world war will not merely pick up where the last one ended. Bloody Anzios have yielded to cataclysmic atomic explosions. We and the Soviet Union must realize that today only two kinds of wars are possible — uprisings in depressed areas, which the Communists will inspire or absorb — or full-scale atomic war. The Communists have proved themselves experts in the art of the former, and in the face of the alternative will continue to use it with increased intensity. This method may be slow, but the World Revolution is in no hurry.

Our continued insistence on conventional rearmament in this situation betrays our natural inhibition to face the awful alternative. It becomes a sort of mental balm. We allow our thinking to travel on two levels — one in pre-atomic 1944, and the other in super-atomic 1954. We prefer our sanity to the continuing fear that, in reality, a new global war will mean the saturation of our urban areas with hydrogen bombs from across the top of the world. We cannot admit that the old way is gone — that now the only protection in the event of war is a deep hole in the wild northlands. We must pretend that sixty divisions in Europe can protect us. The alternative is to admit what we now only half fear. That would be a mental shock. S.A.S.

our readers write:

Open Letter to Tony Enriquez

Dear Tony:

We are just poor, humble College students and certainly are not clever enough to answer all those very important questions on International affairs like the one that was addressed to you in a recent copy of the "Varsity," i.e., "What blocked agreement between NFCUS & IUS such as IUS & NUS; UIS & NUAS." (At school we only learned the ABC's) But if we may be so bold as to suggest a practical plan for raising funds for scholarships. We suggest the following:

At $1.50 an hour doing some kind of worthwhile construction work you would make approx $3,000.00 a year, which would be enough to provide six (6) scholarships to needy students. To enlarge on this a little further, if about thirty students at each of eighteen Canadian Universities worked at an average of 100 hours during the school year which would ordinarily have been spent on arguing, discussing, pulling apart, putting together the operations of NFCUS, a tidy fund of $81,000.00 would be raised which would come close to covering the operating expenses of a small College.

Now I ask you Tony, what is the average University student getting for his money? A chance to read about our NFCUS reps taking junkets to Europe to be pally with the Communists and have a free summer at our expense?

Now like I say Tony, I am just a poor College student and do not understand the complexities of the International Student situation and I don't know the difference between IUS, NUS, UIS, NUAS etc., an infinitum, but I do know that the best way to raise money is to work for it. Want to try it Tony?

Sterile and Lifeless

In a recent Varsity, John Wilson lamented the lack of spirit at the stadium on Saturday. Other persons at other times have spoken on like themes. No more pep rallies, no more stadium shows, both before and during the games, no more hoofaraw and razzle dazzle. The undergraduates bear a certain amount of the blame for this lack. However, the spirit of this university and especially of the engineers has been crushed and perverted. We think you all know the identity of those chiefly responsible and we include among these: Pres. Smith; Pres. Rossall of the Engineering Society; and the stadium officials.

There are those who would have us show our spirit by entering into rousing (but serious) debates, by conducting solemn and serious elections and by conducting ourselves at all times as models of moral virtue.

This is all very well and doubtless has its place, but where is the colour, enthusiasm and vitality. Is Toronto to become sterile and lifeless, a place for "scholars" only? Are we to assume that extra-curricular activities should consist only of bridge parties and the like? Must spirit be so repressed and perverted that it must break out into uncontrollable riots as those we have witnessed?

Until such time as we are released from an imposed moral code that we do not believe in. Until such time as those who would control our thoughts and our actions exhibit a little more understanding and a little less public contempt for the undergraduate. And until such time as we can expose our college colours off the campus without being dubbed "vandals", "ignorant adolescents", "religious illiterates", et al; then, and only then, will we witness a renaissance of college spirit. We all want a university of which we can be proud. Do we have to transfer to Western or Queen's in order to find it?

As an open question to the undergraduate body: What is your reaction to the restrictions placed on the engineers at football games and elsewhere? Would you like to see a return of the colour that the engineers and other faculties and groups supplied?

La Esmeralda

Festival Ballet

The score was five to three Monday night in the Gardens as the London Festival Ballet presented La Esmeralda. The home team struggled valiantly and had three main assets on their side: capable dancing, good costuming and lively characterisation. On the side of the opposing team were size and weight. The Maple Leaf Gardens, even with its gilded stage and draperies, does not take the place of an opera-house, and La Esmeralda, for all its decorative icing still remains a heavy indigestible dish.

This romantic ballet taken from Hugo's The Hunchback of Notre Dame does not even have the distinction of other full-length ballets such as The Sleeping Beauty and Swan Lake. The story seems unsuitable to the silent dance medium, requiring a full page of explanation to make it hang together for the viewer. The music consists of all the most common phrases that have ever been put into ballet music strung together for the requirements of the action. With a few exceptions the dance variations themselves have little attractiveness to redeem the rest. On the whole it seems to have been a waste of time for this company to have run the gauntlet with this ballet, cloistered in Russia since 1844.

Tamara Toumanova is a great name in ballet — one of the famous 'ovas' in the History books. But Monday night she did not make more history. She appeared at her best in her gypsy dance of the first act, slinking sinuously around the stage and tossing her dark hair and dark looks in the face of every male in the company. In spite of an extraordinary strength on her toes she strained to accomplish her solos and pas de deux and her movements became uncontrolled and mannered.

John Gilpin who danced with her as the poet Gringoire (when the gypsy was faithful) gave an outstanding performance. His lightness, precision and brilliant turns showed to particular advantage in the attractive solos of the final act.

The staging itself is the greatest asset of the whole ballet. The costumes, by Nicolas Benois especially those of the "people" — peasants, pickpockets, thieves and other interesting figures — were designed with taste and imagination. The colours together made the company dancing look like a patched version of a Breughel painting. In the court scenes, too, the costumes were graceful and elegant.

The pizzicato solo of Violette Verdy as Fleur-de-Lyse in Act II and the Tarantella of Act III were two of the more attractive dances, but on the whole it was a good company wasted on a poor ballet.

Keith Backett as Quasimodo, the Hunchback, provided the one moment of real feeling in the whole ballet. After limping pathetically through two acts he knifes himself, straightens, and falls over, dead stiff.

CRITICS IN THE DARK

DRAGNET

The recent union of movies and television in Warner Bros. Dragnet, now at Toronto's University Theatre, is one Hollywood marriage that would do well to last. Different from the stock T.V. melodrama, Dragnet seems to be made of good stuff, cut neatly, and fresh, or maybe just crazy, in its approach.

Dragnet, the movie, will never win an Oscar, and neither will its actors, for the simple reason that, excepting Jack Webb, there are no actors worth noticing. The action is the important thing, and the people needed only to run about the screen in illustration of Webb's narration. Director Webb has made it a one-man show, casting himself as both star and narrator, giving the picture entirely through his own eyes which, of course, are the standard, all-seeing ones of the master-detective.

Blood and wit, a little of both from Webb, are the chief ingredients of Dragnet and, surprisingly they make up a tasty bit. One very nice close-up, right in the first scene, shows us the suffering victim, his blood spattered upon his piggy face, staggering into the camera as he drops dead. By the time the curtain cuts Dragnet off several more persons have done the same. This pattern is left, though, when one villain dies on an operating table, instead of under a rain of Webb's bullets.

As in the T.V. series, Dragnet on film is heavily underplayed and this is a good thing. Things move along rapidly, much is covered and pointless detail cut away. Despite the extremes of exaggeration in the film, most of it is quite believable, even the great hero, Joe Friday, terror of crooks and guardian of the innocent. Some of the action is just a bit misty, but that doesn't matter so long as the forces of law and order win out in the end.

Seeing the places Friday's work took him to, the people he met and the adventures he had, had me almost ready to take the police examinations, but Dragnet wasn't that realistic. The most appealing thing about police work, actually, was the stunning police woman, helping Friday to break the case. Not only was she brave and intelligent, but she was beautiful. Believe it or not, there was no romantic attachment for her in the movie. There wasn't time. Too much was happening to give the beauty anything but a brief glance and whistle.

APACHE

Well, I always wanted to review a Western, so I went down to Loew's the other day to have a look at Apache. Unfortunately, it turned out to be a bit of a hybrid, and not as interesting as gossip would have it. Cinema scuttlebutt had it that Apache was a sleeper—a film with a routine publicity campaign that turns out to be better than anyone had expected. In Apache, I could catch the glimmer of a story that might have been as memorable as The Southerner or Shane, but beyond that this film had little of real interest.

The human interest in the story of the last warrior Apache, Massai and his efforts to reconcile his desire for a warrior's life (and death) with the new economic demands made on his tribe when they are forced to settle in one place "and live like the white man" has great possibilities. Given a perceptive screenplay and a vivid directorial hand, Apache could have been a fine and engrossing piece of entertainment. But mired in laconic Hollywood-Indian talk and strained by the demands of "action-drama", Apache becomes routine, an impression immeasurably assisted by the wooden performances of Burt Lancaster and Jean Peters as Massai and his faithful squaw. Probably the basic reason for Apache's failure is its inability to reconcile the demands of the action picture and the drama. Maybe if they'd done it up as a typical cowboy and Indian epic it might have been more impressive. But the makers of Apache didn't, and Apache therefore isn't, and I guess I'll just wait around for a revival of Stagecoach.

Gentlemen Prefer

PEROXIDE

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, is presented by a travelling company. I hope they go far, soon.

Based on a book by Anita Loos, describing a gold-digger of the Twenties, The Blonde is a spotty arrangement of songs and dances, most of which manage to be smutty, none too entertaining. This play was supposed to have been a great success on Broadway and even, on previous occasions, in Toronto, so maybe this lemon is entirely the fault of the cast.

Jet MacDonald, in the lead role of Lorelei Lee, is known to Toronto for her appearances at the Press Club and, last summer, at Melody Fair, in Brigadoon. She could do with more time in summer stock. As Lorelei she hammed The Blonde to excess, overplaying her part till it hurt. Miss MacDonald seemed to be trying very hard to give a caricature of the gold-digging heroine, but she turns out, not even amusing, just ridiculous.

Not even Sex is appealing when messy, and, in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, it is slopped carelessly about the stage. In her "Little Girl from Little Rock" number, Jet MacDonald bumps along the boards, whining about the one who done her wrong. This is not suggestive — it's forthright and unmistakable. Her whole performance seems an effort to hide inadequacy behind a nice figure. It doesn't go over.

With the best roles written for the women in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, it is ironic that the best performances should be given by the males in supporting parts. Unfortunately there were only a few numbers for the men to really do things in. Walter Long playing Lorelei's "Daddy", comes through with several soft shoe and tap dances, as well as some well-delivered songs. I am not sure whether he was actually good, or whether he just looked that way compared with Jet MacDonald's poor work.

Musicals are not designed for depth or thoughtful approach, still they ought to move on some solid theme. Gentlemen Prefer Blondes does not. The exploits of Lorelei and her chaperone Dorothy, are broken often by unconnected asides, involving dancers, a married aristocratic couple, a health fiend and two queer French lawyers, which thread uselessly in and out of the plot.

Janet Picarde, as Gloria Stark, a dancer, did the choreography and she made it all quite meaningless. I saw no connection between her dance with a hackie and the story, except that both took place in Paris. Miss Picarde's lines came out stiffly, as much underplayed as Jet MacDonald's were overdone.

Now, for the songs. If Jet MacDonald and Adrienne Angel, Dorothy Shaw in the play, could sing and the orchestra would play softly enough for them to be heard, the music could be very pleasant. The show's best number is Lawrason Riggs, singing Just a Kiss Apart. The rest, except for an ensemble version of the Homesick Blues, are brassy and miss by far. All this is set against a simple background of props that add little to the show and are probably disposable. They should be.

All in all, though, The Blonde is just another peroxide job.

sheila henig sings at hart house

Sheila Henig, pianist, will play at the first of the 1954-55 series of Wednesday five o'clock concerts in Hart House.

Miss Henig was born in Winnipeg twenty years ago and has been studying in Toronto with Margaret Miller Brown for ten years at the Conservatory of Music. During this period she has given several concerts, including concerts at the Canadian Exhibition, the Toronto Art Gallery and CBC-TV.

This November she is to make her debut with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra at Massey Hall in the Secondary School Concert Series.

Her program today includes the Sonata, Op. 53 of Beethoven, Suite Bergamasque of Debussy, and Liszt's Funeralles. Members of Hart House and women of the University are invited to attend.

"Guilty! Guilty! Guilty!" Rubashov makes his forced false confession in this scene from DARKNESS AT NOON, the anti-Communist drama which opens a week's run at Hart House Theatre on Saturday night, under the direction of Robert Gill. Donald Sutherland as Gletkin, Robert Shirriff as Rubashov.

INTERCOL TRACK TODAY

Varsity Men Favored To Take Track Honors

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MOISHE REITER

Join the Blue and White Band and see Canada—at your own expense.

This is the fine offer made to any Varsity types talented enough to play an instrument, and eager enough to practice several hours a day, to follow the Blues around on their trips, always working, seldom with a good view of the game, but always with a strong spirit of loyalty to the U. of T.

But lest anyone accuse me of saying that no one ought to join the Varsity Band, let me just list some of the advantages to be gained by doing so.

First, a member of the Band never has to worry about hotel accommodation on a football trip. He sleeps in a nice railroad coach both ways on the weekend. Neither does he have to worry about food, unless he wants to eat. If he does, then the Blue and White dole of a sandwich or two before the game, may not be enough.

Another good thing about playing in the Blue and White Band is that you have a chance to carry on Varsity's great traditions. For example, a Band member is allowed to play the same instruments as were handled by the legendary men of antiquity. Some scoffers may say that these instruments are past their prime but such piddling matters concern us not.

There are some people on this campus who are dissatisfied with the Band. They say that the Band should be outstanding, after all, they are representatives of the University of Toronto, Canada's greatest. But, how are they to be good when they have so little incentive, are treated as second-raters, and have so little done for them.

This Band, with its 42 members, has a yearly allotment of $1,000 dollars. From that amount subtract rail fares for three away games and you have almost enough left to buy those luscious sandwiches for their feed. The rest probably goes in cleaning bills at the end of the year, to get the uniforms neat and impressive-looking for the next year's Bandsmen.

So, what more do the Bandsmen deserve? I believe they deserve at least as much as the other groups in the Intercollegiate Conference receive, and that's a good deal more than the Varsity types are getting.

The men from McGill, Western and Queens are given hotel money, meal money and their other expenses are looked after. They do not have to sleep in coaches, eat sandwiches and pay their own uniform-cleaning bills during the season. In short, they are treated in accordance with the work they do.

The Blue and White people I've talked with agree that this is bad, but they say it's not their fault, and suggest that someone else take the rap. It might be the Athletic Association, but these people are the ones who give the thousand dollars in the first place, and no one has to ask them for it. It seems they realize the value of the Band and are willing to help keep it going. Who's going to start criticising them? Not this column.

As the situation stands, you have to be crazy to play in the band. Be a cheerleader instead. No training is needed for that, no talent, and you have it soft.

Join the Varsity Band? Anyone—anyone at all?

Changes In Lineup

With changes being made throughout the lineup, Varsity Blues are being reinforced with players back from the injury list for their coming game with the McGill Redmen. This will be the first chance for the Blues to pick up some easier points than they've had with the Mustangs and Gaels. So far this season the Blues have a loss and a tie to their credit and are set far back in third place. This weekend will be their chance to surge back into the running. It's a home and home series with the Redmen—in Montreal Saturday and back here the next week.

Weakness of an old shoulder injury has pulled end Ted Lansky from the lineup for Saturday's game, but Frank Palermo is back uniform and will fill in for the injured Lansky. Palermo, who has been having trouble with his legs for the past two years, will make his first appearance in the Blue squad this season and will probably be one of the Blues' strongest, just as he was two years ago.

The inside linebacker post of the Varsity defensive setup is being strengthened by the addition of Fred Papsin, former Toronto High School star and more recently a star with an Ohio College. Papsin will work on the offense at the fullback spot and, though he is a little rusty on the plays, this being his first time with the team, should be able to use his size and deceptive-ness to great advantage.

Red Wismer is back at centre for Varsity and this takes a good part of the load from the shoulders of John Prendergast. Other players, Walt Radzik, Bill Beamish, and Alex Macklin are starting to come through the way they were expected to, and this bodes nothing but ill for the already downtrodden McGill Redmen. Fred Smale has been a regular mauler in practice this week and it is only in the interests of their safety to warn the Redmen to stay away from him come Saturday.

Another end returning to the Blue lineup is Tennis star Harry Hall, whose fleet feet make him a threat to all opposition.

This is it . . . The sports spectacle of the year, will be on this afternoon in Varsity stadium. Not one, but two, track meets, run concurrently, will be the main attraction, but that isn't all, there will also be music supplied by the band and cartwheels by the cheerleaders, blazers and all.

All the entries have now been received from the other Universities who are taking part in the meet. These include entries from Waterloo College, Guelph Agricultural College, McMaster, Ryerson and Toronto in the Intermediate competition, and Westin the Senior. Toronto is the defending champions in both divisions.

Many of the athletes competing in the Senior Meet are event winners of previous years. One, Queens, McGill and Toronto of the most prominent of these Champions is Lionel Whitman of McGill. Lionel set a record in the shot put last year with a throw of 46 feet. This year John Ramsell will be his chief competition. John recently set a new interfaculty record of just under 44 feet and should give the McGill athlete a lot of trouble.

Queen's is featuring Jim MacDougall, last year's winning three miler. This promises to make the three mile one of the most interesting events of the afternoon, since Varsity's entry, Herb Tilson, is also a former winner in this event.

Western's team shows a large percentage of freshmen, two of the better ones hale from Toronto. These are Neil Desborough and Dave Russel, both formerly of the East York track club. Matched against Varsity's Dick Harding and Clint Husband in the sprint events, these men should make the afternoon interesting.

Other Varsity athletes who are expected to do well this afternoon are Norm Williams and Bob Hamilton, who placed one-two in both hurdle events last year. Peter Watson, who came second in the half mile last year rates a good chance of winning the event this year.

The mile event should also be interesting with both Varsity's entries, Bill Gelling and Bill Eckersley rated as top contenders, along with MacDougall of Queens. One of the mystery events is the hundred yards. Larry Yiegh, who captained Varsity's team last year, and won the event has graduated, leaving the event wide open. However, Varsity runners, Dick Harding and Monte Harris are favoured in the event.

There will be many more athletes at the Stadium tomorrow, and the outcome is impossible to predict, so come out at 1.00 p.m. and see the meets.

Masterson Pins Hopes On Veteran Oneschuk

Steve Oneschuk, 23-year-old graduate of PHE, is in his last year at the University of Toronto, attending OCE. When the time arrives for Steve to depart, a gaping wound will be left in the Varsity backfield.

Very rarely does a university acquire such a gifted ballplayer as Oneschuk. The St. Kitts triple-threat is an exception to the general run of football specialty boys of today. The Blues co-captain is always the player under the closest scrutiny of the opposition as he is a key man in the Varsity attack.

Steve, stuck with the handle of "Onch" by his team-mates, leaves the University in the spring to begin a new career as a mathematics and science teacher in Hamilton. This locale will be quite convenient for the Blues high-scorer, as he has been drafted by the Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Big Four. There are many about the campus who don't think the clever halfback will have too much trouble matching wits and brawn with the likes of Tex Coulter, Sam Etcheverry, Jack Carpenter, and Avatus Stone.

Oneschuk stands 5' 10½" and weighs 177 pounds. He began his football days in St. Catharines playing at end, following in his brother Mike's footsteps. Steve hopes to return to St. Catharines to teach high school and eventually he aspires to become a football coach.

The versatile Varsity half doubles as a basketball Blue guard in the winter. Steve's versatility doesn't end there either. While at school in the Garden City, he went out west as a defenceman with the St. Kitts lacrosse team.

Steve might be classified as one of the most durable players in the Intercollegiate league. Two years ago he had a cartilage removed from his knee, the result of an off-balance block in the Western game in the fall of 1952.

Last year a severe shoulder separation handicapped Oneschuk, but so far this year he has avoided the misfortune of injury.

Asked about his greatest football thrill, Steve proceeded to draw a parallel between high school and College ball. "In high school," he said, "the glory, the excitement, and the thrills are usually reserved for the individual; but in College, the players get their thrills from team efforts and all-out performances in every game by everyone."

In keeping with this analogy, Steve Oneschuk is a true thrill-a-minute football player.

St. Mike's Gals 6-1 Over PHE

Backed by the 3-hit pitching of Anne Kotze, St. Mike's won a decisive 6-1 victory over P.H.E. II yesterday afternoon at the stadium. The Phys. Ed. girls were very good defensively, but seemed to lack batting power, with the exception of Manuella's deep triple in the second frame. This resulted in their only run.

For St. Mike's, Moira Cockell was again the heroine with a 3-run homer in the second inning. Cathy Murphy and Ann Manuel also did well at the plate for the double-blue and Marianne Flaherty was outstanding in the field.

For P.H.E., Agnew and Sproula fared well at the plate, while Van Marshall and Seaman played well defensively.

Blues' Fred Smale Rookie Scoring Threat

A certain man, Mr. Griffiths, has the uncanny ability to develop inexperienced but well coordinated men into good footballers. Mr. Griffiths, of course, is the senior football coach, at Humberstone Collegiate. The particular inexperienced player to be discussed now is Fred Smale.

In his high school years Fred's main interest in sports was track. At Humberstone he ran the 440 and 880. In his last year however, Fred's interest turned to football. It seems odd that a man who had had only one year of football background on entering Varsity could be one day recognized as one of the top ends in the Intercollegiate League. Nevertheless, because of the excellent training given him by Mr. Griffiths and, also, because of his strong desire to play, Fred has become an irreplaceable in the Varsity line-up.

Let us look at his record. At Humberstone he scored four touchdowns. After a year of ball on the Engineering squad, Fred became a member of the Toronto Balmy Beaches. The next part will amaze you. In his third year of football he scored eight touchdowns.

Of course, some of you might say that scoring does not necessarily indicate a good ball player. As anyone on the Varsity squad will tell you Fred takes a second seat to no one in the blocking department. This ability to block, and the ability to snare a pass have made him a threat to all opponents.

Fred's biggest thrill occurred when he was playing for the Beaches. At Windsor he scored four touchdowns in one game.

This is his second year with the Blues. Last year, unfortunately he was hampered with injuries that kept him out of most of the games.

His opinion concerning the Blue's future progress is that they will definitely beat Queens next time, and will probably beat Western.

Fred is married, has a boy three months old. A Mechanical Engineering student, Fred would be interested in a professional football contract, providing a job in the off-season accompanied the offer.

Baby Blues Undefeated Pupsin, Palermo Shifted

With the team well launched toward its fourth consecutive league championship, spirit runs high in the Varsity Intermediate's camp. Undefeated since their single loss to O.A.C. during the '51 season, the Baby Blues are driving for their third undefeated year.

Bogged down until the second half against Queens Saturday, the Seconds then began to roll and show the offensive power coach Kennedy has strived to attain. Help, both offensively and defensively, reached the squad in the form of Santo Martini and Ted Lansky from the Seniors. Martini, originally a tackle by trade but used at guard by the Blues, will revert to the tackle spot where line coach Jack Roberts feel he will be most valuable. Lansky and Pastushak will be teamed as the defensive ends in the coming clash with Ryerson.

Injured as well as Bill McKenna against Queens was tackle John Igar. Suffering a badly twisted ankle both he and McKenna will not dress for Friday's game, but are expected to go against Western the following week-end. Also lost to the Intermediates, although not through injuries is Fred Papsin. Having returned to action only last week Papsin has been called up to aid the Blues.

Victorious over the Ryerson Ram 11-0 in their previous encounter, the Baby Blues will be out to widen the margin this week. The game is shaping up as a stepping stone to the big game with Western's Colts the following Friday. Western, by all indications, looms as the big threat in the Intermediates title hunt.

Top topic of conversation in the Second's dressing room Tuesday evening was not of the teams outstanding accomplishments, but of those of the coaching staff. Line coach Jack Roberts became the gurgling parent of a gurgling baby girl Tuesday, following by only four weeks a duplicate accomplishment by coach John Kennedy.

POT Gals Win

Backed by a bevy of strong hitters P.O.T. defeated VIC II yesterday.

Mural Bill

There were two soccer games on tap yesterday in Intramural play. The first game saw Law and Forestry battle to a scoreless draw. In the second game Vic trounced SR. SPS by the tune of 5 to 0. Norm Sexton was top scorer netting three goals while F. Shuttleworth and D. Wood hit for one goal each.

St. Mike's A team defeated Med II in boxla action by the score of 9 to 2. T. P. Wheeler was the big gun for St. Mike's as he hit for four goals. Team mates Stock, McKinnon, McDougall, Gagnon, and Tighe each added singletons. Don Robertson and Paul Grose scored for the losers.

with strong pitching on both sides.

In the second inning Mary Marg O'Neill, P.O.T., hit a beautiful triple driving home Sandy Weler and Doreen Fogarty, while Shirley Bernard, VIC, scored for VIC to make the score 3-2.

The top of the third saw P.O.T. go down 1-2-3, saved only by Helen Alves' home run: while VIC went down in the batting order. VIC played three innings with only seven players, until reinforced by two more.

P.O.T. had a batting spree in the fourth with six runs scored, two of them homers by Mary Bodrug, and Sandy Weller. VIC scored two more runs, and the game ended 11-4.

Jay Taylor and Shirley Bernard were outstanding for the losers, while Helen Alves and Noreen Cossar starred for the winners.

Trinity Wins Archery

This year the interfaculty archery award went to Trinity College. Ladies Scoring a high of 588, the Trinity squad made up of Doreen Toland and Kay Sladen managed to cop the Silver Arrow, the award given to the college or faculty with the top score in the annual event.

The meet, scheduled to take place last Thursday and Friday was only partially played off and had to be continued Monday, due to (unfavourable) weather.

Vic, represented by Sheila Curran and Nadia Jablonske scored second spot with a total of 439. This squad was closely followed by Claire McMullin and Johanna Jaciw of UC who tallied 432.

A score of 323 gave PHE seconds the fourth spot. Another PHE pair, Mary Kirby and Agnes Thomas finished fifth with 316.

Kay Sladen, who this year is heading archery on the campus made the high tally of the meet scoring a total of 320. She has been awarded the gold arrow for this achievement.

Demand Student's Jack For New SHARE Attack

The Student Help for Asian Relief and Education, better known as SHARE, will be making its annual appeal for funds to the students of the University of Toronto, in the week of Nov. 1st to 7th. The SHARE committee, under the chairmanship of Barry Cook, is already planning the campaign.

For some years, these campaigns, sponsored by the World University Service, have been directed toward Material aid to the Universities of Southeast Asia, an area which, to our North American point of view, has an unbelievably low standard of living. Sickness, poverty and starvation are rampant. The illiteracy rate is 85%. WUS firmly believes that it is the duty, and the privilege of those of us in happier circumstances to give all the help we can to these impoverished parts of humanity.

Today, the Universities of the more highly developed countries of Asia are playing a leading role in the development of these areas and in the relief of the suffering. They represent, in fact, advancing standards of living in their respective countries. However, the conditions of the universities are as distressing as those of the societies in which they are situated and whom they seek to serve. A Conference of Student Health held in recent years, revealed that the percentage of students in a state of ill-health is shockingly high. Tuberculosis is an especially prevalent and crippling enemy.

Although economic aid is primarily the responsibility of government and business, university communities can accomplish a great deal. WUS, because of its character and nature, feels that it can offer a program for direct and constructive action. During the past year, this program has accomplished:

1. Prefabricated housing units for students in Egypt and Israel.

2. 189 scholarships for Greek students, 83 food grants and 46 clothing grants.
3. The sending of $5,000 ($4,786 raised in Canada) towards the construction of the Delhi Centre, India.
4. Construction of the first student TB ward in Japan.
5. $50,000 worth of drugs and medical supplies for Korean students.
6. One month of rest cures in the WUS Chalet in the French Alps, for 600 recuperating students of 30 nationalities.

There is still much to be done, however. WUS's international program will require $156,250 this year. They hope that Canada, as in the past, will take a powerful lead.

VARSITY WINS TRACK CROWN

Dig And Dive

Running to victory in the Intercollegiate Dual Meet run off yesterday at Varsity Stadium are Dick Harding at left, and Norm Williams at the right. Both were in the right though, yesterday, when they took on the best of the Eastern Universities and bested them in fine form. Winning three of the meet events apiece, both Harding and Williams led the Varsity point-getting efforts and pulled apart the opposition. Harding also starred in the relay.

Harding, Williams Up Win Three Events Each

Harding and Williams pushed Varsity to their second successive winning of the Tait Mackenzie trophy, yesterday, in the forty-seventh annual Intercollegiate Track meet. Dick Harding was co-receiver of the Hec Phillips for his efforts as he won the 100, 220 and 440 events and then ran the last leg of the mile relay. Norm Williams also was a three event winner. His list of achievements included first place in both the high and low hurdle events and first place in the broad jump.

In spite of the poor weather conditions, times were fast in nearly all of the events. Only one record was broken in the Senior competition. This was the shot-put mark, broken by Lionel Whitman, who held the previous record. His mark of 48'8½" was far superior to his last year's record of 46'9" and compares with some of the best in Canada.

This record-breaking throw was good for a half share in the Hec Phillips trophy, since the silverware was awarded to both Harding and Whitman. In the discus event Whitman was again successful as he won with a throw of 129'11" which was somewhat short of the record of 135'10".

Queen's were the surprise team of the meet, as they placed second in the total point standing. The Gaels had two firsts with John McDougal winning the mile in the very good time of 4:31; only 4/10 of a second from the record. John ran the legs off his opposition all the way as he fought off Varsity's Bill Eckersley and McGill's Gill in the first two quarters and then outkicked Buck from Western and Gelling from Toronto in the final gap.

Queen's other outstanding performer was Berry, who won the pole vault with a jump of 11'8". As well as these ten points, Queen's managed to pile up 33 more with their second and third places.

McGill managed an upset in the 880 event, as Reid defeated the favourite, Peter Watson of Varsity to win, in 1:59. Watson led during the whole race, then faded in the last 80 yards as Reid finished very strongly. Another McGill victory appeared in the high jump, won by Robert Poore with a jump of 5'10".

Herb Tilson of Toronto ran one of the most outstanding events of the afternoon, winning the three mile event in the time of 15:25.8. Herb won the event by ¾ of a lap, after lapping a large part of the field.

Varsity's John Chisholm won the javelin with a throw of 160'6". Bettering his mark of last week by 10 feet but was still wide of the record, held by Coach Hal Brown.

Only one record was broken in the Intermediate competition. This was the medley relay record broken by McMaster whose team ran the distance in 3:24.6. The only other outstanding time in the Intermediate was the 2:04.6 run by Long of Ryerson.

McMaster won the Gohlrie Trophy in their first year in Intermediate competition. In previous years McMaster has been in the Senior division. However, this year they decided that the competition was becoming too stiff for them—now they seem too stiff for the Intermediate league.

Discus: L. Whitman (M), J. Ramsell (T), P. Fedor (Q), R. Hutchison (W) 129'11".
Pole Vault: B. Berry (Q), B. Land (M), D. Turnbull (Q), W. Findlay (M) 11'8".

International Commission Approves IUS Membership

A vote of the International Affairs Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students would make the national federation a member of the International Union of Students next year.

The motion by Queen's University recognized that student unity was essential to international understanding. It went on to declare that the NFCUS should send a delegation with observer status to the next council of IUS.

The final recommendation of the motion was that this delegation be empowered to accept membership in the IUS. This acceptance would be on the basis of the conditions laid down in the report of the three NFCUS observers to the conference in Moscow last August.

Antonio Enriquez, Charles Taylor, and Jean de Margerie submitted a unanimous report to the conference. In their report were laid down certain basic conditions without which NFCUS could not join IUS. It was these recommendations which were used as the basis for the motion by Queen's.

Four conditions were stipulated, without which NFCUS would not join IUS, and four other conditions which NFCUS would endeavour to have implemented once they had been accepted into the union.

The four conditions of membership are a clarification of the IUS' constitution with respect to membership in the organization, a removal of the international headquarters to some neutral country, the restriction of IUS activities to issues pertaining to "students as such", and the establishment of an agreed procedure of documentation.

If the decision of the International Affairs Commission is ratified in Plenary session today or tomorrow the NFCUS would be committed to a policy which would actively encourage membership in IUS.

Statement To Student Body

The official report of the Caput contained a clause which "suspended forthwith" the Constitution of the Engineering Society. The exact nature and effect of this decision is not yet clear.

There would seem little doubt that the actions of these irresponsible students demanded a penalty. At the same time, the matter of the specific penalty presented a problem of no mean proportions.

It is perhaps a healthy sign that such a decision regarding the affairs of student government arouses, on first impression, a feeling of indignation among the student body. However, it would be unwise to think that the Caput did not appreciate this situation.

May I assure you that the S.A.C. fully intends to investigate and report on the implications of this action. To this end, you are asked to evaluate critically the entire situation from the point of view of principle and practical necessity, and from the point of view of university administration and student. Your opinions so formulated will be sought at the S.A.C. meeting of Wednesday, October 27th.

Plan Flood Relief Canvass Will Cover Campus Friday

"Friday will be flood-relief day at the University of Toronto.

It was announced yesterday that a special tag-day to help victims of the $10-million hurricane flood which is reported to have left over 3,000 Toronto-area residents homeless, would begin in earnest tomorrow.

An announcement from the "Student Service" committee of the Students' Administrative Council said "every building and student" would be canvassed.

Meanwhile, Chairman Barry Cooke of SHARE — a relief fund for overseas students — announced last night that the organization's scheduled fund-raising drive would be postponed until February, "in the light of the present flood-relief emergency."

Three depots will be set up to accept donations in tomorrow's drive. They will be: The Students' Administrative Council office opposite University College, Falconer Hall, and the Engineering stores.

Three faculties and colleges will be responsible for tagging during the day, an SAC spokesman said.

Donations will go through SAC to Toronto's Hurricane Relief Fund.

E. A. MacDonald, the secretary-treasurer of SAC said receipts would be given for "every nickel donated to the flood relief fund."

Two other groups were reported willing to turn over monies to the fund. First was the Blue and White's big Homecoming Weekend dance, profits of which, it was said, would be turned into the relief fund.

University College's Literary Society was also planning a flood-relief dance: "square" and "round" dancing Friday night in the George drill hall.

As the sixth day of searching for an estimated 24 persons lost during the storm and restoring damage dawned, today, University students were being asked to lend a hand.

About 100 engineering students got dispensation, it was reported, from lectures yesterday to help the army in distressed flood-areas and from Victoria College, 60 students climbed into trucks donated by a brewery company and headed for hard-hit Woodbridge.

The Vic students worked from 10 a.m., cleaning cellars and trying their best to restore some sort of order to trailers which had been tossed about like matchsticks.

Members of the Canadian Red Cross, were reported to have set up kitchen in Woodbridge United Church, where the students were given two free meals. Bruce Stewart and Richard Newman, two Vic students, were given credit for organizing the work-party.

Jackson Addresses Liberal Arts Club

A. Y. Jackson, the eminent Canadian painter, will address the Victoria College Liberal Arts Club at their opening meeting to-night at 8:00 in the music room at Wymilwood.

One of the founders of the Group of Seven in Canadian Art, Mr. Jackson is especially known for his paintings of Canadian landscapes.

Mr. Jackson will address the club on some aspect of Canadian Art, and discussion will follow.

IUS Gen. Secretary Jiri Pelikan III

Jiri Pelikan, general secretary for the International Union of Students has been taken ill, and will not be attending the present conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Mr. Pelikan was to have presented the position of IUS in the present discussion of possible NFCUS membership in that organization.

The information regarding Mr. Pelikan's inability to come was received in telegrams delivered to Antonio Enriquez, the national president and Lewis Perinbam, executive co-secretary of WUS.

The Varsity:

To Whom it may concern:

After being shocked by the headlines of Wednesday's Varsity, we feel that there are several questions requiring immediate answers. We ask:

1. Has the University the right to impose a fine?
2. How can the University fine a Society which it has disbanded?

3. Has this Society had the chance to defend itself, and if not, by what means can any case be put forward now if no Engineering Student organization exists.

4. What is the duration of this suspension?

5. If it is a permanent suspension, can a new Student governing body for the faculty be formed?

Since it has been well demonstrated that the Engineering Society has $4000, and since, in the eyes of the Caput there is nothing wrong in taking money from people who have it, why not donate the loot to the flood fund, Share or some other worthy charity? This would dispel any suspicion that the University wanted the boodle simply to gladden its own money grabbing little heart.

Twice this year the officials of this university have rejected student government.

The first occasion was the refusal of the Board of Governors to grant the fee increase approved by the Students' Administrative Council. The second was the suspension of the Engineering Society by the Caput.

It is apparent that these officials are not interested in maintaining truly responsible student government.

What they clearly want is a group of people who will undertake the chores of student government without raising any issues, or discomfiting them in any way.

It seems that every time student governments are in a serious situation where they could measure up to their responsibility, officialdom refuses to allow them to decide their own fate, or refuses to accept their decisions as representing the will of the students they represent.

If the concept of responsible student government is robbed of meaning by the feudal attitude of the university officials every time a crucial issue arises there is little hope of impressing upon the students the benefits of "democratic" government.

While we condemn the behaviour of the freshmen of the Engineering faculty, we are aghast at this monstrous rejection of the principle of responsible government, by the administrative and academic heads of this university.

Black Panthers Pounce Win In Second Straight

Trinity defeated a decidedly weak SPS II team on the back campus yesterday to the merry tune of 19-5. Trinity now takes a strangle hold on first place in the second division standings. Peter Gordon was the big gun for Trinity with seven points to his credit. Toby Barwick and Gerry Aziz got the other touchdowns. Hugh Barthwick got the lone SPS major.

The game started out in a rough manner but the referees were able to cool tempers on both teams. Neither team scored in the first quarter but SPS began to show signs of inexperience as they handled the ball only twice for successive downs.

Trinity started the second quarter when John Whyte tossed a short pass to D. Smith which was good for five yards. A Whyte to Gordon pass brought Trinity to the SPS sixteen yard line. From there White connected on a long pass to Barwick in the end zone. The convert was no good. On the last play of the half Gordon kicked a single by kicking the ball over the SPS deadline. Immediately prior to this Whyte had tossed a pass into the end zone which both Bill Lovering and Barwick seemed to catch but they collided with one another and the pass was ruled incomplete.

Trinity started out the second half by promptly scoring a major when Whyte tossed to Gordon. Trinity kicked off again and an SPS fumble gave Trinity the ball in deep SPS territory. Whyte gave the ball to Aziz on an end run which was good for a major.

The bright spot in the SPS side of the game was in the last quarter as SPS started to roll when SPS culminated a seventy yard march with a touchdown by Hugh Barthwick. Hewson and Patterson starred for SPS in this last ditch attempt to pull the game out of the fire. Gordon's and Jim Brown's kicks kept SPS at bay for the most part and finally with SPS on their own four yard line a bad snap gave Trinity a safety touch.

Softball

There was never any doubt about the outcome of the girls' softball game yesterday as St. Mike's walloped Meds to the tune of — hold your hats — 17-4.

Two walks and a single loaded the bases at the start of the first inning. Then Moira Cawkell stepped up to the plate and hammered out a triple. A home run off the bat of Cathy Murphy followed. From this point on it was just a question of how many runs St. Mike's could crowd into the limited playing time. In this inning they managed a total of six. Two infield hits, a walk and an error produced a single run for the Meds gals in the bottom half of the first frame. Eileen Dillon did a good job in the pitcher's box for St. Mike's.

The slaughter continued in the second inning when eleven runs crossed the plate. Five walks, five singles, an error and a homer spelled the end for Meds. Moira Cawkell hit a single and a homer in this inning for a perfect day at the plate.

With all the tension gone the Meds team finally started to hit, but it was too late to do any good.

Will all the sportswriters at present working for the Varsity please come down to the office at 1:15 today to pick up their assignments for next week. Will the sports photographers please be there also.

Friedmann Speaks To IRC Assess London Agreement

"The London Agreement is an important event in the history of international relations. It is especially significant to those who have lived consciously through the years after the last war." Professor W. G. Friedmann thus began his address to the International Relations Club yesterday in Falconer Hall. His subject was "Germany, Europe and the London Agreement."

Professor Friedmann explained the Agreement, which was recently signed in London by several European countries, including France, Germany and Great Britain. It will be a landmark in the history of Germany. Subject to ratification of the Governments of the countries concerned, Germany will be admitted to the Brussels Pact. This is a military alliance which was signed by inland European countries in 1948. It has been rather overshadowed by the more ambitious North Atlantic Treaty Organization, but it is the nucleus of Atlantic defence. One of the advantages most tangible to Canada was the abolition of visas in these countries for all British subjects. This marks the first time since the war that Germany has been permitted to participate in any military alliance.

Dr. Friedmann then proceeded to a discussion of the now defunct Eastern Defence Community. It was to be a much more closely-knit group than the present one. It was France who rejected the EDC, because they feared it gave Germany too much power.

"I believe that the London Agreement is the only practical plan for European unity, not second to, but preferable to EDC," Dr. Friedmann summed up his talk by discussing the Agreement from Britain's point of view. The fact that she has agreed to maintain force in Europe as long as she is needed indicates that she has begun to give up her isolationist policy. It may keep West Germany out of Soviet, and in Western hands.

A discussion period followed Dr. Friedmann's talk.

Henig In Hart House

Sheila Henig is one of those unfortunate pianists who seem to be blind to their own failings. This was painfully obvious in the work with which she opened the five o'clock Wednesday recital at Hart House — Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 53 (Waldstein).

Admittedly, she was handicapped by a piano that was in very poor condition, and in addition my seat was too close to the piano, with the result that her tone seemed too loud.

However, even when all this is taken into account, her performance of the Sonata was poor. She began nervously, and even when she had settled down, her tempo was erratic.

But my major criticism was that she played it in a dull, uninspired fashion. Her whole conception seemed wrong.

There was a surprising improvement in her performance of Debussy's Suite Bergamasque. Her tempo was still erratic but it is easier to get away with it when playing Debussy. The last movement, Passepied, was especially well-played. The performance of Liszt's Funerailles, was even better.

Miss Henig ended the recital with an encore — Delibes' Will O' the Wisp. Surprisingly, this was the best performance given.

From Miss Henig's performances in this recital, one cannot avoid the conclusion that the quality of her playing is inversely proportional to the musical content of the work. Let us hope that she can correct this.

Tea Totaler's Delight

Since the beginning of this term, several of the faculties have been so thoughtful as to arrange receptions, at which the students might meet their professors socially and chat with them informally. This is indeed a gracious gesture on the part of the faculty members; and is duly appreciated by most students. I feel, however, that I am not sufficiently versed in the usages of polite society to appreciate a reception tea as much as I ought to do; so I hope that some kind reader will enlighten me on the reasons for various procedures which feature this kind of event.

Let us review briefly what goes on at a tea. Dressed in your best, you approach the door of the tea-room, where perhaps someone has the foresight to fix you up with a name-tag for your lapel, and in you go. Just inside the door are lined up five or six men and women who surely deserve a better fate. The first welcomer greets you with as radiant a smile as he can muster up, and declares that it is so nice to see you there. Having shaken hands with you, he turns to his wife, and says in a tone which seems to promise a delightful surprise, "My dear, let me present—Mr. Uhuh."

His lady rises to the occasion by smiling vigorously, shaking two of your fingers with two of hers, and averring that it is so nice to see you there. So it is, in a way; you represent one more guest of her quota, so she is one nearer the end of her stint. She hands you on to the next smiling sufferer, and so you go on until by the end of the receiving line you are convinced that it is really unaccountably nice to be seen there.

Having ascertained this, your next step is to get a cup of tea so you can show how daintily you can balance it in a crowd. You approach a table where each end is graced with an ornate silver urn, from which a lady is filling fragile cups with a fragrant brown liquid. In the presence of these ladies a sense of awe comes over me; I feel as if I should bow, or genuflect in front of the urn, or do something to express my feeling. For I understand that it is a staggering honour to be asked dearest friends to get the chance to preside at the tea-urns; so I hesitate to approach other than reverently such an exalted personage as a Lady Who Pours. She, however, smiles graciously from her dizzy height of fashion, and hands me a dainty bit of Spode which is probably worth more than I am. An inferior priestess of the rite rushes up and offers me cream and sugar, and just as I am pouring the cream, somebody charges past and jiggles my elbow.

Never mind; once provided with tea and a tasty sandwich the size of a postage stamp, you are ready to proceed to conversation. Here you are helped by more noble souls, who exhort you to come and meet Miss So-and-so, a most interesting person; whereupon you and she engage in the delicate game which includes (1) balancing the tea-cups in the crowd, as aforesaid; (2) making a fashionable sandwich or cookie last out more than two bites; (3) making polite conversation when neither of you gives two hoots for the other, agreeing that the weather is foul and the tea is delightful, exchanging details of course, and saying "I'm sure I shall enjoy this year so much; well, so lovely to have met you, see you later".

By now the room is full of little knots of people giggling energetically in one another's tea; I know women who would fairly poison their faces, and watching the door out of the tail of their eyes. The stream of incoming guests has dried to a trickle, and the receiving line are able to un-starch their smiles. The plates of fashionable sandwiches are empty, testifying to the industry of some hopeless folk who simply stood in a corner talking to friends they already knew and gobbling sandwiches until they wouldn't need any supper. Some of the professors are doggedly circulating among the students; others are talking sensibly to their colleagues. You see your chance and grab it with both hands. You head for the door.

You live happily till someone else decides that it would be nice to have a tea where students can meet each other and the professors socially and chat informally.

Relief Workers Shocked By Reality Of Tragedy

By CATHIE BRESLIN

"The greatest tragedy in the city's history... death toll nears 100... damage into 6 million..." Phrases like these have been wafted about the air for a week; by now they mean little more to us than platitudes. The emergency is over, and the shock subsides. News interest dies fast.

There was a touch of such an attitude in this Varsity staffer, mixed with a generous share of curiosity, when I set out to join the Engineers at their flood relief work yesterday afternoon.

The hundred volunteers were in fine spirits as we drove the twenty miles north to Woodbridge, and their cheerfulness persisted when, to the tune of "We are, we are..." they shouldered their shovels and mops and pails and marched to the scene of the disaster.

The rescue work wasn't a particularly heroic prospect. The Engineers were assigned to level the sand hills and valleys that covered the ground, to excavate cars and sling axes at sheds, to scoop the incredible muck and slime out of the basements—which was worse than it sounds. But as Neil Irwin, one of the instigators of the rescue operation, put it: "We Engineers may be short on money, but we're strong on muscle."

As we approached the really flooded area, we came into a desert of sand dunes and sand canyons—a wierd sort of wilderness. We passed a cabin balanced on one of its corners in a drunken pose, and an army of trees standing on four feet of roots. We passed an abandoned camp where, a few days before, they had been hauling trailers from the tree-tops. And we passed the Humber, dirty-brown, sullen, and still rather angry.

We had just come from the city, from the bustling metropolis of street-cars and neon lights and a bank on every corner. It was strange to find ourselves in a wilderness buzzing and brimming with bulldozers, helicopters,

Fate Of Toronto In NFCUS Depends On Raise In Fees

Unless it can raise its annual contribution to fifty cents by January 31, 1955, Toronto will be thrown out of NFCUS, if last night's recommendation of the Finance Commission is ratified by the plenary session today.

The following motion was moved by the delegate of the University of Alberta, and seconded by Queens, and passed by twelve to four, with three abstentions:

"Whereas we believe that university students should pay equal fees and;

Whereas, the students of the University of Toronto voted in favor of a student union fee increase in order to pay the fifty cents;

That we hereby state that unless the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto can obtain permission for an increase for the term year 1955/56 by January 31, 1955, that the National Federation no longer recognizes them as members of the NFCUS. However, if the SAC can obtain permission to raise the SAC fees for the next term by the above date that we accept them as members for 1954/55 at twenty cents per student.

The Toronto delegation abstained.

Bill Angus, president of Toronto's SAC explained to the commission that although the fee increase had been approved by the student body, the Board of Governors refused to ratify the increased budget.

"The students of the University may be apathetic," Angus answered to a question from Acadia, "but they might be persuaded by respected student leaders who are strong supporters of NFCUS to view the federation favorably."

The purpose of the motion, as outlined by the Alberta delegate was to put the SAC in a stronger bargaining position with the Administration.

The Federation would lose about eighteen hundred dollars yearly revenue if Toronto left. This is the largest single levy in NFCUS's budget.

float parade committee approves canadiana theme

"Canadiana" will be the theme of this year's float parade to be held a week from this Saturday. The decision to make Canadiana the theme was made unanimously yesterday by the Float Parade Committee, the Director of the Committee, Joe Divok announced here last night.

He said that there was general disapproval among members of the committee, and the Chairman of the Blue and White Society, Bill Harris was severely criticized. The theme was chosen by Harris, he said.

"I understand that only the School of Law objected to our theme," Harris said last night.

"We decided on the Canadiana theme because we felt that every Faculty and Collegé should be able to conform to a general theme, he said.

Since the colleges and faculties could not decide among themselves on any specific theme, we had to do it, Harris said, and added, "I think the floats will be very good."

Joe Divok claimed that the "loudest beef came from the Medical representative, who said that they had already planned their float along different lines.

There will be at least nineteen floats in this year's parade, Divok said, "We already have nineteen applications, and more will come."

No entry will be allowed to compete, unless a form has been filled out before October 30.

One-Eye Calls

Blues To Win By Miles

By ONE-EYE BENNY

It is hurting my heart grievously to read these slurs upon my fair and respected name as a prognosticator of the inevitable. This child, Harris, who is being called Billie, is swinging nasty blows underneath my belt when he is whining that I am mistaken in my calls for the Blue games. Is this character never hearing of the come-on system of betting, when I give the suckers a break to bring them in for the heavy wagers?

Also there is the business of taking my name in vein—it's a bloody business. This mere mortal, Harris, is trying to pin me down to one person and one who is obviously not being fit to carry my betting slips. My advice to him is not to waste his time in trying to identify what the FBI, the RCMP and the NKVD have never been able to lay hands or eyes upon. I am being a very shifty fellow indeed.

If Harris is being willing, and if his attack on me is being more than just the obvious publicity stunt it is seeming to be, then he is hereby getting my permission to lay a wager with my agents on Campus on the Western-Queen's game. However, if he is not having faith in his own clairvoyance as opposed to mine, I am offering yet another test of his brain-power.

If he is being able to identify me, I am paying to him the sum of ten bills, which is representing my entire profits of the past ten seasons. This is coming to him if the identification is being made within the next twenty years, and only if the bulls do not get me first.

This past week I am having my crystal ball work over-time and am checking it with an electronic brain, and the facts are now being reported. In the match that is being played between the three-couros boys from Queenstown and the purpled Horsies from ol' Lunnon Town, I see that there are happening three touchdowns with converts for the Horsies and only two of same with a single for the Gaels, which is making things 18-13 for Western.

I am laughing all night about what is going to happen in Montreal this weekend. It is going to happen an upset as the Varsity Blues are coming back from the dead to edge the McGillians by a close score. I am seeing a high-scoring contest with the Blues of my choice counting some five touchdowns with converts and one single in the bargain while the McGill laddies are getting? ... are getting exactly nowhere.

VARLEY

The painting is of an open window, looking out through casements just visible on either side, across a hazy green space toward the crest of a distant mountain. The painting, as one of the Hart House collection, used to hang in the common room there. As I looked and remembered how impressed I was when as a freshman I first saw the painting, I wondered again what I was going to say about F. H. Varley and the showing of his paintings at the Art Gallery of Toronto.

Varley "convinces" me the most of "all Canadian Painters. His work often has for me an air of nostalgic loneliness so captivating that I find it difficult to be objective about it. But nostalgia is by no means the only feeling generated by his paintings. Of many moods, in many modes Varley is a forcefully expressive painter. Each of his studies of the human face expresses a different sort of mixed feelings, from an indefinable agitation to an indefinable peace. His formal portraits are less active, sharper but by no means insensitive. The landscapes, too, have definite "feelings" about them that take me by surprise and leave me, not gasping, but thinking to myself, "Yes, that's exactly right, that is one of the ways things are". "Take for example the painting in which he focusses attention, not on the mountains, not on the clouds but on the space between them, giving one a vast sense of distance and of wanting something indefinable. Then there are the great comments on the first world war, a war whose waste Varley apparently felt deeply, paintings of an almost formless desolation. "Someday the people will return."

However specific the theme seems, the feeling about the paintings is always too subtle, too human to be put into words. I found no neat symbols. One of the most looked at paintings, I am told, is "Liberation" in which a mysterious glowing-eyed figure emerges from a tomb-like arch. To bother such a painting with any clear cut resurrection symbolism is, I think, to approach Varley's painting in a way inappropriate to his style. Even in his war painting he shows, he does not tell.

Varley's great flexibility in his choice of subject matter and treatment, escapes the eventual sameness of most of the work of the others in the Group of Seven. His post-impressionist palette brightens from the sombre olives of his war paintings, through the dark contrasts of his Group of Seven days, surviving the dignity of his Augustus-John-like portraits, to appear in excited pinks, greens and strong blues in his later studies. Though a something in common, a sort of "Varliness," runs through all his work, there is a constant variation in treatment which makes 319 not too many paintings and sketches to view in one showing.

SPS Activities Continue Despite Caput Decision

By JACK ELLIS

The recent decision of the Caput suspending the constitution of the Engineering Society and fining that organization $4,000.00 has transferred all power of student engineering government from the Society to the Faculty Council of Applied Science. In spite of this shift in power, the machinery of administration still lies with the incumbent student executive.

According to Dr. McLaughlin, Dean of the Engineering Faculty, the Faculty Council has the power to reinstate the Engineering Society at any time. This power is delegated from the Caput. Present activities will be carried on under the administration of the present society up to the new revenue limit imposed by the fine of the Caput. There will be a meeting of the Faculty Council this afternoon to decide just which activities will be able to continue at normal rate and to settle on the mode of operation of student activities by the faculty.

The budget of the Engineering Society, now drastically curtailed, was drawn up during the interval between the riot and the Caput decision. As such, there was a provision of $500.00 for payment of any and all damage claims arising from the colleges visited.

However, in spite of this fact, and the apologies offered, the $4,000.00 fine is in addition to any such provision. The Caput decision also provides that the fine is to be paid out of current revenues and not by means of a levy on freshman or other students.

A random poll of engineers indicates that the riot was considered by some parties on both sides to be no worse property-wise than in other years, but the present difficulty arose with the unfortunate injury of an innocent bystander, Prof. McAndrew.

There is also some concern over the fact that Prof. McAndrew has not seen fit to issue a statement of any kind to clarify the manner of his injury.

The immediate picture of Skule activities must remain largely in the dark until sometime next week, after today's Faculty Council meeting and a forthcoming society executive meeting and a forthcoming society executive meeting. However, it is known that such fixtures as the Engineering Stores, the Athletic Association and SAC representation will still be in working order under control of the faculty wing. The forthcoming issue of Toike Oike is still an uncertainty.

The Engineer's Flood Relief program is still proceeding according to plan. Various classes of engineers have volunteered their services at the disposal of the Salvation Army, and the faculty has cancelled classes and labs.

Relief Workers

(Continued from Page 1) fire engines, and every kind of truck from Hydro to Labatt's. In that confused disembarkation into quite another world, we first began to see the real meaning of the flood.

I wish you all could have been there. I wish you all could have spent an afternoon talking to people who had seen the work of a lifetime destroyed in a few awful hours, and considered themselves to have gotten off easily. I wish you all could have met the flood—dead now, but still very much alive—as we met it yesterday afternoon.

To some people, though, some very ordinary, appealing people, it means the memory of a dark, wet, swirling night, and the prospect of an all but hopeless task of recovery. "It didn't scare us at first. We get a flood every year—we're used to them—but, boy, we've never seen anything like this!"

It's quite an experience to watch an old man rinse off his hip-boots in a rain-trough, telling you about how he rescued nine people by stretching a ladder across a raging, snarling stretch of water six feet high, and how he carried a nine-month-old child across this.

Or to listen to a young man with far-off eyes, who hadn't changed his clothes since last Friday, tell you how it felt to come home to find a furrowed sand-lot in place of his trailer, his kennels and his valuable dogs, his car, and the materials he'd been saving to begin to build his own home.

This may sound like so much sentimental melodrama to you—as it probably would have to us. But what struck us a staggering blow was the realization of the grim reality of the flood and its avengeful consequences.

Eleven Cents

Last week this campus saw an appeal for the Community Chest. This week, an SAC sponsored drive for Flood Relief is under way. And next February, the annual SHARE campaign for aid to students in less fortunate lands begins.

We realize that most students at this University are not overly rich. We realize that two campaigns in two weeks makes it difficult for students to support each drive to the full extent that they might otherwise do.

But we would like to remind the students of this University that this campus is not cut off from the rest of the world: that flood disaster in the Holland Marsh, lack of proper clothing for children in the slum areas immediately to the south of this campus, and malnutrition in students at Patna, India, are all their concern — and the concern of every civilized intelligent person on earth.

Bearing this in mind, we think that the students at Toronto can do better in future than the eleven cent average contribution which was made last week to the Campus Community Chest.—R.D.B.

Hoodwinked

In any discussion of the ruling of the Caput on the engineering issue it must be made clear that we are not questioning the legal right of the Caput to make such a decision.

In point of fact this power is delegated to them in the University of Toronto Act, 1947, sections 71 and 72.

What we do quarrel with is the fact that such provision is in the act, and the spirit in which the Caput invoked their authority.

What is implied in both the act and the decision of the Caput, is that responsible government is given to the students as a refined sort of privilege.

We must believe that it is the right of the students to govern themselves in those affairs outside of the curriculum of the University.

If this is not the case then the Caput has succeeded in fooling a fair number of the student leaders for a large number of years.

our readers write:

Antigonish Relocated By Varsity

The Editor
The Varsity,

An error in geographical location which appears in your lead story, Vol. LXXIV, No. 16, has been brought to our attention.

St. Francis Xavier University is located in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, not in New Brunswick, as suggested by The Varsity.

Ordinarily, we would overlook an inaccuracy of this sort and regard it merely as another in the long line of misleading and inaccurate reports which appear in our newspapers.

However, we feel that this geographical boner has a much deeper significance than appears on the surface. It seems very likely that even the staff of The Varsity, which should be, individually and collectively, the best informed group on your campus, does not really have a full appreciation of NFCUS. It seems that even The Varsity staff is not interested fully in a National brotherhood of university students when it doesn't even know where the brother institutions are located.

Does this not bring before us in stark reality, Mr. Editor, the need for a complete revamping of our approach to NFCUS? Does it not point up the need for a return to the "grass-roots" approach, as suggested by Dr. Wax, in striving to extend the interest in NFCUS to even the most apathetic student?

A general crusade for interest in NFCUS is very sorely needed. Student newspapers have a duty to lead this crusade. As the voice of the students, the newspapers can wield a tremendous force for the good of Canadian students. But remember, too, that the newspapers can also be a great force for more apathy.

We thank you, Mr. Editor, for the service you have rendered in placing copies of The Varsity at the disposal of NFCUS delegations. We greatly appreciate the gracious hospitality shown to us by the University of Toronto and the interest and help given to us by your SAC President and the Toronto delegation.

We hope, Mr. Editor, that this letter comes to you as a cue to get on-stage and play your role in NFCUS. Don't play a minor role, Mr. Editor, rather take the lead.

"Have you got a 222," groaned a weary (and anonymous) NFCUS delegate, as we bravely tried to find out what makes NFCUS delegates kick. To our surprise, we found that they seem to be quite normal. They even hate Toronto.

As a pleasant change, the majority of the delegates interviewed felt that the conference was definitely useful. Peter Tanguay (Ottawa University) the Canadian University Debating Association delegate, thought that more had been done than at last year's conference, with more real purpose behind the deliberations. personality profile

By JANE GRIFFIN

"NFCUS means the crystallizing of some kind of national opinion among students," Dr. R. M. Saunders, Professor of History, believes. Well acquainted as he is with the National Federation of Canadian University Students, he has great faith in its possibilities.

An American citizen, Dr. Saunders was born in Massachusetts, and was educated at Clark University and Cornell. After graduation, he spent three years in the Near East, lecturing at the University of Beirut in Lebanon. He came to Toronto in 1931.

Dr. Saunders became interested in NFCUS through his connection with the Students' Administrative Council, with which he was associated for three years. This year, he and Dr. John Coleman, Professor of Mathematics, were named as observers to the eighteenth annual Conference of NFCUS, representing the National Council of Canadian Universities. This organization is the union of the administrative bodies of all Canadian Universities. This is the first year that the Council has had a representation at the NFCUS Conference, and as yet, "the relationship is in a state of exploration."

Dr. Saunders feels that the NCCU made a valuable suggestion when they pointed out that it would be helpful if NFCUS undertook to make a survey of the machinery by which students carry on relations with the Administration of every Canadian University. This machinery varies from one campus to another. NFCUS has agreed to make this survey, and hopes to publish a comprehensive report on its findings. The purpose of this undertaking is to attempt some sort of standardization if at all feasible.

Professor Saunders feels that an organization with the aims of NFCUS is invaluable to the Canadian student. "Whether NFCUS as such is the answer is debatable," he said. There are some very real advantages to be gained, and he does not feel that the common criticism voiced against NFCUS, that its aims and accomplishments are intangible, is valid as a criticism. True, vagueness seems to beset the organization, but some of plained that "this meeting is degenerating into a conference." John Brockenshire, the delegate from Assumption said "the conference seems to be getting somewhere for the first time in its history." Joan White, of Waterloo College, thought that it had been a very revealing conference. Harry Daniel, from Western, said "the delegates have come with a serious intent to establish continuity and a stabilized NFCUS. If the proposals are carried out NFCUS will come to represent what it was set up to be." Maurice Copithorne, however, the delegate from British Columbia, thought it was unfortunate the conference was so long because the intensity lags, and boredom develops. He also felt that it still tends to be too idealistic a discussion, and compared unfavourably with the World University Service Conference.

We asked what they thought of the city. The delegate from Sir George Williams said: "What city?" (May we ask what's Sir George?) Peter Tanguay felt that the campus had its own distinctive flavour, with nice buildings. He liked the Vic Union, which "looks a little like something at Miami University."

He had heard that Varsity students were rather an austere group, but found at the conference and around Hart House that they seemed friendly. Dan Presley of Sir George said if the criteria of the NFCUS reps was typical, the calibre of Toronto students must be very high.

And now we come to a touchy subject: THE VARSITY. We gathered from the comments the less said about The Varsity, the better. "It seems to have fallen into the pattern of the bigger newspapers, in that it may be prone to slant the news more than is necessary," said Peter Tanguay. Several other delegates also felt that the coverage had been coloured and inadequate.

One of the highlights of the conference was when the Laval delegates sang French drinking-songs, to the great delight of the members, and a group of Salvation Army members down the hall.

Despite the fact that a delegate's lot is often not a happy one because so many people are anti-NFCUS repetitious, nevertheless this reporter found the delegates sober, sane and satisfied.

delegates seek for cheaper books

Cheaper text books for students was the motive behind two motions passed at the evening Plenary session of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) yesterday.

The first motion called for NFCUS to urge Canadian text book manufacturers to use new and cheaper methods of publishing. It was resolved that the National Executive should present this recommendation to the Canadian Institute of Educational Book Publishers, and the various university administrations.

The abolishment of a three per cent social service and education tax on text books in New Brunswick was also urged. The National Office was instructed to send a letter recommending this to the New Brunswick government, and to send similar letters to other provincial governments who levy taxes on text books.

$300 was set aside by the NFCUS to facilitate the holding of national art contests. $150 went to each of the Universities of Toronto and Alberta.

After some debate, and many procedural motions, McGill University was mandated to hold one regional week-end seminar for the Quebec region. A maximum of $200 was set aside as financial assistance for this project, and the stipulation was added that universities in the city of Ottawa should be invited to this seminar.

sac to assist scholarship fund

The University of Toronto was mandated, in yesterday's plenary session of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, to assist in a national campaign for more government scholarships and bursaries.

The resolution giving Toronto the mandate stated that the local campaigns should, this year, approach the public for support, and that arrangements should be made for the financing of scholarships either through the federal government or through provincial governments.

The resolution passed unanimously.

"Our complete objective will be to have federal aid for 10,000 Canadian students at an estimated cost of five and a half million dollars," said Norm Chalmers, speaking to the NFCUS session on behalf of Toronto. He pointed out that the Toronto group would be assisting the National Executive of NFCUS, with whom the prime responsibility would still remain.

"The backbone of our campaign will be an approach to the public," said Chalmers. He declared that the resolution drafted showed complete respect for provincial rights. Laval, speaking in support of the motion, said that the resolution, in its new form, would allow Quebec to support the national campaign.

Several other delegates spoke in support of the resolution, declaring that it was a matter of national honour to increase federal student aid; that it was a right of students with the academic ability to receive a university education; and asking for the unanimous, whole-hearted support of all universities in the campaign.

A break in the agenda followed the passing of the scholarship resolution. This was provided by speeches from Dr. Page, the Honourary President of NFCUS, and Clyde Batten, speaking as the representative of the Canadian University Press.

"You are beginning to provide an effective national voice for yourselves," said Dr. Page to the session. He declared that it was extremely necessary that NFCUS face up to facts, and be prepared to pay for efficient service. He recommended that NFCUS, as it began to take a more important part in national affairs, steer clear of bodies with a political axe to grind. He also said that it needed a better channel between national and local offices.

"The editors of CUP," said Clyde Batten, "have criticized NFCUS for not taking a determined stand. For five years NFCUS has been urged to do something definite about the International Union of Students. Student governments across the nation have been running into difficulties with Boards of Governors, and NFCUS is doing nothing." He criticized the lack of continuity in NFCUS policy and declared the need for a re-definition of the aims, policies, and purposes of the National Federation. CUP will continue to criticize NFCUS, he said, and it was hoped that NFCUS would continue active policies such as the adoption of the recommendation concerning scholarships and bursaries suggests.

A recommendation for the exemption of university tuition for income tax purposes was carried. It was decided by the session that the national office should carry out a survey, in co-operation with the Department of Labour, of students' social and economic status at the recommendation of the Department of Labour. A recommendation to investigate legal education across Canada was also passed.

After discussion and debate, the resolution concerning NFCUS publications was passed. It was decided that a magazine telling of NFCUS activities, distributed free to students, was preferable, but that if the expense was too great, a newspaper would be substituted. When the question was raised as to what form this paper would take, it was suggested by Carleton College that something like a college paper would be produced.

"And do you mean by the newspaper, something like The Varsity?" exclaimed the delegation from Manitoba.

BLUES TO

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

In Sports Illustrated's latest issue there appears an article by the ex-president of the University of Chicago, Robert M. Hutchins, entitled "College Football is an Infernal Nuisance". To support this position Mr. Hutchins refers in detail to his experiences at Chicago, where, under his presidency, Intercollegiate football was abandoned in 1939.

Mr. Hutchins protests that Americans are the only people that ever got sport mixed up with higher education, apparently oblivious to the fact that any team sport goes a long way to moulding the kind of character that will succeed in conducting the affairs of the nation in the years to come. Mr. Hutchins would laugh heartily at the oft-repeated opinion that all the great battles of the British were won on the playing fields of Eton.

Apparently the University of Chicago dropped football because the game hampered the college's efforts to become the kind of institution it aspired to be, one devoted to education, research, and scholarship. "Intercollegiate football", he says, "has little to do with any of these things and an institution that is to do well in them will have to concentrate upon them and rid itself of irrelevancies, no matter how attractive or profitable."

Obviously, while president of Chicago, Mr. Hutchins found it impossible to make Intercollegiate football exist alongside the purpose of the University. Our only suggestion for this bewildered man is a visit to the campus of a Canadian university, where Intercollegiate football flourishes in the midst of even higher learning.

Academic ability is the first requisite of entrance to the University of Toronto, and many promising high school ball players have gone by the wayside because of this. The best example of learning coming first is that a student in the first year of an honor course is not allowed to play a Senior Intercollegiate sport. Furthermore, some of the finest athletes ever to grace the campus, kept up an unbelievable standard in classes. Dr. John Evans, who captained the Yates Cup-winning Blues of 1951, won two scholarships at graduation, and topped his class in Medicine.

Gerry Sutherland was a gold medalist in PHE, and then there's yet another medical man, Fraser Mustard. Still playing fine football for the Blues is Steve Oneschuk, perhaps one of the best ever, who attained first class honors in each of his three years in PHE, and played Senior basketball as well.

Hutchins' solution lies in the spectators not paying to see Intercollegiate football. We wonder where brand new colleges would get the money for all the modern conveniences of sport if this happened. It's all very well to try it once they've got their stadium paid for, and a sizeable balance in the ledger books.

Come on up here, Mr. Hutchins, and we'll show you how it's done.

There were two soccer games on tap yesterday as Knox defeated Architecture 3-0 and Dentistry defeated Pre-meds 2-0. D. Crawford, C. Costerus and E. McKinlay scored for Knox. Fast and Le-hicky scored for Dents in the other game.

In volleyball action Jr. Vic took two games from Pre-meds I by scores of 15-8 and 15-13.

Vic 2, defeated Meds 5 in boxla action by the score of 3-1. B. Lindsay, Gilbert and J. Vickers scored for the winners and Doug Gare scored the lone tally for the losers.

U.C. firsts showed enough power and balance Wednesday afternoon to convince the many spectators that U.C. should not have too much trouble defending their Lacrosse championship for the third successive year.

Led by the smooth "Nobber" Watson, who stayed around long enough in the first half to score five goals, U.C. went on to blank a hapless Vic squad 10-0. Red Stephen added two goals, with Bruce Sonley, Bob Jeans and Bruce Lee completing the scoring.

Defensively, rookie goalie Blyth Brown handled successfully the measly four shots headed in his direction to rack up the shut-out, a rarity in Lacrosse play. The whole team checked well, especially Larry Scott, who was a standout on defense.

BATTLE REDMEN

McGill Is Confident Blues Even More So Varsity To Do Or Die

Now the Blues have their chance at the Intercollegiate softies, and they should count some points. Come Saturday, down in Montreal, Varsity players and fans move in on Molson Stadium for a match with the McGill Redmen, both teams as yet without a victory this season. Favoured are the Blues. To this time Varsity has scored a tie with Western and a bad defeat by Queens, whereas McGill has a more perfect record of no wins but two definite defeats, one each by the Mustangs and Gaels.

A Varsity team that seemed indifferent at times against the Tricolour will be somewhat fired up for the meeting with McGill. In practice all this week they have their own team-mates to proving themselves in the large part of the schedule remaining. If they tackle and block the Redmen as hard as they have been their own team-mates in practice, Larry Sullivan will need plenty of replacements before Saturday's game is over.

Star McGill player, Ed Parante, will go with a slightly bruised hip suffered in last week's game with the Western Mustangs, but Sullivan will still have stars Lionel Quinn and Bob Perry to throw in against the Blues. The McGill line, already shown to be weak, will face the best front wall the Blues have been able to put together this year. End is the position to be most strengthened for the McGill game with the return to action of Frank Palermo and Harry Hall, two men whom injuries have hitherto kept from the lineup.

At tackle the Blues are getting progressively stronger with each passing game, though they haven't passed too successfully in their last two. Alex Macklin, Bill Beamish and Al Watt are coming into fine shape and Watt, who missed the Queen's game, is back and up for this one.

The Blue guards have been particularly impressive of late and are expected to trap the poor McGills to death tomorrow. At centre, the Blues have Red Wismer back, John Prendergast still going and Ray Yakasovitch also back in the fold which gives them all-star strength in this spot.

Coach Larry Sullivan of McGill is said to be confident that his Redmen will beat the Blues tomorrow, but this is likely just a weak whistle in the dark.

Veteran Tackle Macklin Anchors Blue Wingline

The Big Blue Team has fielded a number of new faces at the tackle position this year, but the one exception is a large chunk of football experience and know-how in the person of Al Macklin. This big, blonde Skuleman with the good-natured, boyish grin is one of the hardest-hitting linemen in the league, and is especially valuable as a steady anchor-man for the rookies in the Varsity line.

Al's beginnings as a football player are rather unusual. At Toronto's Malvern Collegiate, he was a violinist and concert-master in the school orchestra. His musical talents also included playing the bagpipes for a Scottish Regimental band. However, in his Senior year, Al's 6 ft. 3 in., 220 pound physique attracted the attention of the football coach. He was persuaded to trade his violin for a pair of football cleats, developing into an outstanding tackle on a team which landed in both the Red Feather Tournament and the League finals.

The "Mack Truck", (ask his victims), really developed as a footballer here at Varsity, with good seasons on the Intermediates and the Blues. Last year he would have reached his peak except for a serious knee injury in a pre-season game which side-lined him for the rest of the campaign. Al feels that the psychological effects of this injury have been a handicap to him this year, but he has this problem pretty well licked now.

In addition to football Alex finds time to maintain a high standing in his 4th year Civil Engineering class and to do a good job as president of the Engineering Athletic Association.

Al Macklin will be well worth watching on future Saturday afternoons.

Vic Claws Tigers Ebenhardt, Alport

By JOHN VOJTECH

The value of a kicker to his team was proved here at the East Field last night as Frank Ebenhardt paced the highly touted Vic team to victory over UC by the score of 20-0. Time and time again Ebenhardt kept the UC team at bay by punting several long kicks. On the other side of the ledger we have UC's punter, Gord Rintoul, who booted a few long kicks to get UC out of their own end where they played for most of the game.

The game itself was not a particular thriller, as UC, who have yet to score a point relied on only defensive tactics, and Vic, who have had only one point scored against them, relied on a safe offensive and defensive pattern of play. The major part of the game was played with little color save for the color of Vic's uniforms. Both teams have red uniforms and so it was decided that Vic should wear a sweater of a grassy green hue with gold border. This matched the gold color of their helmets.

Getting back to the main issue, however, the main reason that Vic was able to defeat UC was because they had the most consistent kicker. Every Ebenhardt kick seemed to dig the UC team deeper into their own territory. As each game goes along, the better his kicks get. It's going to be hard for a team to knock off Vic unless they have a punter of Ebenhardt's calibre.

The win moved Vic ahead of SPS I in the league standings, giving them sole possession of first place. UC and Meds follow Skule in that order.

Bob Nadin of UC was tackled in the end zone by Alport on one of Ebenhardt's kicks. Later on in the game he also added another single by kicking into the UC end zone.

Besides his kicking points, Ebenhardt took a few moments off to score two touchdowns. One was on a line plunge through center good for eighteen yards. The other major came on an end run on a surprise quarterback sneak.

A Monroe pass was intercepted by Alport on UC's thirty-five yard line and he ran it back for a touchdown.

It was interesting to note that Benson converted all three touchdowns considering that since Monday's game no one had converted a touchdown. In fact, the only other convert other than Benson's four, belongs to Fusco of St. Mike's.

Johnny Notes: Many thought that the left end was offside on Ebenhardt's first TD but referees thought otherwise . . . An Ebenhardt - to-B. Williams play was good for thirty-five to forty yards, but there was illegal blocking thirty yards down the field by a Vic player, unnoticed by the referees. . . . Billy and Norm Williams played outstanding games for Vic with their brilliant running . . . Gord Rintoul's longest kick seemed to travel sixty-five yards in the air . . . Nadin and Monroe were best for UC . . . Alexander and Benson broke through the UC line time and time again . . . Again the team with the cheerleaders and crowd behind them won the game . . . In fact, sometimes it was more pleasing to watch the cheerleaders perform than to watch the game.

Intercol Shoot At McMaster

The four members of the women's intercollegiate archery squad were chosen yesterday in the deciding shoot.

Kay Sladen, Doreen Toland of Trinity, Marg Kirby, PHE, and Johanna Jaciew are the four some representing the U of T in the annual intercollegiate match to be held this Saturday at McMaster.

Of the foursome, Kay is the sole remains of the '53 squad. Kay stood fourth in total points, just one spot below "pay money".

The girls will be shooting from the 30, 40 and 50 yard line. Each distance will take in four ends which means 24 arrows are to be shot for each distance.

Besides the Toronto squad, teams from Mac, OAC, Western, Queens and McGill will be on hand for the big meet. Last year Western stood on top of the league closely followed by OAC. The latter mentioned group appears to be top contender this year.

The OAC bows are made right on the campus and aluminum arrows are used entirely.

Toronto has not had a winner for years. This became only too apparent last year so archery was given a big push with the formation of the interfaculty meet. So, this year will be the first time Toronto has entered a well experienced squad.

Ryerson Lambs To Return Scoreless Wonders Persist

Varsity's Baby Blues take to the field this afternoon for their second encounter against the Ryerson Lambs. Some football teams pride themselves in the fact that they are unscored upon. This is not the case with the Ryerson squad though, as to date they have been unable to score a single point.

Holding the Varsity team to only 11 points in the last game, Ryerson will be fortunate to see the better side of 24 this outing. With their defensive problems fairly well in hand, as forcefully displayed against the Seniors in their weekly scrimmage Wednesday, the Intermediates seem overdue to unleash the offensive their powerful backfield and hard charging line is capable of producing. This offensive raised its shaggy head in the second half against Queens last week-end and should receive a stimulating warm-up against the Lambs in preparation for the Baby Blues big games of the schedule the following two weeks against the Western Colts.

Ryerson will miss the fine running of Al Wong to-day, but the return of Don Mucci to action should help to make them feel more at home. Don carried for the Intermediates on the first T.D. in the last encounter. All on the limp from Wednesday's scrimmage, will be ready and willing to go against Western. Since the game points, contrary to popular belief at the home of the Lambs, do not count toward the league title, the player limit will be up to 30 and Jack Kennedy will be able to dress some of the men who did not see action last week. Back in uniform will be Tom Hamilton at quarter and Jerry Hugo at wing-back. The addition of Ted Lansky and 'Santo Baby' Martini to the line-up combined with the existing strength of the team indicates a rough afternoon in store for Ryerson.

All is not work with the Baby Blues this week-end as dressing room murrers indicate a weiner roast Saturday night to celebrate their coming victory.

Soccer. Blues At McGill

With Varsity Band and cheerleaders the Soccer Blues embark for Montreal this week-end to share a twin bill with the football squad.

Sporting an array of new talent the Big Blues are itching to test the vaunted McGill team. By this time in the season the Redshirts are well under way, being members of a Montreal city league. The Blues on the other hand have played only one game, a 7-0 victory over Western, Stalwarts Lethbridge, Tamberg and Liz are unable to accompany the team. However, three capable Intermediates, Ochrym, Ounpuu and Yuen, are substituting.

In former seasons the Blues have found the Montreal boys, many of whom are British West Indies veterans, to be their chief opposition. This year they are definitely in that position in the separate Eastern League, being Varsity's only opponents. The game will take place at 11.00 a.m., immediately north of Molson Stadium.

The Baby Blues, maintaining an undefeated season, have no counterpart at McGill to challenge. However, they are conditioning for a meeting with the Aggies on Guelph turf next Wednesday. A return encounter with the raring Ryerson boys is also promised for next Thursday. They provided a hard-fought 2-2 battle last week and coaches Auld and Small have been intensifying team conditioning in the hope that both Senior and Intermediate Blues may repeat their twin 7-0 wins over Western in the games on deck.

the caput

The Powers That Be

Since the report of the Caput, announcing the suspension of the Engineering Society and the fine of $4,000, many students have been asking "What exactly is the Caput?"

The Caput is an official University committee composed of the President, who is the chairman, the Principal of University College, the heads of the federated colleges, the deans of the faculties of the University and the Warden of Hart House.

The Caput determines the timetables for lectures and other instruction in the University which affects more than one faculty or college.

The Caput controls all university associations and deals with all matters assigned to it by the Board or the Senate.

The Council of University College and the governing bodies of the federated universities and colleges have disciplinary jurisdiction over and entire responsibility for the conduct of their students in all matters which concern their respective college buildings and grounds, including residences.

The same applies to the councils of the faculties and schools which have assigned for their separate use any buildings and grounds. In all other cases which concern the students of the University College and the federated colleges, disciplinary jurisdiction shall be vested in the Caput, but the Caput may delegate its authority to the council or other governing body of the university, college, faculty or school to which the student belongs. Disciplinary jurisdiction includes the power to suspend, to impose fines and to recommend to the Senate the withholding of degrees, diplomas, certificates or academic standing. This also includes expulsion.

With regard to individual rights the University of Toronto Act declares that "Nothing herein shall take away or impair the right of any student to make complaint to the governing bodies thereof or to the Board in respect of any matter as to which he is or may deem himself to be entitled to complain."

Engineering Confusion Cleared

The Editor
The Varsity

We hope that this may help clear up the confusion about the status of the Engineering Society. After the riot, the Caput demanded that the Engineering Society make a full investigation and produce witnesses. Through the effort of President Rossall and First Vice President Deeks, enough facts and witnesses were provided to enable the Caput to decide that the riot was mob action, and that the injury of Professor McAndrew was accidental.

The Caput then disciplined the students of SPS by suspending the constitution of the Engineering Society. This does not

As far as the students of SPS are concerned, the Society stands as elected. However, since the Caput no longer recognizes the Society, all the blanket privileges (such as the right to the use of University buildings, Engineering Stores, Hart House, etc.) given in the Constitution are revoked. Now, permission must be obtained from the Faculty Council (the Engineering teaching body) to exercise any of these privileges. The Caput also fined the Engineering Society $4000 and damages.

This raises a question. If the Society were to refuse to pay the fine, how would the Caput get the money? Since it cannot touch the Society bank account or assets, which can be administered only by the students elected to do so, its only way is to levy the students directly.

It may seem that the students of SPS have little choice but to submit, for the Caput is now in a position to evict the Engineering Stores from the Engineering Building, and to refuse to collect the Society fees. It is now up to the Engineering Society to call the Caput's bluff.

NFCUS TO EXCLUDE TORONTO UNLESS FEE RAISE GRANTED

NFCUS President Burns

This is Doug Burns of the University of Alberta. He is the new President of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. Burns defeated Clyde Batten, Editor of The Varsity, to win his position. —VSP by Ed. Hoskiw.

Burns to be NFCUS President P. Martin is Vice for Ontario

Doug Burns of the University of Alberta will be the NFCUS National President for the next year. In the elections held on Saturday morning, he defeated Clyde Batten of the University of Toronto.

The regional vice-presidents were all chosen by acclamation. Doug Fitch, U. of Alberta, was chosen to represent the Western provinces; Peter G. Martin, of the U. of T., will be vice-president for Ontario; Paul Piche,

Financial Fracas will Threaten Toronto Share in NFCUS

Toronto will not be allowed to remain as a member of the National Federation of Canadian Students if it cannot promise to raise the full 50 cents per student NFCUS fee by next January 31. This recommendation of the Finance Commission was ratified by the Plenary session of the NFCUS Conference last Friday night.

Toronto students currently pay 20 cents to NFCUS. The money comes from the $5.00 SAC fee which is added on to each student's tuition.

Last year the SAC asked that the SAC fees be increased from $5.00 to $6.00, with 30c of the increase to go to NFCUS to raise Toronto's contribution to 50 cents a student.

The SAC request was turned

Vic 'Pep Rally' Gets Donations For Flood Fund

A total of $125.00 was raised for the University Hurricane Relief Fund last Thursday at a combination flood-relief campaign and pep rally held by Vic. The rally, held in Burwash Hall, Wymilwood Cafeteria, and the Vic Coffee Shop, was designed to boost Vic spirit before a scheduled interfaculty football game with UC.

The Vic cheerleaders, Sandra McFarlane, Dianne Webster, Joan Miller, Joan Mencil, Jean Little, Barb Bulley, Marilyn Mason, and Susan Firmingham wore new plaid kilts and yellow sweaters for the occasion.

"They've been doing a terrific job this year", the VCU's Publicity Director said. "Vic spirit needs a shot in the arm."

Donations to the flood relief fund were collected by the cheerleaders, or placed in the Coffee Shop milk bottle.

down by the Board of Governors, however. Even with the 20 cent fee, Toronto last year paid more — $1,700 — than any other University to NFCUS.

The motion which the Finance Commission presented read as follows:

"Whereas we believe that university students should pay equal fees and;

"Whereas, the students of the University of Toronto voted in favour of a student union fee increase in order to pay the fifty cents;

"That we hereby state that unless the Students' Administrative Council of Toronto can obtain permission for an increase for the term year 1955-56 by January 31, 1955, that the National Federation no longer recognizes them as members of the NFCUS. However, if the SAC can obtain permission to raise the SAC fees for the next term by the above date that we accept them as members for 1954-55 at twenty cents per student."

Montreal, Oct. 23, 1954: McGill's persistent Redmen bobbed up for the third time from the Intercollegiate Football League's flooded cellar in a desperate attempt to stay alive and in competition. Varsity's determined Blues, fresh from a 20-0 humiliation by Queens, turned thumbs down by a vote of 43-6 and pushed McGill right back under.

Not eight minutes after the opening kickoff, Varsity had scored and converted three touchdowns. Two McGill fans sitting under the press-box, started to leave. They had compared Varsity's record and thought that their Redmen had an even chance. By the half, with the score at 31-6, more went for the gate, and by the closing gun-shot, there were only small groups to push through at the exits.

Two minutes and a half were all that Varsity needed for their first major score, taking the Redmen kickoff at their own 59 yard line. Phil Muntz, Boo Pinkney and Steve Oneschuk running the ball to the McGill 44. From there Pinkney went around right end, cut back in and past the McGill defence, and went all the way for the major. One minute later quarterback Bill Stevenson, fading to the McGill 50, threw long and true to Oneschuk over the goal-line for another touchdown.

A question mark to this point, the Blue line played its best game of the season and gave much hope of better results when the Varsitys meet again with the Western and Queens crews. Superb blocking on the offence and a marked indifference to same when thrown at them by the Redmen made the Varsity linemen masters of the game. That powerful Blue front wall held the McGills to a piddling 100 yards on the ground, but opened holes for Varsity gains totalling 470 yards, and kept tacklers from Stevenson and Harry Wilson long enough that the two Blue quarterbacks were seldom rushed on pass plays, completing 9 of 17 attempts.

Frank Palermo's return to the lineup, after injury had kept him out for a year, provided

Annual Conference

Spotlight On NFCUS

It's all over but the shouting now. We can review the past week's events to see just what was done at the conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students in Toronto.

—the University of Montreal withdraws; Assumption College and St. Francis Xavier are admitted, raising the membership to 23 universities and 41,300 students.

—Tony Enriquez, last year's NFCUS president, presents his challenge to the delegates: "You have come either to build or to bury NFCUS." He pays tribute to the Canadian University Press for their criticism and to his executive.

—Sydney Wax, former International Affairs Commissioner for NFCUS presented his comments and criticisms, that 1) the delegates came unprepared to the conference, 2) no basic issues were brought up, 3) 15% of the budget was used for the one meeting, 4) students were disinterested and apathetic, 5) the employment of a full-time president was a sound idea.

—NFCUS observers will be sent to the next meeting of the International Union of Students, but NFCUS will not join IUS this year.

—a resolution was passed to the effect that the University of Toronto would be barred from next year's meeting if the payment per student were not raised to 50 cents per person by January 31 of next year; Toronto students presently pay 20 cents to NFCUS out of their SAC fees.

—NFCUS will urge publishers to print text books more cheaply and will recommend to the New Brunswick government that the 3% tax on texts be abolished.

—$300 was granted to hold the National Art Contest.

—$200 was set aside for a week-end regional seminar at McGill with the stipulation that the women and the weed

By HUGH McKELLAR

Whereas several young freshettes of this university have recently commenced flirting outrageously with my Lady Nicotine, it has been suggested that an old war-horse like myself should write an article full of fatherly advice, on the theme of "To smoke or not to smoke". Now, I am in no sense an expert on the delicate question of Wenches and the Weed; but the custom of smoking has intruded me into several years' reading about it and observing it. So I think it advisable to state my findings, in order that the freshettes may at least know what they are about if they must flirt with fags.

Some people aver that if they smoke it is their own business, thank you, and none of the public's affair. This is not strictly true: after all, the public has to watch you and smell you when you smoke, and is therefore entitled to some consideration. To make yourself as easy on the eyes as possible, you should always hold your cigarette gracefully and inhale with the leisurely disdain of a connoisseur.

No matter how you crave a smoke, you should never clutch a cigarette rigidly with all your fingers and drag on it so furiously as to suggest to the onlooker a vampire sucking life-blood from a victim. This is most inartistic; remember, you must convey the impression that you have mastered tobacco, not that it has mastered you. No matter how far this pose may be from the truth, maintain (Continued on Page 6) scholarship survey

Student Costs Compared

If some sweet young thing telephones you within the next few days to ask you how much you have earned in your summers of working, don't try to get a date with her until you have answered her question.

Sheila Young, III Trinity, is responsible for collecting statistics for the Government Scholarship Campaign Committee, an NFCUS project. The committee is formed to find the amount the average student earns. The results will be compiled statistically and sent as circulars (Student Distress Case History Forms) to the NFCUS delegates when they return home.

Students in third and fourth years will be covered. The average earnings will be compared with the tuition and residence fees here and at the other Universities.

The survey is being conducted to complement a larger one that Tony Enriquez, NFCUS chairman, has arranged with the Bureau of Statistics. The aim is to introduce reforms into the system of scholarships and bursaries now conducted in Canadian universities. It is hoped the survey will give a sound basis for deciding the number of awards to be given but each year.

Results Announced In WUA Elections

Cathy May announced the results of last Wednesday's Women's Undergraduate Association elections held at University College. They are:

Treasurer — Barbara Grinnell
First year President — Kim Malcolmson

First Year Executives — Mar Tucker, Nancy Turville and Millie Rotman

The positions in the Third and Fourth Year Executive were filled by acclamation.

Third Year Executive — Libby Mandell

Fourth Year Executives — Sheila Bender, Jean Martin.

TAG-DAY

A total of $1,532.89 was collected last Friday for the University's Hurricane Relief Fund by a campus wide Tag-day. This represents an average contribution of approximately 18¢ a student.

NRC President Officiates At Science Hall Opening

Dr. E. R. Steacie, President of the National Research Council of Canada officially opened the new Physical Sciences Building at McMaster University on Friday, Oct. 15th.

The urgent need for just such a building had been evident for some time before construction began. The Science departments of the University were using room which was and will be badly needed by the Arts faculty. Several departments were housed in temporary buildings.

This new building continues the trend set by the Mills Memorial Library. Unlike the original university buildings, it is of a "functional", rather than a gothic architecture.

As well as providing a new home for the physics, chemistry and mathematics departments, the new building will benefit all other science departments by releasing all the space they formerly occupied.

The Physical Sciences building has been built and equipped in a most up-to-date fashion. In the laboratories as well as in the offices and lecture rooms, great pains have been taken to install the most modern equipment available.

Mr. D. M. Heddon, Asst. Principal of Hamilton College, remarked, "By combining these many modern facilities in one building the Board of Governors have given the university an undergraduate science hall unequalled on the campus of any other Canadian University."

Arbor room

Alack, alas, where is our romance

The Arbor Room disappoints us. A brightly lit, pastel-coloured, polished, modern, juke-boxed, hamburger-scented room, where lectures, professors, NFCUS, WUS, FROS, IUS and various other things are religiously panned; where sweet young things, attired in plaid skirts, bright sweaters, and white bucks, lounge about with gay young things in slacks, jackets, ties, and white bucks. Oh, alack and alas — the tragedy of our modern, suave, formalized, and unexciting society.

Picture to yourself, my friends, a room — a dark room — with dark beams overhead, ridden with alcoves, and nooks and crannies, where murky souls in indefinite attire talk of life and death and music while impassive orientals flit silently by in the background, and the gypsy band displays its cosmopolitanism. Where smoke quietly curls its grey, foggy path up to the Japanese lanterns, adding to the black of the roof. In a far corner sits a sinister group, drinking the best of wines and plotting the downfall of the other faculty football team. The air is filled with tension; the lights go out once or twice — probably a short circuit — but it might be the Engineers or Emmanuel raiding the place for dusky, oriental spies.

Where, o where, is our ROMANCE?

Student Exhibitionists Fined For Theft—Queen's

Kingston (CUP) — Two Queen's University students were fined $25 each when they appeared in city police court on a charge of theft.

Jim Kurch and Hugh MacLean were found guilty of stealing articles from a downtown hotel during celebrations following the Queen's — Varsity football game.

They pleaded to Magistrate James B. Swain that the crimes were committed in a fit of over-exuberance brought on by the celebration.

The Magistrate also fined a third Queen's student — Harry Patterson — who was found guilty of assaulting a Kingston city police officer during a freshman brawl downtown on September 27.

Although Patterson was ordered to pay $100 for the infraction, the magistrate warned that in future, jail terms, can be expected by students who get seriously out of hand in their exhibitions.

The Alberta delegate pointed out in the plenary session that by ratifying the recommendation NFCUS is in a stronger bargaining position with the Students' Administrative Council and the SAC is, in turn, in a stronger position with respect to the Administration at the U. of T.

Bill Angus, president of the SAC said "The students of the University may be apathetic; but they might be persuaded by respected student leaders who are strong supporters of NFCUS to view the Federation favorably."

St. Michael's Opens Centennial Hall

"Canada is a mosaic of minority groups," declared the Hon. Paul Martin at the opening of the St. Michael's College Centennial Building yesterday. "We are just as this university, a federation of different groups which can persist only with a proper recognition of others' rights".

Mr. Martin, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Chief of the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations, was the principal speaker at the ceremonies which marked the official inauguration of Carr Hall.

In tribute to the Very Rev. Henry Carr, in whose honour the building was named, Mr. Martin recalled his student days at St. Michael's when F. Carr was Superior of the College, and pointed out the contribution he has made to the concept of the federated university system. "I am firm in my belief that with the principles Fr. Carr taught us as students, the principles involved in federation itself, we can build a world of peace, enjoying security and freedom — even in this very difficult time in the history of the world."

Mr. Martin is now actively engaged in the question of international disarmament through the United Nations, a question in which Canada has assumed a prominent position.

Other speakers at the ceremony included His Excellency F. V. Allen, Auxiliary Bishop of Toronto; the Very Rev. L. K. Shook, President of the College; the Hon. C. P. McTague, retired Ontario Supreme Court Justice — all graduates of the College — and Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University.

"The strength of any college adds to the strength of the university — just as the whole cannot be greater than the sum of its parts," said Pres. Smith. "The co-operation evinced by St. Michael's from its earliest years to the present time has been a bulwark to the whole, and has molded to a remarkable extent the unique pattern of federation in our University."

The key to the building was presented to Father Carr by Mr. McTague, in a symbolic gesture that closed the ceremonies. Father Carr spoke of the College as "the fruit of a single mind and a common spirit", and referred to the inauguration "only as an ordeal". Father Carr is the first member of the Basilian order to have been subjected to such a dedication during his lifetime.

A short, vigorous man with a mischievous twinkle in his eyes that many years of pioneering have not managed to dim, Fr. Carr owes as much of his renown to his interest and support of hockey as he does to his scholarship and his administrative achievements. Among these achievements are a part in the foundation of the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies at this University, and the institution of the federated college system in the Universities of Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

"Right

There can be no doubt that the conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students achieved some very important things.

The stand taken on the issue of NFCUS fees is to be commended. No organization can exist with a dual standard of membership. This duality has been removed.

While the stand on membership in IUS was not what we would recommend it is much more positive than we hoped would come out of the conference.

Of course the greatest single accomplishment was the resolution mandating the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto to initiate a plan for the implementing of scholarships and bursaries by either the national or provincial governments.

We are disappointed that the conference ignored certain situations which run counter to the spirit of the declaration of Rights and Responsibilities of the National Federation.

We trust that the organization will be stirred into action by the abrogation of students' rights occurring here and on other camps.

....or Privilege?"

An examination of the University of Toronto Act and the Constitution of the Students' Administrative Council, confirms our suspicion that the students of this university have less say in the management of their affairs than the city's street cleaners.

The students of the university have no representative on the Board of Governors, no representative on the Senate and none on the Caput. All this, in spite of the fact that the University of Toronto Act makes provision for a "representative committee".

The question which arises is, "Representative of whom and to whom?"

The only official voice that student government has is through the SAC Secretary-Treasurer who is an appointee of the Board of Governors.

Next to that we have representatives on a Caput Liaison Committee. This committee was formed under a motion passed at the meeting of the Caput on October 1, 1949.

However, the liaison committee is empowered to discuss the legislative phase of Caput activity only. The committee is comprised of ten people. It is significant that five of these are members of the Caput of which one is the president of the university. The other five include the president and vice-president of the SAC, the secretary-treasurer and associate secretary-treasurer of the SAC and one of the faculty advisers to the SAC.

In other words, on the only official committee on which the students are represented they are outnumbered 5-1. Of the three other people who are supposedly representing the students' point of view two are appointed by the Board of Governors and the third by the President.

One final point should be mentioned. In section 33 of the University of Toronto Act, which is the section preceding the one constituting the student government, it says: "the Board may modify, alter and change the constitution of any body constituted or contained in this Act".

Remember, the Magna Charta was signed in 1215.

Editor's Correction

The reader's attention is drawn to the letter from Marcel LeBlanc, chairman of the International Affairs Commission, of the NFCUS, which appears in the column "Our Readers Write."

The motion of censure was registered over an article with the headline:

International Commission Approves IUS Membership.

When the mover of the motion was questioned in Plenary Session he maintained that the headline and the first sentence which read, "A vote of the International Affairs Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students would make the national federation a member of the International Union of Students next year," were inaccurate.

In the headline the phrases "international commission" and "IUS membership" are self-explanatory and could not be open to misconception. It must follow that the word "approves" is considered misleading.

The word "approves" might be replaced by the word "rejects" but this must also be considered inaccurate since the commission did not reject IUS membership. It did, however, reject associate membership at this time. Neither did the commission disapprove of IUS membership since it declared itself to be desirous of co-operation on a practical level with any international student organization.

With these considerations in mind the headline is amended to read:

International Commission Considers IUS membership

The first sentence of the story is amended to read: "If the plenary session passes this motion, and if the observers from the NFCUS to the next council of the IUS are convinced that the IUS has satisfied the conditions sine qua non laid down in the report of the three NFCUS observers to the Moscow conference of the IUS, and if the next conference of the NFCUS is convinced that the report of the observers indicates a very real change in the fundamental attitude of the IUS, and if this change is sufficiently great to indicate that co-operation with the IUS is possible, then the National federation may join the International Union of Students next year."

our readers write:

Frightful Chasm

The Editor,
The Varsity.

It has gone irrevocably on record that the Students' Administrative Council has opposed the support by this University of any plan that NFCUS should affiliate itself in any way with the International Students' Union, "at this time."

As a member of the Council who was unable to attend the meeting — and who is therefore relying on the information in your columns — I am speaking for the large number of less near-sighted students on this campus in refusing to condone this motion.

The attitude of those supporting it is based, I suppose, on the fear that Canadian Students should be used as "Political Capital" by countries under the dominating influence of the Cominform, and that we shall be liable to restrictions in our dealings with the United States.

The state of political anomaly at present in this world cannot last indefinitely. Either it will be rationalized in some civil way, or else it will disintegrate in atomic or hydrogen bombs.

The chance has been offered us to take a lead in building a bridge over this frightful chasm that exists between East and West. Cannot we take this chance with a firm grasp, and in faith for a reasonable world in the nearer or further future, adopt, as you yourself suggested "a positive policy"? We have in this nothing to lose by such a move, and everything to gain.

May I suggest you encourage

Censure

The Editor,
The Varsity.

I have been instructed by the Commission on International Affairs at the Annual Conference of the NFCUS to bring to your attention the following resolution which was adopted on Thursday, October 21st.

Moved by McGill, seconded by Laval: "That the Commission on International Affairs censure the Toronto Varsity for their misleading and inaccurate coverage of the proceedings of the International Affairs Commission with reference to the issue of membership with the IUS and further.

That the Toronto Varsity be requested to publish immediately a correction of this article."

The Editor,

Until yesterday I was under the impression that student government was an institution designed to teach the values and responsibilities of our democratic government. An institution eagerly supported by the staff because of its beneficial results in political education. Apparently, as is often the case in this cruel, cruel world, I was sadly disillusioned.

The action of the Caput shows that as far as democratic treatment is concerned, the student government can expect less than an erring child can from his very angry parent after he has committed a serious mistake. Not only was the Engineering Society "sent off to bed without its (five) supper" but it was also denied the right to exist. And so, with a word, a very useful, and usually capable student body is crushed. Why not a fine, and a new executive for the society? That wouldn't give us a complete view of the power and wisdom of this great all-powerful and all-knowing dictator, the Caput.

Technicality

The Editor,
The Varsity

Has virtue become the fashionable way to sin? What were the motives of these young ladies who paraded their virginity in the pages of the Varsity like prize cattle at an agricultural fair? Was it that they wanted to advertise their cherished property, which by some strange reasoning, they consider a value in itself? May I remind these young ladies of the fact that every female child born is technically a virgin, and therefore being one is not necessarily an accomplishment.

Broken Lance

Broken Lance, showing at the Imperial, is a Western with all the usual props, and yet it is an outstanding movie. There is a hero, a villain, a pretty girl, the standard fist and gun fight, and even the thrilling finale of a chase on horseback. But there is also some excellent acting and filming and these are what make, of the shoddy story, a fine movie.

The Lance is produced in the tradition of Shane and High Noon, though I don't feel that it comes up to the quality of either. Cinemascope gets more into it than standard photography had in the others, but The Lance isn't nearly so exciting as they were.

Everything is a little vague, but promising at the start. The hero, surprisingly well-played by Robert Wagner, comes sullenly out of prison and is taken for a ride to the Governor's office where he does a very silly thing. He throws ten thousand dollars into a spittoon.

After this mad act, he stalks out, riding off for what seems to be the family mansion, fallen into decay. Now this is a bit strange, because the house has been deserted for only two years yet it is already sagging, the walls dropping away, and the ghosts well-established. It's here, with doors knocking spookily in the wind, which howls scarily through the house, that the story begins.

A flashback takes us to the days when the house was lived-in, filled with the happy sound of laughing children, and Robert Wagner had time and pride enough to shave.

The flashback then tells the story of tyrannical old cattlebaron Spencer Tracy who has a vast Texas empire which he rules with a ruthless hand and four sons, three of whom hate his guts. The fourth is Robert Wagner, half-breed son of Tracy and his Indian princess wife and it just happens that these two are strongly resented by the three elder sons, borne Tracy by his first wife.

Accustomed to having his way without argument, Tracy charges into a fight with a wealthy mining outfit that has contaminated his stock drinking water when the mine-manager jeers at him. This results in a big court battle which gives Robert Wagner a chance to prove dramatically just how noble he really can be and for Richard Widmark, the eldest son and villain, a chance to show what a wretch he can be. Both do fine jobs, Widmark more convincingly.

Noble Wag marches off to prison, sacrificing himself for Tracy whom he loves like a father, and Wid slithers away to steal the great empire, also from Tracy, whom he hates like a horse - thief. Meanwhile, the pretty girl remains faithful, prepared to wait forever for Wagner, since it is only a three year sentence. Jean Peters, as the heroine, could be better, but isn't.

With Wag in stir, and Wid on the make for much money, Spencer Tracy and his trusty steed combine to give the best scene of The Lance. Dramatically, as he gallops to head off his knavish sons before they sell out the ranch, Tracy dies in the saddle with his boots on. Happily, the evil sons undergo no change of heart or pangs of remorse at what they've done to their dear old pa, but decide that he had it coming and go on about their villainy. I was very sorry to see old Trace go because there's not too much to watch from then on. The clean-up, after Wag gets out of jail, brings nothing unexpected, but that's all right. There's enough good stuff in the Broken Lance up to then to make it worth seeing. —Moishe Reiter.

All those interested in doing drama reviews for the Varsity, whatever your motives be, please get in touch with Wendy Michener in the offices this week. Wanted is a potential George Bernard Shaw, or Robertson Davies and there is a scheme afoot to bring out the hidden identity of your true nature.

off the palette

an oscar in h house

THE first impression of the Oscar Cahen show now at the Hart House Art Gallery is of vivid orange and pink, dominating the room. Cahen has a broader palette, seen as the first impression fades, but these colours do recur many times. The pictures displayed range from slightly abstract illustration in crayons, and ink, to sometimes unconvincing non-objectives, in water-colour or oils.

Cahen likes to use large areas of brilliant, often contrasting colours with which to budgeon the skeptical viewer. His paintings are rarely subtle in their effect although, as always, a second or third consideration of a picture is needed to crystallize the reaction. In sum, my reaction in words is that Cahen is a good draughtsman, and a much better draughtsman than he is a painter. His apparently undisciplined painting seems a source of emotional relief from the taut line of his drawings. Some of the paintings go beyond amorphous and meretricious gaudiness to the expression of a satisfying sense of beauty.

The large paintings are mostly vividly coloured representations of a non-existent world just the other side of the gallery wall. One of a group of four opposite the entrance held my attention — Structure —, the others in the group palled quickly. More delicately coloured, Candy Tree is a pleasant, well organized painting, appropriate to the title or vice versa. Sombre colours, darker blues and browns faced against a hot strip of the everpresent orange, and more complete spatial organization make Requiem a more exciting, convincing painting than the others.

Cahen's draughtsmanship can be very impressive, as in Fighting Roosters in which, in a tense grained line, feathers awry, essential roosters fly at each other. Also, two pencil and crayon drawings show pleasing organization in a restricted colour range.

I found the Cahen exhibition stimulating, if sometimes unconvincing.

A group of technical exercises by students at the Ontario College of Art, hung in the print room at Hart House, will throw some light on the murky matter of abstract painting for you. The exercises are in the design elements basic to graphic art; the illusion of depth through colour and line, the distorted representation of space, the creation of visual rhythm, of colour harmony are all dealt with as individual problems and sometimes successfully solved. This exhibition will suggest to you helpful starting points when you are faced with the problem of the comprehension of some incomprehensible abstract.

A M & D Around Town

ART

Oscar Cahen is showing in the Hart House gallery all this week. As usual woman's day is Wednesday.

The exhibition of Scandinavian products will continue in the Royal Ontario Museum until Nov. 2. Student rate is two bits.

In the local Art Gallery the women's committee presents the 8th Annual Sale of painting and sculpture. Paintings are on view until October 28 and on sale from the 29th to November 2nd. If the bidding gets too high for students, the Gallery has a plan of renting reproductions for half a clam.

MOVIES

Broken Lance, our sporty-type reviewer classes as "jaggedly penetrating"; Brigadoon in spite of Hollywood - Scotch sets is entertaining, at least for those who like musicals.

Woman's World, for the glib, is at the Odeon Toronto. King Richard and the Crusaders in Cinemascope, another descendant of Knights of The Round Table. For the genetics of this situation see this page later.

Stars of the Russian Ballet, of more interest as ballet than as a film, starts today at the Studio. Seats reserved by performance.

DRAMA

I don't know quite what category to put The Salzburg Marionettes in, but since they are at the Royal Alexandra, they may as well go here.

The Crest revives Charley's Aunt starting this Tuesday.

Darkness at Noon all this week at Hart House. Our critic rates it impressive.

MUSIC

The TSO's first big noise is this Tuesday and Wednesday in Massey Hall. Guest Artist: Novaes, pianist.

Helen Phillips, Soprano, sings in Eaton Auditorium for the Women's Musical Club at 2 p.m.

AISLE SEAT

DARKNESS AT NOON

Darkness at Noon, the first Hart House offering of the 1954 season is a play on the controversial and important theme of Communism. It is not, however, an out and out renunciation of it, but rather an expression of regret that it has allowed its means to become its ends. Koestler's novel presents this in the form of a long debate showing the basic opposition in thinking and feeling between one of the Revolutions Old Guard and a figure typical of the butchers and bureaucrats of the state. Kingsley, in dramatizing it has removed most of the essential philosophy and aesthetic presentation and left only pure propaganda. The audience must fight its way through this to arrive at the core of the problem, that is an examination of the intelligentsia as the sole remaining champions of individuality and the interests of humanity. That Kingsley did not do this well is a great pity, since it leaves the director with no clear notion of how to focus the play.

Since there is only one literal setting, with flashbacks, the staging is the primary problem. This has been handled extremely well by using scrims and lighting. As the setting changes, a different part of the stage is spotlighted, and there is never any confusion. The whole is done in sombre greys and blacks which accentuate the drab nature of the play and point to its essentially cheerless message.

Next in importance to the staging problem is that of the leading man, who has an extraordinarily demanding and difficult role. He is the centre of the action and the philosophy, and every factor in the play is dependent upon him. Robert Shirriff, using his resonant and expressive voice to full advantage, handles the part with understanding and restraint. He is powerful and yet he does not overwhelm us with the sustained on a plane intense enough to strength of his emotions. The contrast between his present disillusionment and his past fanatic idealism is not brought out quite strongly enough, but the scene of his breakdown and confession, while not having enough confused indecision is nevertheless

Undergraduate lack of finish. Colin Hamilton, as Luigi, is effective, although the handwaving gestures are overdone to the point of distracting us from his actual words. The plight of prisoner 402 (Edward Walker) whose long detention has deprived him of women should have had leave us convinced.

Alene Kamins gives to Luba a delicacy of touch and sureness of interpretation which creates an immediate bond of sympathy and understanding between herself and the audience. But in comparison with these two outstanding performances the rest of the cast suffers from the usual a meaning for everyone, but unfortunately we were left with only the impression of a spineless lecher. Gletkin (Donald Sutherland) rose from mediocrity only in the interrogation scene with Luba. He should have been more the iron civil servant, the automatic judiciary apparatus.

BABY BLUES HUMBLE RYERSON 27-1

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Back during the Second World War, when the Japanese onslaught was at its height, General MacArthur used to tell this story. It seems that a passer-by at a sandlot ball game asked one of the youngsters what the score was. "Twenty-seven to nothing", was the reply. When the onlooker asked the boy if he was worried, he said, "Heck no, we haven't been to bat yet". Well to return to the point of the story, the Blues started to bat last Saturday.

For the past two weeks the sportswriters have been mumbling under their breaths about what's happened to old Varsity. However we venture to echo Bob Masterson's feelings when he said, "All they needed was to get one of these under their belts." If the Blues keep up the brand of play, minus a few fumbles, that they came up with in Montreal, you can all sit back and relax because the Yates Cup is coming to Toronto.

Best average for the day was that of Gerry Lansky, who carried the ball four times and averaged 22 yards. Phil Muntz and Bob Pinkney gained 70 and 79 respectively, and Al Riva carried for 65 yards. Bill Stevenson connected on four out of eight tosses for an average of thirty yards, while Harry Wilson threw nine and completed five, averaging eleven yards per completion. McGill were terribly inept, there's nothing more you can say. After such a showing there's no reason why the Blues shouldn't go all the way this fall. Stick around, it's going to be interesting.

From the Blue Room . . . The absence of quarterback Ed Parente didn't help McGill at all, and nobody seems to know where he is . . . Ron Stewart is the highest-scoring back in Queens football history. His eight touchdowns last season tied the existing record set by George Richardson, so every major this fall is increasing his record. Richardson Stadium was named after the former record-holder, and at this rate, comments a Montreal sportswriter, Stewart ought to have the whole University named after him before he's through.

Look for Western's Gino Fracas to be playing pro ball in Winnipeg next fall, after a Blue Bomber scout took a look at Fracas Saturday . . . The Athletic Association, dismayed at the lack of interest in student ticket sales, announces a further ticket sale this week prior to the Homecoming week-end. Come on guys.

Ryerson Kicks Single First Point This Year

By FRED GRAY

Varsity Intermediates, by trouncing Ryerson 27-1 Friday afternoon, hung up their third win of the season and their twenty-second consecutive triumph. Despite the magnificent effort of the Baby Blues' front line throughout the game, Ryerson managed to record their first point of the schedule and their only point against Varsity in two years.

The Baby Blues threatened to open the scoring early in the first quarter when a hard driving tackle by Johnny Adams caused the Ryerson kick receiver to fumble. Walt Jaremkow recovered for Varsity on the Ram's 6 yard line, but a determined Ryerson stand held the Seconds at bay.

Fine defensive work set up the Intermediate's first major at the ten minute mark of the opening quarter, as Walt Schmida intercepted a Ryerson pass and rambled 36 yards to the Ram's 4 before he was hauled down from behind. From here Dave Creswell gathered in a pitch-out and swept around the right end for the touchdown. Larry Joyn's convert attempt was wide.

The running highlight of the game came in the dying minutes of the first quarter. Forced back almost to their own goal-line by a Ryerson quick kick, Varsity sent Jack Rogers off left tackle on the first play from scrimmage. Rapid Rogers sped through the Ram's defenders, outrunning a startled Ryerson safety man for a 105 yard touchdown jaunt only to have the play called back on an off-side. The following play for 12 was also nullified for the same reason, totaling a 117 yard loss on the two plays.

The Baby Blues continued to dominate play in the second quarter, knocking their second T.D. after seven minutes of action. That man Schmida started them rolling again, blocking a Ryerson kick. Pete Polerone kicked the loose ball toward the Ram's goal line dropping on the ball for the Intermediates on the 3 yard line. Joe Whitmore carried over centre for the score, and the convert attempt was no good. Three minutes later Baby Blues were back again, Schmida and John Tattle combined to snag the ball when Santo Martini broke through to block a kick on one of his frequent visits in the Ram's backfield. Joe Whitmore charged over for the Touchdown from the 3 and Larry Joyn converted as Varsity led 16-0 at the half.

Action slowed somewhat in the second half as the Baby Blues

Varsity's Bill Horton reaches for a pass intended for an unidentified McGill player. Another Blue defender is almost blotted out of the picture by the straining Redman. This is a sample of the kind of pass defence by Varsity that discouraged McGill quarterback Ken Wright, who tried nineteen throws but only completed four. The Blue pass attack was just the opposite, with seventeen attempts resulting in nine completions, four of them for touchdowns, as Varsity swamped McGill 43-6.

tired somewhat of the sport. Ryerson's great moment of the season came when Harold Daub recovered a Varsity fumble on the Blue's 21. On third down deep in enemy territory with only a yard to go, Dave McIntosh dropped away back and booted a single to open (and close) the scoring for the Rams. The Intermediates drove back into pay-off territory in the closing minutes of the quarter only to be stalled by a fumble.

Intermediates finished a highly successful afternoon with two more majors in the final quarter. Santo Martini, through to block his third kick of the game, set up the first, Dick Risk falling on the ball behind the line for the T.D. Joyn converted. Jack Rogers came off the bench on third down to carry for the closing touchdown, the convert being blocked.

Varsity's defensive line led by Santo Martini and Walt Schmida was tremendous throughout. Joe Whitmore, Jack Rogers, and Dave Creswell were again very effective in the backfield. But fumbles and penalties continued to dampen an otherwise very potent Intermediate attack.

Trampled

one of the most brilliant defensive showings seen from the Blues since Palermo played last. There was no running of the ends or freedom for Redmen passers while Palermo was driving in to cut them down. It was almost as though Frank had never been out of action, so sharp was he. Just before the half, he broke in on McGill's Ken Wright, blocked the third down kick, batting it right into the arms of Bob Waugh who showed his speed with a run to the goal-line and a touchdown.

Waugh was another lineman who played fine ball, aside from his scoring efforts. Along with Bill Beamish and Walt Radzick who must, by their work, have brought to McGill's mind the proverbial stone wall, Alex Macklin and Al Watt crumbled the Redmen line.

McGill had some good men working along their line but there was no real strength all through it and all the Varsitys had to do was pick the weak spots, which they did most aptly. Co-Captain Clyde Whitman was the top man for the Redmen on the line, much-aided by big Bert Bertrand at the centre spot. These men played fine ball but just couldn't do a full team's work without support.

The McGill backfield was also good, but went nowhere important with the weak line they had clearing the way for them — they usually found their path crammed with waiting Varsity tacklers. Wright had an awful time at quarterback, seldom having time to pass carefully and he had very little choice in calling plays. Wherever he sent his Redmen, the Blues had them stopped. Most successful of the McGill backs was Bob Hutcheson.

In the Blue backfield there were only stars. Steve Oneschuk hit for 22 points on the day, taking three touchdowns, one on a pass picked from between a defender's hands, and seven perfect converts. Bob Pinkney was just too fast for the McGill men and went over for two majors. Pinkney was a very trying man for the Redmen tacklers when they could get hold of him, persistently dragging them for extra yards each time they hit him. The same defenders had great difficulty with Phil Muntz's flying knees as he came through the line.

There was pity to be felt for the McGillians when they tried to nail Wally Bulchak on his kick runbacks. Tricky as they come, Bulchak slipped past tacklers every time, bringing the ball and the Blues back upfield and into better scoring positions. Al Riva and Gerry Lansky weren't as deceptive in their ball-carrying but still charged through for long gains.

Penalties might have meant a good deal had the Redmen not been so pathetically overmatched. Varsity was penalized 120 yards, McGill a mere 10.

One of the game's neatest plays came from Wingback Bill Horton as he took a Stevenson pass at the McGill 14 yard line, lateralling as he was tackled to Oneschuk who then stepped across for five points.

Roughed up badly after throwing a pass (on a play that received no penalty), Stevenson came out of the game with a bruised elbow, but Masterson said it would be all right and that Stevenson would be back next week for the return match. Harry Wilson played some excellent ball at quarterback along with Stevenson, throwing well.

For next Saturday it's back home to Toronto and the Homecoming Weekend, with Float Parade and the works. Probably another good day for the Blues.

Mustangs Crush Gaels Getty Scores 2 TD's

London, Ont., Oct. 24—(Special) — The steadily improving Western Mustangs stuck a pin into the bubble of the Queen's Golden Gaels here Saturday. The Mustangs, showing nothing but disdain for the Tricolor's undefeated Status, brought Frank Tindall's hitherto prolific Queen's attack to a grinding stop, had a big edge in all departments but kicking and that didn't matter. The score was a convincing 27-1.

A capacity homecoming crowd of close to 12,000 jammed Little Memorial stadium to see the Mustangs and Gaels fight it out for first place in the Intercollegiate league. The win moved the Mustangs into top spot, a point up on the Gaels. And, off their one-sided victory, the Mustangs have to be considered favorites to win their seventh championship in nine seasons since the war.

Western's new-fangled Diamond T offensive appears to be getting smoother and smoother. Saturday, it was at its most impressive. With veteran Don Getty directing traffic, it rolled up 279 yards along the ground, 216 in the air and 23 first downs. This was against Queen's figures of 187, 149 and 17, respectively.

Getty, halfback Gino Fracas and end Bob Turner were the outstanding figures for the Mustangs. Getty scored two touchdowns and set up others by Turner and Walley Delahey. Fracas kicked a field goal and three converts and Ted Roman added a single on his only good kick of the day.

But, in the final analysis, it was that diamond-T formation, with Getty and John Girvin both in the backfield and ready to pass, along with Fracas and Ralph Simmons, both deadly runners, that killed the Gaels. These were the same Gaels that had shattered McGill, 46-11, and Varsity, 20-0, but they didn't play the same. Their great runners, Gary Schreider, and Ron Stewart, the highest scorer in the history of Queen's got nowhere against the Mustangs' defence.

Gaels made just two significant thrusts into Western territory. The first time, they were forced to kick, with Jocko Thompson's hoist going for a single. The other time, late in the game, Fracas made a great interception that got the Mustangs away for their final touchdown of the day.

Mustangs Musings: Defensive stars were Fracas, Turner and Don Prowse, who was playing end for this game. . . A fight between Stewart of Queen's and Don Killinger of Western broke out on the last play of the game but it was broken up in a hurry. Prowse was particularly effective in stopping Stewart. . . The teams play the return game in Kingston Saturday.

Niagara Bests Harrier Team

Saturday marked the opening of the Varsity Harrier season with the Blues seeing action in Niagara, where they put up a great fight but lost to the more experienced University of Niagara squad. The Blue team, with only two veterans of last year's senior team making the trip, looked impressive but unused to the distance. On the other hand, the U. of N. runners chalked up their fifth straight victory.

Herb Tilson ran his second race for the week as he pushed Niagara's Traugot to a new course record of 20 minutes and fifty one seconds for the 4.2 mile grind. Herb was faster at the three mile mark than his winning time in the Intercollegiate track meet last Wednesday, and in spite of the wet course his finishing time was almost equal to the old record.

Freshman Bill Gelling ran well in his first Harrier race. He finished seventh in the race and second for Toronto, one second ahead of veteran Bill Eckersley who came eighth in the meet. Ninth place was occupied by Peter Watson, who runs the 880 with the track team and will try his hand at Harrier this year.

Freshmen runners: Bruce Hughes and Gord Heuston finished in tenth and eleventh spots, and should improve before the Intercollegiate meet in Montreal on November 11th. Roger Wilkinson, who attended McMaster last year finished in thirteenth place beating the remainder of the Niagara team.

The final score in the meet was 19 to 36 in favour of the Niagara team. However, the team will be at full strength next week for their meeting with Wayne University in Detroit and should show considerable improvement.

Varsity Girls Third In Intercol Archery

Ontario Agricultural college of Guelph came out on top in the Intercollegiate women's archery tournament at McMaster University in Hamilton Saturday. Their combined total for a team of four girls was a commanding 1,459 points. McGill gals were second with 1,296, followed by the University of Toronto with 1,196. Next came Queen's with 1,011, Western 835, and finally McMaster in sixth spot with a total of 767 points.

In the individual scores, OAC copped the first three spots to complete a cleanup of the tourney. Maxine Graham was first, scoring a tremendous total of 465 points. Teammates J. Allen and Kathy Pringle were second and third, getting 383 and 376 points respectively.

Varsity gals Doreen Toland and Kay Sladen tallied scores of 375 and 334 to take fourth and fifth positions. The other two U. of T. representatives, Marg Kirby and Johanna Jaciw, turned in scores of 249 and 238 for the day.

Ends were shot from the 30, 40 and 50-yard marks. Each team was allowed four ends at each mark. Maximum individual score at an end is 54 points and Toronto's Kay Sladen had top individual score for one end of 46.

Skule Edges Doctors

On Friday afternoon S.P.S.'s football squad increased their unbeaten string to ten games as they defeated Meds 15-11. Both teams were excellent defensively, and only through the offensive teams' errors did each manage to score. On many occasions fumbles by both teams increased the suspense of the game's outcome. Several penalties near the end of the game against the Engineers team allowed the Med's team to penetrate the Skulemen's territory sufficiently to allow Meds to score two touchdowns and almost a third.

Scoring opened late in the first quarter when Ken Selby of S.P.S. kicked a 28 yard field goal. The score remained 3-0 until the dying minutes of the first half, when the Engineers recovered a partially blocked kick by Medicine on the Doctors' 40 yd. line. A series of plunges then carried S.P.S. to the 2 yard line. Meds could no longer hold as they had stifled two previous S.P.S. attacks in the first quarter. Thus, Mike Grosse went over for the touchdown. Selby converted to give the Engineers a 9-0 lead at the end of the first half.

The Engineers continued to roll in the third quarter. Jim Wheeler of Meds kicked a 45 yard yarder to help his team out of their zone. From the Meds' 50 yd. line a pitch out from quarterback Ken Larsen to halfback Don Comish who scooted around the end carried the Engineers to the 25 yd. line of Meds. From here Larsen faked a pass, found no one in the clear, eluded several tacklers, and took the ball to the 15. A pass from Larsen to Bill Karpinski into the end zone gave Engineers their second touchdown. Selby converted to make the score 15-0 for S.P.S.

With three minutes remaining in the third quarter Meds suddenly became alive. A series of fumbles by and penalties against the Engineers allowed Meds to get the ball to Skule's 30 yd. line. With renewed vigour Jim Wheeler of Meds who had played a standout game, plunged to the 15 yd. line. Joe Stipek, another Medicine strong man went to the five. On a pitch out Stipek ran around the end for Meds' first major. The score was now 15-5 for S.P.S.

In the fourth quarter from the Med 50 yd. line a Larsen pitch out was fumbled. The ball was kicked around until it was finally recovered by Andy Coppolino of Meds on the Engineer's 2 yd. line. From here Stipek plunged for his second major. Ed Moran converted. The score was now 15-11 for the Engineers. On the kick-off Meds recovered their own kick on the Engineer's 15 yd. line. With this the game ended with Engineers as victors.

Max's muses . . . If Bob Master-son is looking for a good kicker, he should look at Jim Wheeler of Meds who was kicking 45 yd. spirals over the line of scrimmage. . . Med's main forte, the end run, was ineffective due to the efforts of Skule's outside linebackers, Karpinski and Moulton.

McMaster Wins NFCUS Trophy For Committee

The NFCUS Committee at McMaster University was awarded the Georgian Trophy on the final day of the conference.

The trophy is presented by Sir George William College to the committee contributing the most to the success of NFCUS. In addition a smaller trophy is presented to the chairman of the committee. This is the first year that the trophy has been awarded.

The NFCUS committee at McMaster carried through to completion a survey of scholarships. Rupert Carlton, now studying at Osgoode Hall, was the chairman last year.

flood relief

A Great Job

By CATHIE BRESLIN

"They've done a great job. We just couldn't finish all this work ourselves — we just couldn't! Take me — I can't lift another shovel for a month. But those guys are really getting things out of the way."

Such was the reaction of one of the victims of Hurricane Hazel to the relief work of the University students. To this date, the total of volunteer workers from the University is roughly 750 — 600 from S.P.S., 100 from St. Mike's, and 50 from Victoria. And the job has just begun.

The relief work is no glamorous job of rescue. The emergency is over, and what remains is the task of cleaning up the incredible muck and slime that an angry river can hurl in its wake — a dirty job in the fullest sense of the word. The weapons of relief are shovels, mops, pails, axes, and a lot of energy.

The efforts of the volunteers have been greatly appreciated by the authorities as well as the victims. Already the Engineers have become the most reliable and plentiful source of manpower, and the officials of the relief program have made definite plans to utilize the energies of approximately 150 Engineers per day for the next three days. The organizers of Operation Engineer have promised to keep up the supply of manpower for as long as the demand persists, and as yet the end is not in sight.

The government doctor for this area has announced that there is no need for anti-typoid shots for the volunteer workers except in Holland Marsh. Those who have begun the series may discontinue them; those who have not been protected have no cause for alarm. The shots are definitely unnecessary.

The relief program of S.P.S. is a result of the personal initiative of three of its students, Neil Irwin, Bosko Loncarevic, and Gordon West.

The idea met with enthusiasm not only by the Army and the Red Cross, but by the S.P.S. Faculty as well. Dean McLaughlin arranged that, although there would be no wholesale abolition of classes, the lectures of the specified group on the day arranged for their relief work would be cancelled. He added that the movement had the hearty endorsement of the staff, who would do their utmost to co-operate.

On the following day Victoria sent off fifty volunteers, and on Thursday St. Michael's began a relief operation on a smaller but equally ambitious scale, which was already utilized close to 100 workers. Like the Engineers, the St. Mike's men plan to continue their work until the officials deem it no longer necessary.

The largest reason for the enthusiasm of the volunteers has been curiosity, of course. But the almost universal reaction of workers returning from the scene of the disaster is a realization of the meaning of the flood in the lives of the many who were afflicted by it. Most of them seemed shocked by the actual consequences of the flood, and eager to give their aid — "For some of us", said one student, "this has been the experience of a lifetime. We're tired, sure — but I wouldn't have missed it for anything."

Most of the actual labour has involved clean-up in Woodbridge and Etobicoke, with plans to attack the debris along the lower Humber. On Friday a group of Engineers accidentally uncovered the body of a victim, but most of the student searching parties, however, have been unsuccessful.

Beaverbrook at Brunswick

Fredericton, 19 Oct. (CUP)

It has been unofficially reported that Lord Beaverbrook, Honorary Life Chancellor of the University of New Brunswick, and Honorary Editor of their college paper, The Brunswickian, will pay a visit to this campus sometime this week.

His Lordship has been visiting in the province for several days. Last Friday he dedicated Beaverbrook House in Saint John, donated by him to serve as the Law School of the University of New Brunswick. As yet there is no announcement of his itinerary for this week, but it is rumoured that he intends to pay a visit to the campus.

it for the public's sake. And as for your breath — well, won't some product make it "kissing sweet" even if you roll cigarettes of dried garlic?

But even if you can smoke presentably, is it right for you to do so? Surely royalty should be able to give you some guidance: King James I wrote a treatise on smoking in which he proved that the smoke of hell was produced by tobacco, and it would not be long before smokers were sent where there was plenty of smoke. So far, bad, but don't forget that Queen Mary, that strict matriarch of blessed memory, always topped off her supper with one cigarette. The Duke of Windsor taught her how before he met Mrs. Simpson. Scientists ought surely to know whether smoking is harmful; well, Luther Burbank would not employ even a lab helper who smoked claiming that his calculations could not be trusted, while Thomas Edison said "Nothing soothes me after a hard day's work like a cigarette."

Singers might be expected to know whether smoking is harmful to the throat, and the prima donna Maria Teriza would not allow anyone to smoke in her presence. That would be conclusive if we didn't know that Caruso was certain his singing was impaired if he didn't get his two daily packs of Russian cigarettes. Finally, doctors ought to know if anybody should; but I remember reading an account of a medical convention where a paper on the evils of tobacco was delivered — but the speaker could hardly see his audience for the clouds of blue smoke which filled the hall.

It is a pity that tobacco was not known in Bible days, or St. Paul could have settled the matter by condemning it along with all the other diversions he wasn't partial to, such as women. However, lacking a definite pronouncement from any of these sources, you must just get your evidence where you can find it — which leads you right back where you started from.

The final complication is neatly stated thus by Shakespeare: "I can easier teach twenty what 'twere good to be done than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching." Even if you have decided whether you ought to smoke or not, you may abide by your decision and you may not. Probably you will end by doing what you want instead of what you think you should do... you and the rest of mankind...

So my advice can be only this: If you can honestly say that you handle a cigarette gracefully, that you enjoy the taste, that you aren't smoking to spite your parents, impress your roommate, or prove to yourself that you're a big girl now, and that you can comfortably afford it (or if you can dishonestly convince yourself that all this is true) — well, then, go to it, girls, and lang may your lums reek, as they say in Glasgow.

Hold Whitby Funeral Today For Football Melee Victim

No Cheerleaders Only Arts, B&W

It appears that the Artsmen will be the only ones with cheerleaders at the homecoming game this year. This fact was learned last night from Tom Bell, Bell, who is the head of the Blue and White cheerleaders, stated that it is highly unlikely that Engineering, Meds and other professional faculties will have cheerleaders.

Bell asserted that the cheerleaders would not be in the homecoming parade through the university grounds but would be in the parade from the Drill Hall to the Stadium. The Arts cheerleaders, he went on to say, would probably go through a few routines with those of the Blue and White Society. Plans for the half-time demonstration are indefinite.

"A very regular employee", "unassuming", "friendly and much respected by the students".

Such were the epithets being used by a University of Toronto official today to describe the late Constable James W. Cowie who died during a spectator melee following a big-four football game at Varsity Stadium, Saturday.

Funeral for the 49-year-old officer will be held from the Town Funeral Home at Whitby, Ont., at 2:30 p.m., today.

Superintendent of Buildings, Alex Russell — the late constable's employer here — said he planned to attend the funeral in Whitby.

"There'll be others from the office attending also," Mr. Russell said.

Although University officials praised the late constable's services, they declined to comment on the events concerning his sudden death at Varsity Stadium Saturday.

However, the undertaker in Whitby said last night that the death certificate gave the reason as "cardiac arrest" . . . a form of heart-seizure.

The funeral director added that the dead man had been well known and well liked in the Whitby area. He was a former member of the Whitby Rotary Club and former owner of a dairy in Whitby.

According to reports emanating from downtown newspapers, Constable Cowie died during a melee inside Varsity stadium which broke out on the south end after the Argonaut-Alouette football game.

"Three of the six members of the University of Toronto police force were on duty at the stadium," a University official said when interviewed yesterday, "and one of them was Constable Cowie."

Constable Cowie was reported to have been struggling with two male spectators just before he collapsed near a south-end entrance and died. Other members of the crowd were said to have grabbed the constable's hat and to have thrown it about in the mob.

When they saw the officer fall, three or four members of the Toronto City Police force, also on duty at the stadium, were reported to have tried to protect him the crowd but were forced back by the on-rush.

James Fice, 27-year-old nephew of the dead man, pushed his way to the front of the crowd when he saw the officer fall down and discovered that it was his uncle.

Constable Cowie is survived by his widow, the former Ruth Lilly of Whitby, and three sons, Robert, 17, a first-year engineering student here, David, 14, Charles, 13, and one daughter, Marilyn, 9.

Mr. Cowie first joined the University of Toronto police force at Ajax in 1946. He left in May of 1949 and then returned to take up duties here about two years ago.

COTC Personnel Announce Change

University of Toronto contingent of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps has begun the year with announcement of several personnel changes.

Lt.-Col. A. S. Mitchell, an Associate Professor in the Faculty of Forestry is the new Commanding Officer of the contingent replacing Lt.-Col. L. S. Lauchland, E.D., an Electrical Engineering professor.

Professor Lauchland is leaving for the University of Western Ontario where he will head the new Department of Engineering.

Major W. A. Dobson, head of the Department of East Asiatic Studies, has joined the contingent. Captain Oliver Lloyd, a lecturer in Civil Engineering, is the new Adjutant.

Canadiana Float Parade Has Twenty-Five Entries

By WILF CAPLAN

This year's colossal homecoming float-parade will feature 25 "stupendous" entries to please the eye and whirl the brain.

"Canadiana — that's the theme," according to Joe Divok, float parade director of the Blue and White Society. Along with many colorful Varsity floats, pert cheerleaders and the band, will be McGill University's band and rip-roaring team of cheerleaders.

The floats may be of a comical or serious nature, Divok said. They may be up to 100 feet in length and 15 feet wide. Cost of preparing the floats must not exceed $25.00, he said although at least two faculties are known to have budgeted for twice this amount.

Divok warned that float-builders should allow for overhead clearance from trees and should also make them strong enough to withstand the caprices of wind and rain. No commercial advertising will be permitted on the floats, he said.

All faculties and colleges, except Pharmacy, Nursing, School of Social Work, Physical and Health Education, Ontario College of Education and Whitney Hall, have entries in the parade and Divok states that entry-forms must be in before Friday to be eligible for the judging.

The parade will start at Varsity Stadium at 10 a.m. Saturday and end in front of University College at approximately 12:30 p.m. During its meandering, it will travel along Bloor to Yonge, down Yonge to College, swing along College to the Walberg Memorial building and up through the campus.

Judging will be done in front of University College. All floats, Divok said, will circle the University campus twice, and then the best seven or eight floats will make a final pivot around the circle and prizes will be awarded for the three top floats.

First prize is the Alumni Shield presented annually for the best float, and plaques will be given to the second and third-place floats.

It has been rumoured that the Varsity will enter a float. The main figure of the float may well be, so the rumour goes, the famous or infamous one-eyed Benny . . . prognosticator of things pertaining to conflict upon the gridiron.

Said Divok: "I think this year's parade will be the swing-in'est this campus has ever had."

Band Gets Extra Charged By SAC On Weekend Trip

Whenever you take a trip to an out-of-town football game, you're helping to send the Varsity Band as well. Last weekend, if you went to Montreal on the train, and you procured your tickets through the Students' Administrative Council, you paid $13.75 for your ticket, 85c of which went to pay the fare for the Band and the Cheerleaders. The regular week-end fare for a group of 25 or more persons is $12.90, which is actually single fare, plus one tenth.

The students might, if they wished, obtain their tickets directly from the Canadian National Railways, provided they had at least 25 guaranteed fares. In this way, they would procure them at the cheaper (85c cheaper) rate.

Talking to Miss Parkes, Associate Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC, we found that any extra profit made by out-of-town games is put into the "Band and Cheerleaders' Account, and this 85c per student fare is in the nature of a commission from the CNR.

General Secretary - Treasurer of the SAC, Mr. E. A. McDonauld, commented, "The Band could not go to Montreal without our charging what the Railway Board allows us to charge."

Even with this slight added expense, the student is still getting a considerable bargain, the regular week-end fare to Montreal being $17.55.

Campus Noises Measured Arbor Room Offends Most

By Bob Brown

The Hart House Arbor Room is just about the noisiest place on the campus, according to a recent survey taken by two engineering students, Bosko Loncarevic and Neil Irwin, two fourth year Engineering and Physics students, said that a sound level meter revealed that the average noise level in the Arbor Room is about 95 decibels.

The threshold of pain is reached at about 120 decibels, which is the noise made by a jet engine going at full blast 16 feet away.

The noisiest place in the University, according to the survey, is the University Power House, where the noise level reaches 100 decibels.

Other results revealed by Loncarevic and Irwin are that the noise of a street car on college street from the side of the road is 92 decibels. A class of freshman engineers leaving their room after the last lecture of the day made about 75 decibels.

A measurement of the noise level in a University office with two typewriters going showed that the noise was approximately 66 decibels. However there are evidently some quiet places on the campus. No noise at all registered in a sound proof room in the basement of the Engineering building.

A measurement of the noise in the Varsity office about 4:30 in the afternoon revealed a noise level of about 75 decibels. About one-quarter of a normal night's staff were present at the time.

A decibel is a measurement of sound intensity.

College Types

This year has seen an increased emphasis on college cheerleaders. This week-end for Homecoming the cheer girls from each college will be out in full force as will the girls and guys of the Blue and White gang.

Romana Michalska Edits Newman Paper

First edition of a newspaper to be sponsored by the Newman Club will appear in about a week, it was learned today.

Editor-in-Chief of the publication will be Romana Michalska. Ernie Wesson will be the business and advertising manager.

The Newman Club is an international organization with centres on University campuses throughout the world.

A spokesman for the paper said it would be published on newsprint, a four-page tabloid appearing twice a month.

Resistance Low To Panty Raid

New Orleans, "Girls offered little resistance," was the comment of an observer when 500 Tulane male students swarmed into girls' dormitories Monday night. They took possession of many unmentionables and started a riot call, fire alarm, and utter confusion.

Police were met by a hail of rocks, and four students were arrested. A psychology professor told the boys: "Go back to your lollypops."

Catherine Heward Speaks At Baha'i Student Meet

A 21-year-old Toronto girl — victim of an incurable disease — will be guest speaker here Wednesday at a meeting of the Baha'i Student Group. The meeting will be held in Falconer Hall at 1 p.m.

Catherine Heward is the author of an article entitled I Die A Little More Each Day which appeared recently in New Liberty Magazine. The article told of her own up-hill fight — a fight which is still going on — against the dread fatal disease, muscular dystrophy which she contracted at the age of 11.

Catherine's article said that some 10,000 Canadians were currently suffering from the slowly progressing disease.

Miss Heward's address to the Baha'i group tomorrow will be on what she considers to be Mankind's Greatest Gift.

Friends say that her illness does not prevent Cathie from being a happy useful person. She holds down two part-time jobs, one making petit-point jewellery, the other, bundling elastic bands. She is also studying Braille so that she can translate Baha'i books for the blind.

And her activities are by no means confined to her room. She goes out several times a week to movies, concerts and the New Canadian Club and her date life is as full as that of any other pretty 21-year-old.

LIPS PARCH AT KISSING ARCH

Contrary to public opinion the U of T does have some fine old traditions that are worth preserving. One of them is illustrated above. The true story of Toronto's Kissing Arch has been neglected for too many years and now the Varsity, always on the lookout for some way to serve the public good, has, at great expense, sponsored an extensive project and come up with these startling facts.

The tradition of the Kissing Arch was established during the early months of 1920, shortly after the Soldier's Tower was completed. According to the archives unearthed by a crew of VARSITY reporters, a young man and a young lady, out on their first date, were walking under the arch at a few minutes after midnight on a stormy February evening. Suddenly, a stone weakened by alternate freezing and thawing of the previous weeks, and then caught by the wind, toppled earthward.

At this precise instant, the young lady was tilting up her head to be kissed by the young man. She saw the stone, screamed, and was pulled aside by her hero. Thus a tradition was born.

From that day forward it was decreed that all young couples passing under this arch together for the first time must kiss. It is said that the kiss is, in a sense, sacred since it is offered as a tribute for the saving of the lives of the young couple who paused under the arch on that cold winter night so many years ago.

The custom was carried forward until the dark days of the second World War when men with sufficient virility and interest to continue the custom, were of necessity engaged in other pursuits. With the end of the war, and the return to serious studies, the pleasant custom of the Kissing Arch has somehow passed into disuse.

Now, however, a group of interested young men have organized the Society for the Preservation of the Kissing Arch Tradition. (SPKAT). These men tell us that according to all the facts they have unearthed no girl has ever refused a kiss under the arch. They warn that if one ever does, the Soldier's Tower will fall on her in punishment.

Where is the Kissing Arch? It's just west of the Tower and bridging the sidewalk that leads from Hoskins Avenue to U.C.

Professor Farris Urges Center Path

Students here, yesterday were advised to "walk a central path" between spiritualism and materialism.

Professor G. L. Farris of Knox College told about 25 students attending a Varsity Christian Fellowship meeting that a true Christian understood the unity of God-and-Man, as did Jesus Christ.

Professor Farris described God as being on one strata and physical man on another. He said that the Christian should strive toward God — as did Christ.

The lecture was the first in a series of three being sponsored by Varsity Christian Fellowship. The second lecture in the series will be held next Wednesday in University College, Room 5.

China Deserves UN Seat Western Debate Decides

Winnipeg, (CUP) — Two University of Manitoba Law students recently scored a two-fold triumph in a visit to the University of Minnesota campus. Charles Husband and Julius Koteles were able to convince a panel of judges that Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations, and in so doing, defeated the Big Ten debating champions Vernon Hoim and Walter Simonson, speech majors at the Minnesota school.

"The foreign policy of any nation must be based upon realities", Koteles said, in supporting the admission to the UN of Nationalist China. "As unfortunate as we may deem the situation in Red China, the government of Mao is the effective government of China", he contended. "We cannot as such refuse them recognition."

Hoim, speaking for the negative, pointed out that the UN Charter contains the words "Peace loving", and inasmuch as Communist China had been branded an aggressor by the UN during the Korean War, it could scarcely qualify for membership.

Cheap. Life Camsi Plan

The annual conference of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes commenced last Wednesday on the University of Manitoba campus. Delegates representing 12 Canadian medical colleges assembled for the first CAMSI conference to be held in Winnipeg. Dr. Russell Taylor of Manitoba is the president of CAMSI.

Delegates to the conference were welcomed by Dr. Hugh Sanderson, president of the university.

Among the items to be discussed at the week-long convention will be a new CAMSI life plan concluded with the London Life Insurance company, and admission of the Saskatchewan medical college to membership in the association.

The principal of the CAMSI Life Plan is to provide the member with life insurance protection at a preferred rate, while he is a student or interne. Another feature of the plan is that the students wishing to take out this policy are not required to undergo medical examination.

If the plan is accepted by CAMSI it will be incorporated into the CAMSI Constitution.

Top Cadet

Officer Cadet I. G. McHaffie (IV Trinity) is shown receiving the trophy for the Outstanding Officer Cadet of 1951 at the Royal Canadian School of Artillery, Shilo, Manitoba. O/C McHaffie is a member of the University of Toronto contingent of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps.

Southern Legislatures Try to Beat Segregation

The Supreme Court segregation ruling which forbids discrimination against Negroes in school has roused certain sections of the south to the most furious burst of activity since the Civil War. In Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina, in particular, state legislatures are already searching diligently for loopholes by which to circumvent this decision.

In Mississippi an act has been passed which states: "In making assignments of children to schools . . . as provided by this act, the Board of Trustees shall take into consideration emotional needs and welfare of the child involved, the welfare and best interest of pupils attending the schools involved, and health and moral factors at the school." By means of this act school boards can shift students, particularly Negro ones, to any area that they choose.

South Carolina has two methods of keeping the Negroes in line. By use of economic pressure South Carolina whites hope that Negroes in that state will segregate voluntarily. The other device finds re-zoning popular; using this Negroes can be zoned into one area and whites into another.

In Georgia Governor Talmadge rejects these cute means of beating the decision and with irritatingly blunt states: "I do not believe in Negroes and whites associating with each other socially or in our school systems and as long as I am governor, it won't happen."

This is the racial discrimination situation as it now exists in the south. It speaks for itself.

Valiant Heart

One of these days a university student is going to die. Not lingeringly on a bed of pain nor gloriously on a field of battle but shockingly with the screams of brakes in his ears and tomorrow's football game in his mind.

When he dies do not send flowers and messages of sympathy, restrain the ardour of your grief for he will die a martyr to the cause.

Perhaps his death though mourned by friends and relatives will at last waken the civic administration to the potential deathtrap on Hoskin Avenue.

It is possible that the final moments of his life will change the balance and we will be spared the agonizing contemplation of any repetitions of his fate.

But who will tell him as his life ebbs away that he must be of good courage. Who will arrest his spirit in its flight and commend its devotion to duty and who will write upon his epitaph "Though plain and unassuming in his life, he died a martyr's death".

Sandblasters

With over one month of the academic year gone the library is still not in anything approaching running order.

It remains practically impossible for a student to obtain a book with any degree of promptness. The library is not open in the evening and the whole complicated process of getting a book is so wearisome many students are letting it slide.

While we are aware that the staff is operating under tremendous difficulty with the two separate rooms and with the change in placement of books we do feel that something could be done to help the students.

Apparently the hold up is over the uncompleted shelves. We fail to understand why a project whose completion is as important as this has not been given emergency treatment.

Surely it would be possible to have extra shifts take on this task. Surely it is not absolutely necessary for the student to be inconvenienced this way.

It appears that the construction of the library is being carried on practically without reference to the needs of the students. When construction was commenced the students requested that it be delayed until examinations were completed. This request was ignored and people preparing for examinations were treated to an incessant cacophony of sandblasters.

It must be possible for the contractors to accede in some measure to the needs and requests of the student body.

Appeal

Some students of the university may be interested in the provisions of section 82 of the University of Toronto Act.

"A student shall have the right to appeal to the Board from any punishment awarded against him except in the case of expulsion which has been confirmed by the Board, but shall have no other right of appeal and the decision of the body exercising disciplinary jurisdiction as hereinbefore provided shall be final and binding and not open to review except by the Board."

School Spirit

By JOHN ROBERTS

For the past several weeks we have been bombarded from the columns of The Varsity in the interests of school spirit. Engineering vandalism is explained as being a result of "spirit", the Blue and White sponsors a cheer writing contest to encourage 'spirit', rugby game crowds are castigated for not showing enough "spirit", University College published a newspaper in the interests of "spirit" and last week a letter to the editor appeared, criticizing the powers that be for the fact that we are not proud of this university and lack "spirit".

Two things are clear from all this discussion. First, no one has shown what spirit is and, second, obviously, even if they don't know what it is, it is a good thing.

I think it is fairly easy to ascertain what spirit is and I also think it is fairly easy to show that is detrimental.

In each of the above cases it is clear that what spirit means is a conscious adhesion by the individual to the mass. Wear a bloop, or an Enginearing jacket, or a Trinity tie and identify yourself, not as an individual, but as a part of a group. Wave your tweeper, cheer loud and clear for the mighty Blue team and thus ensure that you are known as a unit of the University of Toronto. Be proud of your university, simply because it is your university, and emphasize the fact that you belong to it.

Spirit is evidence of, and results in, the herd instinct to belong. As such it is necessarily detrimental to the realization of the purposes of a university. A university should, I think, attempt to do three things:

(1) develop the analytic faculties of the mind to a point where the student can dispassionately dissect and reconstruct ideas.

(2) develop a sense of social obligations.

(3) provide some appreciation of the western cultural heritage.

"Spirit does not aid any of these facets of education. Indeed "spirit" acts directly contrary to one of these, namely the development of the analytic faculty.

A member of a group, and "spirit" in the sense that it is now used can only be applied to groups, must accept the conventions and symbols of that group or cease to be a member of it. "Spirit", and the desire to have all exhibit it, means the suspension of critical analysis in order to embrace group standards. The individual must adapt to, and support, homogeneity and in this adaption tends to accept rather than question, the development of group "spirit", in other words, necessitates conformity, the submergence of individual objectives to group attitudes.

The whole danger in this emphasis on "spirit" is that it will mean the subordination of individual development in the interests of cohesion of the mass and that in the emphasis on mass cohesion the individual will neglect the development of the analytic faculties which it is the purpose of the university to develop.

our readers write:

Battle of Sexes Rages Still

Page three of a recent Varsity saw a screaming headline accusing the so-called "Beard fondling woman" of being the usurper of the "male position". Professor Carpenter accuses woman of "driving man out of his time-honoured realms". Is the professor's condemnation of women the product of true anthropological research or is it merely the result of a grudge against the female sex?

We read with surprise the professor's harsh comments on women's dress. Since it is a man such as Mr. Dior who sets most of the fashion, the poor woman can hardly be blamed for the atrocious results. And who is the first to verbalize in derogatory tones when the woman fails to keep pace with the most recent styles? The injured male, of course.

We would like also to inform the professor that our jeans are relatively new, that our shirts, referred to in such an uncouth manner as "filthy sweatshirts", are clean, and that our "bucks" are as white or whiter than any of those worn by the well-groomed man. May we suggest that the professor look about himself and observe some of the conglomeration of mixed plaids and unmatched suits worn by some of his fellow males.

If women can prove themselves capable of filling male positions why shouldn't they enter engineering and other male-dominated occupations? If men's egos are going to suffer why do they not prove themselves superior and eliminate us from the field? In order to succeed in a so-called "man's field", a woman must surpass her male competitors; hence Professor Carpenter's conclusion that "woman was replacing man everywhere", is an indication that woman must have a higher degree of intelligence.

As for the beards, if the men can keep their beard grooming up to the standards of women's hair grooming demanded by male members of our race, we will be satisfied with the beards.

For any poor, misguided males who are duped into believing these distorted ideas, we have only sympathy. May they rest in peace!

Jazz Concert

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Yes Mr. McCrae, I too would like a jazz concert, for I appreciate good music. I do not question your aim, — to aid the Community Chest, but why must we provide entertainment to collect charity. Indeed charity is a poor word to use, for everyone benefits from these appeals, whether they be for the Community Chest, SHARE, the Settlement House, blood for the Red Cross et al. We must realize that we are fortunate in being able to give "us our "cigarette money." We are an integral part of our community and as such have an obligation to aid those less fortunate than we. Perhaps the reason for the poor response to these appeals is that the conditions which it is sought to alleviate seem remote from most of us. It is hoped that the present hurricane disaster appeal will be more successful without having to resort to "jazz concerts," so that as responsible members of the community we can say without any qualms of conscience that we are "our brother's keeper."

souvarian plays in hart house

Pianist Pierre Souvairan, first recitalist in this season's Sunday evening concert at Hart House, left an impression of subtle refinement, profound introspection and Gallic charm. Mr. Souvairan's pastel artistry produced a music of exquisite tonal beauty primarily through an unusually delicate touch encompassing a wide range of dynamic scale from mezzo-forte to pianissimo. It seemed to us however that Mr. Souvairan lacked this talent in the louder range. We could not help noticing that subdued subtlety of this kind, did not confirm to the opening Bach Partita in C minor. Throbbing with vigour and exuberance, this work demands the crisp tonal texture of the harpsichord. Had Mr. Souvairan added this specifically baroque lustre to his colours we would perhaps have enjoyed Bach at his finest. Yet the "sinfonia" and the "sara-bande of the Partita had an authenticity of expression which moved us to take back parts of our criticism in favour of Mr. Souvairan's performance.

Mr. Souvairan's interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata Opus 110 in A flat Major appeared to us more contemplative than striving. Starting with a dream-like first movement the sonata reaches its climax in a fugue giving full vent to the impetuous passions of the composer. Mr. Souvairan however treated these heroic outbursts with serene inwardness, a conception somewhat at variance with the work's dramatic potentialities. The over-all effect nevertheless was partly compensated by the tonal delicacy of the first and third movements which glowed with a subdued light of introspective beauty.

The same charm and sensitivity prevailed in Schumann's rarely heard Humoresque, a series of pieces of varying emotional appeal. Mr. Souvairan's intelligent perception of the thematic structure revealed some very earthy humour which blended admirably with the innate tenderness of the composer's romanticism. We were particularly impressed by the ingenious use of the left hand contributing largely to the vivacious rhythmic brilliance.

An encore by Debussy full of atmospheric grace and iridescence brought us most closely to the genius of that composer.

Marni Littlejohn

Campus Profile

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

For the second consecutive year the stands at Varsity Stadium have echoed with the cries of, "Yeah, Little Yeah John, Yeah Marney LittleJohn."

Marney LittleJohn came to U of T two years ago from Haver-gal College. It was at Haver-gal that Marney first became known in the field of sports. She was there elected games Captain of her House, and Vice-President of her graduating year.

At Varsity Marney has been on the Inter-Collegiate Badminton team and played Inter-Mural Baseball and Volleyball.

Among her other talents Marney is actively engaged in ballet and art. But students at Varsity know her mainly for her dynamic and inspiring cheerleading. She is as keen about her cheerleading off the field as on. When asked about the spirit on campus this year Marney thought it could be improved considerably and suggested various means of doing so, one of which was an All-Varsity Review as was held two years ago. She declared, "this kind of a show would tend to integrate the students on this campus and give the University a greater oneness of spirit."

Next year she hopes to try again for her same position or a cheerleader and make it three years in a row.

Marney, who is now in her second year at Vic in Household Science, hopes on graduation to enter the field of textiles as a buyer.

B&W SPONSORS GRAHAM VISIT

By JOE AZIZ

Approximately seventy-six percent of the students polled were in favour of a visit by Billy Graham to Varsity Stadium this year under auspices of the Blue and White Society.

At U.C., a recent arrival from England told of the tremendous interest which was stimulated by the visit of the Billy Graham team to London this spring. He told of Churches rebroadcasting his services, and of the number of people who were stirred out of their lethargy. Others who were asked would like to attend one of his meetings more for the sake of curiosity than for anything else.

Most students in Trinity realized the good work that Billy Graham has done and said that his visit might give students a deeper insight into their own religion.

Although Stephanie Parker admitted that Mr. Graham was emotional she felt that this was definitely necessary to spark the students from their apathy and indifference. She thought from his radio talks that he possessed an extraordinary inner conviction, and that to bring him to Toronto would be beneficial for everyone.

At St. Mike's Martha Sullivan replied with an emphatic "DE-FINITELY NOT!" The others there saw no harm in Billy Graham's visit and suggested that it might do some good.

The Engineers are not really as evil as everyone thinks, they just have not had the opportunity to think as much along these lines as have the Arts students. Tom Heiks and Stu Eccles, II Civil, said that if given the chance they would like to attend one of the meetings but Rein Taagepera I Chemical thought that by now Graham's message would have lost its initial zest and taken on a repetitious air.

manners and mores

By BILL SMYTHE

Newspapers should not write about themselves. The Varsity is a newspaper. Therefore we should not write about The Varsity. Thank you, Professor Long. And you, too, Mr. Aristotle.

But we shall write about the Varsity, all the same.

It is an interesting feature of the girls at the Varsity offices that they are entirely aloof to flattery. Well, almost anyway. A female visitor is greeted with "what can we do to you"; the stars in their eyes, the tears in their ears, the diamonds on their heaving bosoms — all are lovingly remarked by the observant, but slightly salacious, reporters, editors, and sports writers. Especially the sports writers. Their profession seems to develop a keen eye for beauty.

The Varsity offices are always confused. The various departments have always lost copy due to the abysmal stupidity of some other department. The typical picture of the reporter buried in paper, "1/4" weed sticking out of his mouth, cursing violently as he writes a touching article of murder and mayhem on the campus, certainly applies. But as long as the paper doesn't block the doors, "THE PAPER WILL COME OUT."

We must admit that the language around the offices shocked us at first, because we were a gentle unassuming quiet, unprofane, meek and mild youth; we fear that The Varsity has corrupted us. But this influence has been overcome to some extent, so fear not, CUQUUM & M youth. Daily communication with our noble, inspiring, good, decent, and Canadian Grandmother has

Arbor room pic of the week

This picture by Philip Aziz is called MOTHERHOOD or IN PAIN SHALL SHE BRING FORTH. On loan to Hart House it is hanging opposite the juke box in the Arbor Room, a spot reserved for the Hart House "Picture Of The Week". It is an egg-tempera painting on the age-old madonna theme. "An attempt is made to manifest visually a profound abstraction concerning the penetrating love of motherhood and a hint of the mystery of birth" says the handbill which Hart House provides. The painter is on the staff of Western U. in the Department of Fine Arts.

Campus Canons

Swan Song

By Sandra Skye

There are numerous ancient relics (both human and structural) on this campus which most of us pass every day, and, which most of us have never noticed from the first day we passed them.

Among the most interesting of these, ranks the Hart House cannons... austere, black guardians of the grounds on which they stand. Well, any way, they used to be guardians. But now, some heartless, unfeeling soul has stuffed their mouths with wooden blocks, debasing them into nothing more than glorified lawn ornaments. But were their muzzles unblocked, what tales they could relate, what incidents they could recall from their dim, but glorious past!

They would, no doubt, commence their narration at the time when they once proudly resided on a French warship, La Prudente, where they lashed out in fury against an English ship at Louisbourg, during the Seven Year's War. Their story would then become a little hazy, since, after this rather unfortunate assault, they sank to a watery prison, and were not recovered until 1901, when the vessel was raised from the bottom of the harbour, and donated to the university by a member of the graduating class of 1901.

From this time on, their history, oddly enough, takes on a much more colourful and exciting hue. Our mute friends would no doubt agree that their new place of residence brought incidents the like of which would have no counterpart on any man o' war.

For example, there was the time, in 1939, when members of the ASPC (Ardent Sympathizers of the Plugged Cannons) Society, made the cannons roar to the tune of several broken windows in the Parliament Buildings. In later years, further followers of this same admirable organization made the campus and a good area 'of our fair-city' resound to the deafening explosion of these ancient weapons. (Imagine the effect of this on a Sunday in Toronto).

And the guardians of Hart House have not been without romance throughout the years. One cannot vouch for the number of kidnapped lassies who were wooed in their vicinity, by sneering naval blackguards in days of yore, but we are all familiar in this day and age, with the sight of sighing silhouettes who make the cannons their trysting-place.

Yes, certainly these cannons would have a fascinating legend to unfold. However, on thinking over the facts they would relate, especially in connection with the former paragraph, perhaps it's just as well that their mouths have been prudently plugged.

improved us immensely. Hurrah for NIGD & C.

The Varsity also has parties. They are not NIGD & C. But they are fun. Censorship restrictions forbid us to say

But it was there that we first encountered a drink called King's Plate, which we have been drinking at meals ever since. It goes well with all kinds of meat, soups, desserts, and beverages. It is a good drink. People have been telling us to stay away from it. But it is a good drink.

Besides it makes us slightly salacious like the parties. And the Manus Islanders. Thank you, Dr. Mead. And we can write salacious articles that people can object to and thereby cause more people to read The Varsity, because most people are lewd, lecherous, libidinous, and American. Whooop.

DENTISTRY IS A FOOTBALL SURPRISE

Dentists Pull Woody's Teeth As Molarmen Top Forestry 9-0

By JOHN VOJTECH

Maybe it was an omen. Walking up to Molson Stadium at McGill for Saturday's game we were held up by a funeral procession, also headed in the direction of the Stadium. Then again, just one hearse would never hold all the McGill Redmen, so it must have been for some other people.

It was Homecoming Week-end at McGill and the Blues made it a sad one. The McGill people must have anticipated the terrible score, because they seemed near-gone long before the kick-off. Most of them brought special life-giving nourishment to the game, some a bit too much it seemed as the constables led them out of the park to sleep it off.

Varsity types grew very happy too. A few extremely fine fellows became so happy that they felt the need for music, so they just lifted a trombone from the McGill Union for to serenade themselves a bit. As it happened the instrument was Toronto property, belonging to Blue and White Bandsman Bill Clark of SPS. These nice fellows, who were of course just having some "nice clean fun", we are sure, then went about spreading the trombone all around Montreal. Unfortunately they neglected to show the decency of returning the stolen article after they were done their horse-play. Now Bill is somewhat put-out about losing an expensive instrument and hopes he isn't being a pest if he asks the little playboys to return what's left of it to him. Could it be that the characters responsible have so little character that they would rather have the man lose his trombone than admit the deed? The Varsity suggests, since it is almost certain that Varsity students were the culprits, that the trombone be returned.

The most pitiful thing about the McGill Homecoming was the fact that the Red and White spirit seemed to come bottled only. The McGill types had no float parade, no cheerleaderettes, few cheers and nothing really to cheer about.

Our own Homecoming Week-end comes this Saturday, and we will have a Float Parade, good cheerleaders, and an enthusiastic student crowd, we are sure. The Blues have begun to roll, and this coming week-end could move them into second place. The Blue and White Society has mentioned earlier this year that the McGill game at Varsity would be preceded by a big outdoors Pep Rally, and that big things would happen. It would be nice if we could all hear about what's to happen so we could prepare for it now.

A flash announcement has thrown the Varsity Sports Desk into furious activity. Benny, of the famous one eye, is entering the Float Parade and will be on view to all his countless admirers come Saturday. This is the first time Benny has condescended to make a public appearance since his god-father, Uncle Scarface Al, withdrew his protection. Benny will be protected by a squad of Varsity secret police types. The full details of Benny's float entry are not yet known, but there will be a wire-service desk for latest results, co-ed vendors of chances at Benny's long green, and a curtained off private reception room wherein Varsity professors who shy from the glare of publicity will be able to meet with Benny and maybe place a cultural bet or two.

It would be nice to see the Blue and White go all out to make this Homecoming Week-end the most memorable of all-time, after all, Benny comes but once a year.

Yesterday over on the east football field the Dents proved that they were better than Forestry by nine points and four cheerleaders. This was the first game for either team and they proceeded to fall into the usual pitfalls that a team encounters on its first contest. Both teams fizzled before some of the backfielders got moving and in other instances the backfielders were crowding down the quarterbacks' neck to see just who was going to take the ball and how.

The Forestry linemen particularly were at fault on third down kicks. A faulty snap and a few bad blocks almost got their kicker trapped many times. They ought to get down on their knees every night and thank the good lord for sending them a kicker like McClelland, who said after the game, quote: "It's hellish back there seeing four or five guys bearing down on you, but I try not to think of them and only of the ball that I've got to get rid of" unquote. This philosophy kept Forestry from getting into serious difficulty.

Although it was a lack-lustre affair there were moments that showed the spirit of both teams. Don O'Conner gave a cross body block to a Forestry player. O'Conner felt the player slip so he hit him with his hip. O'Conner was hurt on this play but after staying on the ground in a prostrate position for what seemed to be hours, the spunky lad got up and was assisted from the field. Fortunately he was not hurt seriously and so will be back in uniform for the next Dent game. It would be quite unfortunate for the Dentists to lose a player of O'Conner's caliber and punting ability. He aided in his teams cause by kicking a safety before retiring involuntarily. Forestry on the other hand kept plugging away at the Dentists but Imada and McClelland couldn't do it all themselves. But Gray, Harrott and Crombie helped.

One of the prettiest plays of the game was the play on which the Dentists got their touchdown. Reid Currie tossed a long pass to Jim O'Brien for the only major of the game. This was scored late in the first quarter. From there it developed into a kickers duel with Dents having the decided edge.

After O'Conner had been replaced the Dents called in Reid Currie to handle the punting chores. He performed amiably by promptly adding two safeties to his credit. The other point was the convert which Hori kicked successfully.

Forestry's Harrott tried desperately to get life into the Foresters but to no avail... They ought to try McClelland at the end position, he's certainly tall enough. He grabbed some passes just by standing where he was and reaching above his head which is 'way up there... Dents Rivest and O'Brien were best on pass defence... Hori almost blocked quite a few Forestry kicks... The main fault of many of the backfielders was that instead of falling forward after being hit by an opposing tackler, they fell backwards, thereby losing some ground... Forestry's Crombie, small in stature, made many gains by simply falling forward after he was hit by fellows twice his size... Dents Shunock was the top ground gainer of the game... Again for the fifth game the team with the cheerleaders won the game... Oh yes, the final score was 9-0 for the dentists.

Blues Trim McGill 3-1

Varsity's Senior soccer team, travelling to Montreal in the wake of the victorious footballers, came up with a 3-1 win over the McGill Redmen, to thoroughly cement athletic relations with the Montreals.

The Blues struck early in the first half for two goals by Rod Green and Bill Webb. Green's goal came after a neat cross pass from Brian King in the first 40 seconds of play. King also set up the second tally as McGill failed to answer in the opening frame.

The Blues just about put the game on ice in the second half when Ray Griffiths eluded several McGill defenders to beat the Redmen goalie with a hard shot to the upper right corner.

McGill spoiled the Varsity shut-out with a score minutes later, and then proceeded to tie the Blues up in knots. Pressing hard in the dying minutes of the contest, the Redmen all but put the ball in the net, and the Blues were fortunate to escape with such a clear victory.

Varsity captain Jose Atucha was injured early in the game, but returned in the second half to lead the Varsity defence. John Hubicki was the outstanding player on the field for the Blues, breaking up many a McGill rush from his full back spot.

McGill returns to Toronto this Saturday for another try, and the Blues will be out to preserve their unbeaten record.

Varsity — Gacser, Sweeney, Hubicki, Ounpuu, Williams, Leach, Green, Griffiths, Webb, Atucha, King, Subs — Yuen, Ochrym.

Rugger Blues Lose

An individual breakthrough by McGill less than two minutes from the final whistle broke the heart of the Varsity rugger Blues in their Saturday game at Montreal. Coming after 78 minutes of close scoreless play, the resulting try was probably the finest play of the game, but made the score a rather doubtful indication of overall abilities. A Scoreless draw would have been just about right. As it was, Varsity finished off on the wrong end of a 3-nil score.

Right from the start of the game, it was plain that there would be no soaring score. With Blues having an edge in the line, and the Redmen slightly heavier among the forwards, the ball see-sawed from end to end with a speed that at times became quite bewildering.

Adding to the spectator appeal (and there was plenty of it) was the eye-catching long-range kicking of both sides, with a perfect ball on a firm pitch. In this department Drummond-Hay and Chadwick were outstanding for Blues, at times forcing the entire McGill defence to run back to get under the ball.

For most of the game McGill was kept pinned on their own side of the half-way line, with Chadwick and Harper constant threats by their solo runs. In the first half especially, Blues were unlucky not to connect with several scrums on the home team's five-yard line.

Then, with about 90 seconds to go, the worst happened. John Jackson, McGill stand-off and captain, ran into a short pass from a loose scrum 40 yards out, and kept right on running. At a sprint pace, he bored through an off-guard Blues defence and touched down almost between the posts for the only score of the game.

With only one unconverted try tallied against them, the Blues have their best chance in years of winning the intercollegiate title back from McGill. The return game will be played at Varsity Stadium this Friday at 2:30 p.m.

Earl Ford Back As Blue Guard Solid Man In Blue Forward Wall

No football team is complete without a character; someone who can keep the boys laughing and relaxed both on and off the field. This year the Blues are blessed by the return of their one man "Happy Gang", Earl Ford, after a years absence because of academic difficulties.

Besides being one of the most popular men on the team, the "Early Bird", is having a good year playing at the guard spot where he performed two years ago. Last season, he was the outstanding player on that strong Skule team which won the Mulock Cup.

In the vital statistics department, Earl is 23, stands 5ft. 8 in. tall and weighs 180 lbs. He started his football career at St. Jerome's High in Kitchener and since then has performed at both fullback and wingback, as well as guard.

The "Cube" is a third year man in Engineering. After his studies and football, Earl also has to find time for his wife and baby daughter. He also played some standout basketball for Skule last year, and did some wrestling to keep in shape for football.

A great team player, Earl is an important factor in the Blues championship hopes this year.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

While most of the sports types were down Montreal way on the week-end, a foursome of Toronto ladies ventured to McMaster to try their hand at a bit of that Robin Hood stuff.

The result of this venture, was a third spot in the intercollegiate ranks. This indicates one thing — that archery is getting stronger all the time.

The reason we say this is, that third placed Toronto sent the strongest squad they ever have to an intercol archery match. But we're still not good enough to bring home any bacon. Never mind, we're working on it! All we need is a little more experience. The girls worked hard all Fall and we know they are not discouraged.

The weekend at McGill was not as spectacular as other Homecomings we have seen. It lacked the glamour of cheerleaders — girl ones. The boys did a nice job but we feel kind of sorry for the male fans down there. We still don't know how our girls got away with it because a skirt above the knees in old Quebec is usually good for a twenty dollar fine or a night in the cooler.

At any rate, the weather was perfect and the Toronto fans were given a most warm welcome in all the local fraternities. — in spite of the score.

Gal Hoopsters Going Competition Is Fierce

Women's basketball officially began the season last night at UTS. And from any angle it looks like a good year on the courts.

Harrier

Tonight, harrier will take over from football as the back campus becomes the scene of the interfaculty harrier meet. This race, formerly known as the junior harrier championships, is open to all undergraduates with the exception of those who have run for the Senior Intercollegiate Harrier team.

The race will be slightly longer this year. It is made up of three laps around a circular course. Each lap is roughly three quarters of a mile. The competition should be keen, with several well-known runners taking part. Among the advance entries received, are such names as Peter Watson, Bruce Hughes, Bill Gelling and Gord Hueston who ran with the Blues in their exhibition meet in Niagara last Saturday.

Starting time will be 4:30 p.m. As usual, post entries will be accepted.

At any rate, you can expect a lot of keen competition, particularly between THE second and third year, Meds and UC. sophs.

This year four colleges and four faculties have entered squads into the six leagues. Nursing has entered a new squad while Vic has placed five — the most of all the colleges.

Games will be played nightly over at UTS. It's a long way off but is still the only spot available to run the meets. Each squad will play a total of six games and playoffs are scheduled for mid December. There are 23 squads in all.

Last year PHE was the main contender for the interfaculty crown. But Meds came up with the upset of the century by battling against the three physed groups and finishing on top of the league. It was Med's first win in eleven years and they are still counted as strongmen this season.

Intercollegiate workouts will not begin till later in November. There is no intercol league but exhibition meets will be held beginning in January.

There is still a need for coaches for the interfaculty groups. One or two of the squads are still short this all important factor.

Girls' Softball

St. Mike's gals continued their winning streak yesterday overwhelming St. Hilda's II by a score of 12-1. St. Mike's are yet to be defeated and lead their league.

St. Mike's started out fast scoring 4 runs in the first inning on home runs by Anne Kotze and Diane Purvis while Dolly Molnar and Moira Cawell were on base.

St. Hilda's scored their only run in the first inning on a hit by Meme Forgan which sent Marg Bouldon into home.

Three runs were scored in the 2nd inning by S.M.C. Mary Ann Flaherty drove in 2 runs on her triple and then scored herself. St. Hilda's were held scoreless in the 2nd submitting to Anne Kotze's controlled pitching.

The Double Blue were strong in the 3rd inning scoring 5 runs while St. Hilda's were again scoreless.

Marg Bouldon behind the plate and Polly Shaker at 2nd base were steady for the losers, but couldn't contend with the powerful hitting of St. Mike's.

CCFer's Oppose Armed Germany In Straw Vote

The U of T CCF Club passed by a straw vote of 12-5 a motion opposing German rearmament. Because of the split opinion, a committee was formed further to investigate the situation and to report their findings to the next membership meeting.

Speaking for the opposition, Don Stevenson stated that the rearmament was a regrettable necessity. An unarmed Germany would cause a split in Europe that would allow the Communists to strengthen their position.

Bob Fenn in support, pointed out that with modern weapons like the H-bomb troops will be unnecessary except for occupation and mopping up. It was questioned whether rearmament would foster peaceful co-existence or add fuel on the fire towards a hot war.

Pat Parker was elected to represent the club as an observer at the forthcoming provincial meeting.

Steamshovel Sits On Trinity's Walk

Yesterday morning a large steamshovel made its appearance on Philosopher's Walk. Its purpose was to construct a sewer outlet for the New Trinity Residence.

Large chunks of dirt, a wooden barrier, and several workmen now make the walk rather formidable for all those who must use the walk to get from the south portion of the campus to Bloor St. and the Economics Building.

The sewer for the Trinity Residence will run from the residence beneath the walk to the valley on the other side. Its construction is expected to take two or three days.

Frye Praises Arts Course

Humanities are on the rebound in America, said the head of the Victoria English Department last night in his speech to the Victoria Church Students Union. Addressing the inaugural meeting of this group in the Music room at Wymilwood, Professor Frye told prospective candidates for the ministry that a Liberal Arts education is an indispensable prelude to theological training.

He said that the purpose of such a course is to free the mind, and quoted Newman as saying, "A Liberal Arts Education is not good for something, it is good in itself." "The only freedom a person can have," said Frye, "is academic freedom, and the preservation of this is the preservation of the only freedom."

He told them as prospective ministers that they would serve as links between their pastoral charges and culture, and warned them against "vulgarizing their Christian standards" by becoming projections of their audiences. He said that in their efforts to impart the revelations of God they must guard against failure to integrate their education with their ordinary lives.

Rotary Club Grant Awaits Applicants

Applications for a $3,400 post-graduate scholarship given by the Rotary Club for study abroad, must be made before November 1, it was announced yesterday.

Dr. G. V. Fisk said that the scholarship was open to students in all faculties of the University. Students planning to graduate next June as well as students who already hold a B.A. degree or its equivalent and are between the ages of 20 and 29, are eligible to compete, he said.

Application forms, it was stated, are obtainable from Mr. Nick Kinsman, the secretary of the Toronto Rotary Club at the Royal York Hotel.

The scholarship is given by Rotary International in this district every other year. Students at McMaster University as well as the University of Toronto may compete, Dr. Fisk said.

Winners of the award are expected to "interpret Canada" to Rotary clubs abroad, Dr. Fisk said, and to do the same when they return home, giving Rotarians here, a picture of conditions as they found them while abroad. "We expect that the selection will be made by the first of January," Dr. Fisk said. He said that the selection would have to be approved by Rotary International's head office in Chicago, as well as by the District Governor.

Winner of the scholarship two years ago was Bob Charette, a 23-year-old electrical engineering graduate here, who studied in Switzerland.

At present, Philip Wilson of Melbourne, Australia is studying law here on an Australian Rotary Club scholarship. Between study, he has been accompanying the club's district Governor on visits to Rotary clubs in Ontario centres.

Balance of Opinion

The Editor,
The Varsity:

So that THE VARSITY may reach a balance of opinion on what is now a very much discussed subject, I take the liberty of trying to put a stop to a long series of protests from 'cynical biased male' and 'disgusted, respectable female' writers.

Among the mentioned group of articles, I felt that none so far showed a very important quality, tolerance. Instead, there rose a spirit that tried to envelop the human relation into taboo, branding adverse opinions with qualities of vice and licentiousness.

It cannot seem logical that the article of the 'Cavalier of the Street' should have caused such revolts of frenzy, and, I must say, intolerance. What the 'Cavalier' thinks and writes, is his own choice; printing his article was the obligation of this paper. Persons who disagreed with the 'Cavalier's' views did not have to shower him with insults, nor was it necessary for them to speak of U of T women students as a herdlike group of dictated, stereotyped morals and behaviour.

Morals are strictly a personal question; must there be among us many of those who, by their own standards, prohibit a person his opinions and brand romance, sex, as despicable? Neither a self-respecting co-ed, nor any student of virtuous belief should be excited to fever by such an article as the 'Cavalier's'. We do permit light-heartedness, scepticism to touch us to an unharmed degree; is sex, a human relationship, not to be scorned nor denied, an exception to this?

I sincerely hope that here at the U of T there will be no fear of held opinions, and no mean, contemptible watchfulness and spying on the virtue and chastity of others. Furthermore, should any more articles, like that of the 'Cavalier', appear in this paper, I hope that at least the writer of them will have his freedom of expression and

Far Reaching Effects

To the Editor,
The Varsity:

The verdict handed down by the Caput came as a great shock to all the engineers on the campus. In fact it seems that the cure is far worse than the malady.

There is no doubt that the whole engineering body condones the actions of the 23rd of September. For the injuries suffered by Prof. McAndrew we offer our deepest apologies, for the material damages we offer payment to the Colleges involved. But the suspension of the Engineering Society and the $4,000 fine is unjustified.

The past week I visited Queen's University. It was with a heavy heart that I realized what a tremendous spirit they have comparison respected, and that he will not incur such a flood of insults.

In closing, may I commend THE VARSITY for the fact that it does, and must, allow expression to all kinds of opinion. Tom Szekely, S.P.S. I pared to ours.

The engineers have demonstrated presently their spirit by their splendid response to the flood disaster. They responded to this emergency by sending a large number of volunteers and they will certainly respond with generous donations. The engineers have proven that they are more than just a group of "hell raisers" unfit for self-government. Perhaps the University of Toronto will demonstrate the same spirit by turning over this sudden windfall of $4,000 to the victims of the flood who have lost so much. J. G. TUROLGYI, III S.P.S.

Beliefs and Prejudices

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Your correspondent V. Sermat, in the Varsity for October 5, describes the often neglected price that must be paid "for being rational and critical about accepted beliefs or prejudices", and he invites the opinions of others on this question.

While I would agree with all that Mr. Sermat says about the price of honest enquiry, I note that he has failed to mention directly the penalties attached to the way chosen by the majority of people, that of considerable or even total compromise of principle.

In six years between graduation and return to the campus, I have talked with many graduates working in many different jobs, and I have consulted my own experience; and the conclusion I have come to is that once a student becomes aware, in his undergraduate days, of the simple fact that there is discoverable truth in the area of "beliefs and prejudices", some of which is unpleasant to face — once he is aware of this, he must either pursue this truth in some fashion from then on or else suffer great personal unhappiness at some period later in his life.

The nature of this unhappiness is apparently easy to explain: it is the suppressed conflict coming into ordinary consciousness as a result of some unusual event or crisis, so that suddenly what had grown to be basic assumptions are called into question, and one's life and actions appear in a new and unfavorable light.

In fact, this is not the whole explanation, and I would be grateful to anyone who could shed more light on the causes of such crises of conscience.

But it is enough for the purpose of this letter to stress that the penalties attached to compromise are in the end as great as those associated with the dedicated pursuit of truth. If anyone is inclined to question this statement, let him remember that a crisis of conscience is a disturbing but a very private matter, and that as a rule someone experiencing such a crisis will take the greatest pains to conceal it. Through a lively interest in the subject I have had occasion to hear, in confidence, of many such crises; and I am sure that any parish minister would bear me out.

Therefore, if any student is really in a position to make a conscious choice (in most cases, surely, the "choice" is unconscious), let him set against the often painful price of critical examination of accepted opinion the delayed but more intense pain which will sooner or later, in almost every case, result from making the easy compromise.

Weymouth Robinson,
I Emmanuel.

HERE'S A NICE SPOT TO BE IN

We at Hoberlin's will come right out and admit that there is such a thing as an affinity between the sexes.

In fact, we will go as far as to endorse this leaning which one sex (specifically, male), has for the other sex (female).

While we do not claim that Hoberlin clothes can be classed with more violent aphrodisiacs, we certainly feel that a woman notices, respects, yea admires, the excellent good taste shown in Hoberlin styling.

This week, our own particular affinity is for Harris Tweeds... jackets and topcoats. Any time there are no customers in the shop (a few brief moments, to be sure), we stand around and gaze at our rapidly diminishing stock of Harris... saying a fond farewell, as it were.

If you've never worn a Harris before, why not drop in and just try one on. You may change a few of your ideas about this rugged fabric. You'll find it is light, long-wearing, and comfortable. If wives were made out of cloth, we're sure it would be Harris Tweed. Jackets from $42.50. Topcoats from $55.00. Come in this evening, we're open until 6.

Famous Architect Arriving To Appear on TV "Living"

Frank Lloyd Wright, world famous architect, will appear on the television program "Living" this Friday night. He will fly to Toronto Friday morning, and may lunch with Professor E. R. Arthur of the School of Architecture and several graduating students of the School of Architecture.

Wright will be interviewed Friday night on his work, his idea of 'organic architecture', and his life. No other definite plans have been made for him; Wright will determine his own programme when he arrives Friday morning.

"Wright is recognized as one of the greatest architects in the world. We're very interested in having him speak to the students of the School," said Dick Tustion, president of the Architectural Society, yesterday. Students may meet Wright at Malton airport and persuade him to come and discuss their work, he added.

Wright has been an architect for over 60 years, and is still practicing and teaching. He runs an architectural school near his home in Spring Green, Wisconsin, for about 60 apprentices. His most recent designs were the Guggenheim museum in New York and the Price Tower, in the Mid-West.

T.V. or not T.V.?

kampus komment on the kwestion

Eavesdropping over a cup of coffee the other day, we happened to tune in on a discussion about all things—television. After listening to the pros and cons hurl their pearls across the table for a while, our curiosity (which is what got us into this repertorial business in the first place, we guess) was awake and yawning. And since the strain showed no signs of slacking, we decided to find out a few things.

So sticking a press card into our hat, we wandered out to find out What People Thought. It may be argued that we were five years late. But on the other hand, there's something to be said for the opinion that when the tumult and the shouting dies you find out more about the battle. Anyway, we went.

The first stop was the UC Men's Residence. "We aren't provided with TV," said Peter

Martin, "but five of the six houses have it anyway. And yes, we do approve. Those who are opposed to TV are the snobs who call themselves intellectuals. The OK guy puts himself one up on the intellectuals by opposing the snobs who oppose TV."

"I might add," said Mr. Martin, "that Dean Bissell squelched the idea of replacing the weather-vane with an antenna."

Trinity, however, took a firm grip on the other side of the fence. "No," said David Ellis, Head of the House, "Trinity does not have television, nor does it wish to have it. As a matter of fact, the question recently came up before the Board, and it was unanimously decided that TV was unnecessary, and even detrimental to the life of the college."

"In short," concluded Mr. Ellis, "we feel that television has nothing of value to offer us — in its present condition, at least."

Hopping across to the University Men's Residences (the collection of red bricks that separates Trinity from St. Hilda's), we drew a total blank of opinion. "No," said somebody, "we don't have TV and I don't think we especially want it. To tell the truth, I don't really know what we think."

Just to be different, Victoria straddled the fence. "We haven't got one," said Doug Hamlin, but we're tempted. It's far too interesting, and far too much of a waste of time."

Our last stop was the Campus Co-operative. "Hell, no," remarked a spokesman, "we don't need a TV set. There's a very nice place called the 28th Battalion where we can combine beer and TV any time we want to — misinterpret the third question. While they gave the number of times they had attended church in question two, they answered "Have you ever?" in the negative. On the other hand, some of those who did not go to church, answered 'yes' to the third question.

On the religious side the coeds once more had the adge. They attended church an average of 65 times a year while the males managed only 14 visits. Twelve men didn't attend at all, but all but three of the coeds go at least some of the time. Nearly 50% of those who go to church don't drink while more than 50% of those who don't go to church do drink.

It was discovered by the Varsity's statisticians that at least six coeds both did not drink and attended church regularly. All of these also answered 'yes' to the last question, leaving no doubt in the staffers' minds of their ideal life.

Some of the replies were indicative of strong feeling. One male student answered 'none — no-yes, definitely' to the three questions. To the question concerning liquor one girl answered "Perhaps one glass of beer or a cocktail, sometimes more, usually less." Emphatic answers of 'None!' were common for the first question.

The Cavalier of the Streets could not be reached for comment.

Coeds Outdrink Men 12-7 Pints . . . Survey

S.P.S. Executive Report

At a meeting of the University of Toronto Engineering Society, the Dean, and a five-man committee representing the faculty council, the following was revealed on the current situation arriving from the Caput's decision handed down last week.

On Friday Oct. 22, the council of the Engineering Faculty met to act on the authority delegated to them by the Caput. At this meeting, a five-man committee was appointed to represent the faculty council in affairs dealing with the Engineering Society. These men are Professors Tracy, MacIntosh, Sagar, Rice, and Wright.

The Engineering Society, acting as the undergraduate engineers' elected representatives, discussed with the above committee and Dean McLaughlin the exact implications of the fine and suspension of the Engineering constitution.

From the discussion, the following was revealed:

1. The suspension of the Constitution was at no time to mean that the Engineering Society was to become defunct. It meant that the Constitution was to be withdrawn for study by the Faculty council which can suggest improvements, and give guidance to the Society in carrying out its functions.

The guidance will be applied to two specific items: finances and revisions of the constitution. All other functions of the Society will be left entirely in the hands of its officers.

The School dinner, the Float parade entry, Skule Nite, and every other worthwhile activity will certainly carry on.

2. The $4,000 fine paid to the University will be spent at the discretion of the Board of Gov-

Sample Interview Indicates Church, Beer Women's Forte

Almost 100 University of Toronto students gave conflicting replies here yesterday to a poll conducted by The Varsity. The three-point poll included two questions on drinking and religion. It was discovered by The Varsity's statistical staff that the coeds who drink (about 50%) swill down twelve pints of beer and five ounces of liquor a week.

Men students on the other hand, of whom 60% drink, only manage seven pints of beer and nine ounces of liquor.

This is the questionnaire presented to 40 women and 44 men students:

(1) Approximately how much beer or liquor do you drink during the week?

(2) How often do you attend church?

(3) Have you ever?

"Mark your answers on the paper provided — 1, 2, 3. Mark on the paper M or F for male or female. DO NOT sign your name — just fold the paper and place in the bag. No one will ever know how you answered, so please tell the truth without exaggeration."

Although the questionnaire was as carefully worded as possible some people appeared to

Hop to Arbor Room Ends UC Pep Rally

The UC Pep Rally last night concluded by bunny-hopping its way to the Arbor Room for a final cheer. Starting at 8.00 p.m., while the Red and White practiced on the UC campus field for their game on Thursday, approximately fifty people gathered in the Quadrangle of the new Men's Residence to practice the five UC cheers.

The four cheerleaders for UC; Pam Cooke, Myra Nellicks, Ann Keene, and Sandy Young, led the students in this first Rally. Ann Keene said that there was "more response than we expected." She added that she thought that future ones would be better, now that the students had seen what they were like.

a strictly stag establishment." When asked how the female counterpart of the Co-op fared for their entertainment, the comment was, "They don't need TV — they've got us!"

By this time we needed another cup of coffee, so we wandered back to the old discussion — which was still going strong, of course. Not much had been decided, but the general line of attack seemed to be those who felt that TV had nothing of value to give to the life of a university, vs. those who thought that TV was an important part of modern life. As far as we know, the issue is still at stake.

We should have reached some conclusions, we suppose. But the only idea we could salvage from all this — if you'll pardon an exhausted but appropriate platitude that was offered to us — was, "Like sex, it's here to stay."

CUP Staff

The Canadian University Press Staff of the Varsity will meet in the editorial office on Thursday evening at seven (28 Oct.) Those expected to attend are Doug Stewart, Sybil Strachan, Jane Griffin, Chas. Humphries, and Mike Cassidy.

All questions about the functions, nature, and advantages of the CUP will be answered at this important meeting.

CUP editor Chuck Williams said, "Goodness Gracious if they don't all turn out for this meeting things will be in a very serious state. Besides I will have to spend all the CUP budget myself and that could be very hard on my liver."

errors, who will meet this Thursday.

The reason for the $4,000 fine was explained. Each man can not be assessed, as money to every individual has a separate value. The fine then was levelled on the Society in order that the elected members of the Undergraduates could decide how it should be paid. It was intended to make the fine heavy enough to hurt, yet not so severe as to cripple all the Society's activities. Every student should realize that a penalty was imposed.

The most obvious point made at the meeting was that the Faculty's officers were sincere in their desire to help the Society with their problems and at no time was it suggested that they be the censors of the Society's motions.

Money Trouble

If the SAC, NFCUS or any other organization has money troubles they should be thankful that they do not have the problem of the Associated Students of the University of Southern California which this year finds itself $123,135 in the hole. Hold on to your wallets, gang.

Interesting Results

A poll conducted by Varsity staffers yesterday produced some interesting results. The facts and figures are outlined in the news article appearing on Page One.

Some obvious inconsistencies were noted in the survey.

For example, at least three persons who filled out a questionnaire replied to number two that they attended church regularly. However, to question three, "Have you ever?" they replied unequivocally, "No!" Presumably they had not been going to church at all.

Unfortunately

The decisions of the meeting between the engineers' elected representatives and the faculty council confirm our suspicions that student government is being universally regarded as a privilege and not a right.

Wherein the origins of this belief lie we cannot tell but we do believe it to be a fundamental contradiction of the democratic ideal which our society appears to vaunt so proudly.

Gelling Wins Harrier Watson, Hughes Next

In spite of the cold wet weather yesterday a large field of competitors turned out for the annual Intramural Harrier race on the back campus. In a finish that was nothing short of spectacular, Bill Gelling of Skule staved off a last minutes drive by Vic's Gord Hueston to beat him by stride. These two were followed closely by Peter Watson of Vic, and Bruce Hughes of U.C.

Thus it is that S.P.S., whose men placed first, eighth, and thirteenth, failed to place in team points. These are the first ten runners in the order they finished. Gelling S.P.S. (10:03), Hueston Vic. Watson Vic, Hughes U.C., Lee Meds, Stevenson Vic, Campbell Eman. Drummond S.P.S., Shepherd Wycl. Deacon Vic.

Top team honours went to Vic, whose men finished second, third, sixth and tenth, for a low score of twenty-one. Meds took second place by placing men fifth, seventh, eleventh, and fourteenth, for a total of 37 points. Third place went to Emanuel with 77 points. From the entire field of 35 runners these three faculties alone fielded the full team of four men.

Blues At Full Strength For Second McGill Game

McGill University Redmen invade Varsity stadium this homecoming weekend to play the second game in a home and home series began last Saturday. In the first match the Blues trounced the McGill men soundly, ending up on top by a count of 43-6, to nail down third place while the Queens Golden Gaels were absorbing a sad defeat from Western Mustangs down in London.

The Varsity pass attack finally hit full stride and is likely to hurt the McGill team even more in this home game. Should the Blues win the game they will probably be in second place, assuming that the Mustangs will do a repeat in Kingston.

Varsity will be at full strength for Saturday's tussle, although quarterback Bill Stevenson is having trouble with a sore arm gained in Montreal. Walt Radzick has a slightly twisted ankle, but should be ready for the game with the Redmen.

Ace Queens halfback of two seasons ago, John Sopinka has fully recovered from a dislocated shoulder received in the pre-season game with Balmy Beach.

Whether or not he plays Saturday depends on how quickly he rounds into shape in this week's practices.

Saint Mike's A's and Vic sophs opened their basketball season last night with a closely contested thriller.

Both teams started fast using a six-man defence with long passes and close man and man guarding. Vic went ahead on their long shots and Saint Mikes capitalized on Vic penalties.

The half time score was even 13-13. Vic started fast in the third quarter piling up five points. Saint Mikes fought back to make the score 19-15 at the end of that segment.

Vic went scoreless in the fourth and with 30 seconds remaining, Saint Mikes tallied to end the game 19-17.

Maxine Thompson, with her tremendous long shots and Mary Foster who played excellent offense shone for the victors. For SMC it was Ann Kotze on offence and Betty Corcoran on defence.

In the other game, played over at UTS, PHE third year Saint Hilda's thirds 33-11. It was Physedd's game all the way with Jane Duff tallying tops for the victors.

Baton Rouge—The Student Council of the Louisiana State University passed a resolution forbidding drinking at home football games, because of the possibility of bodily injury to student spectators, and the bad reflection cast upon the University at previous games.

Vancouver—One of the largest buildings at UBC, Brock Hall, was heavily damaged in a fire which broke out last night. Four firemen narrowly escaped death when the roof collapsed while they were standing on it. Cause of the fire has not yet been determined.

We like these gems from the University of Saskatchewan's Sheaf:

The butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker; why the heck can't I?"

And then there was the bashful girl who worked her crossword puzzles vertically so she wouldn't have to come across.

... ah, yes ...

Manitoba—Students who fail to take the annual chest X-ray at University of Manitoba will be excluded from classes until they do so. X-ray examinations at Toronto are completely voluntary.

Montreal—McGill has okayed a 30 cent increase in the per capita levy of NFCUS. The ratification is provisional on whether NFCUS will need the extra money to implement its program.

UN Club New York Trippers To Meet in Arbor Room Today

New York, anyone? The United Nations Club is organizing their annual trip to this city, to leave on Thursday 4. Everyone interested will be found in the Arbor Room at 5 o'clock today. There is no need to be a club member and there are no strings attached!

Why was last year's trip so wonderful? Well, they left on a Thursday night. That meant missing all Friday and Saturday lectures. Yes, they left on Thursday night and had their first sleep on Monday in the back row of their nine o'clock lectures. After all, a train is the place to play bridge, scrabble, and ukes, and N.Y.C. is the place to dance till dawn. Most of Saturday was free for shopping, sightseeing, and the latest plays.

In the U.N. itself, the Varsity students sat in on a session of the General Assembly and by using earphones they heard in English what the delegates were saying in foreign tongues. (Whether or not you use earphones depends on your French!) A tour of the U.N. building was made; Mr. V. Krishna Menon of the Indian Delegation gave a brief talk and discussion; a luncheon was held in the delegates' room which is on the top floor and overlooks the river; a benevolent old gentleman on the far side of the room was revealed to be Mr. Vishinsky. In order to meet students from other lands, a lunch was arranged at International House, a part of Columbia University.

Baby Blues Ahead Playing Western In London Saturday

Varsity's Baby Blues move out of town this week-end to open a home and home series with the Western Colts. As Queens, Ryerson, and O.A.C., are playing on an exhibition basis only this year, Varsity and Western will battle it out for the league title in these two games.

To date Toronto has dropped Ryerson 27-1 and Queens 17-7, while Western against the same opposition has gained a 36-0 victory and a tie. Intermediate football powers at Western are beating their publicity drums for this year's addition of the Colts. Billed as the best in many years hopes are high that the Intermediate title will rest in Kingston this winter.

Varsity will be strengthened for this coming Saturday, as speedy Al Wong and tackle John Iglar return to action. Jerry Hugo, who carried for one of the best running efforts last game, will be side lined with a leg injury. Also on the injured list and likely to miss the Western clash is Larry Turner.

Student Staff Relations Probed by SAC Committee

Student-Administration relations were criticized at last night's Students' Administrative Council meeting but a motion was adopted unanimously accepting the recent Caput's decision to suspend the Engineering Society.

In the report of the Caput-S.A.C. Liaison Committee it was stressed that firmer relations between the students and administration of the University are possible and should be sought so that the SAC may "reaffirm" its belief in the responsibilities and principles of student government.

The Sac decided to select a Committee at its next meeting to consider relations between students and administration and to make more use of the opportunities at present offered by the Caput-SAC liaison Committee.

The Committee consisting of five members of the Caput, the President and vice-president of the SAC, the secretary-treasurer, and associate secretary-treasurer of the SAC and the faculty adviser to the SAC met last Monday. The Student Representatives reported that there was a "definite lack of communication and understanding between students and administration on this Campus."

A clarification of the present position of the engineering Society was also made to the council. The SAC committee felt "the indefinite nature of the decision had created some misunderstanding within the student body" and that the position of the Society should have been clarified earlier.

A 1947 decision of the Caput was revealed to the members of the SAC. At that time the Caput passed a resolution, also arising out of objectionable SPS activities empowering it to "suspend any society in question by withholding the constitution." The SAC accepted the report which said that "the students could not be expected to appreciate or have knowledge of the 1947 resolution."

Bill Angus, president of the SAC, in answer to a question, said that "the Caput would have welcomed an alternative to the suspension that would have been stern enough." The Engineering Society, like all societies on the campus, has no power to discipline any student.

There was little debate on the report of the SAC Caput-Liaison Committee. It made clear in the report that the suspension of the Engineering Society was not intended to be merely punitive. It was an attempt to stamp out a tradition of rowdiness engendered through the years.

"The decision was in order to preserve self-government before it was destroyed by irresponsibility" the report stated. Although the committee did not question the disciplinary action it was "vitaly concerned with the implications of the decision on student government."

Varsity Showered with Praise and Censure As Dental Rep and Commissioner Disagree

Both praise and censure were given to The Varsity last night at the regular meeting of the Students' Administrative Council.

A vote of censure of the Varsity passed unanimously by the Student Parliament of the Faculty of Dentistry, was read at the meeting by Joe Slogan, Dents Rep. The Parliament felt that the quality of this year's Varsity is "not commensurate in standard with our fine university traditions," Slogan said.

The motion criticized the Varsity for following a "negative" policy and urged that the SAC request the Varsity to follow a "more positive spirit." Slogan also cited instance of "inaccurate reporting and objected to the large amount of space taken up by advertisements."

"The Varsity should not try to copy Downtown rallies," Slogan said. "It has a different field of interest."

Ian Scott, SAC Publications Commissioner, said in reply to Slogan's report that he considered this year's Varsity to be finer than those immediately preceding it. Wider coverage, more thorough and more accurate reporting, and a strong and vigorous editorial policy were commended, by Scott.

Scott felt that the Varsity's defects were due in large part to an unusually large turnover in staff this year. "As well as producing a newspaper every day it also had to teach an ele-

Drinking Question Arouses Interest Poll Considered "Fairly Accurate"

Do University of Toronto co-eds drink as much as yesterday's Varsity opinion poll indicated?

About 15 students interviewed after results of the poll were published yesterday were not prepared to think so. The interviewed students, while admitting the poll was "fairly accurate" as regarded church-going habits, were not convinced that the same accuracy applied to liquor-consumption.

Main objection was that neither a fair cross-section nor a sufficient number of students had been questioned.

The poll found that coeds here who did drink — about 50 percent of those attending the University — swilled down an average of 12 pint of beer and five ounces of liquor per week.

Male students were credited with consuming seven pints of beer and nine ounces of liquor. About 60 percent of male students drank, the survey showed.

Forty-four male students and 40 women students answered The Varsity's questionnaire.

The story stirred a flurry of excitement outside the University. The Toronto Daily Star slapped a report of it on front-page; The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was flashing it across the country; The McGill University newspaper was sending frantic wires to CUP editor Chuck Williams for 100 lines on the affair.

All news organizations were however, judiciously avoiding mention of the ambiguous question "2-B" of the questionnaire — "have you ever..."

The Toronto Star reported Professor M. C. Pirie of the department of Anthropology as saying: "The sample survey may well be a small, hard-drinking core of the co-eds of the University."

wife, mother, housewife

What To Call Her?

By HUGH McKELLAR

If you ever visit Mrs. Geoffrey Fisher, don't risk your neck by calling her a housewife. For this lady recently jumped into the news by declaring that neither she nor any of her 600 supporters would ever list their occupation as "housewife" on any government document.

Instead, they insist on being known as "wives and mothers"; for to them "housewife" recalls the long ages when a woman's world was bounded by the four walls of her kitchen, when she had to obey her husband or be beaten by him, and when she was at best an insignificant drudge and chattel. "Wife and mother" is, in their eyes, a title more in keeping with the far superior status of the modern woman.

As a firm believer in equality of the sexes, I applaud Mrs. Geoffrey Fisher's resolve, and only hope that it will accomplish for women as much as she thinks it will. I feel, however, that she might better have employed her energy in bludgeoning her husband — who happens to be Archbishop of Canterbury — into granting women equal rights with men in the church of which he is spiritual leader.

If she blarneyed him or bullied him (whichever worked better) successfully, women might be ordained as priests if they so desired, they might hold office in the church, they might be held worthy to sing in even the most fashionable of choirs. To my mind it is more of a barbarism to limit a woman's chance to serve God through her church than to call her a housewife; and it is strange that King Henry VIII, who was quite the ladies' man, didn't allow women more participation in the church that he established.

But he evidently thought such participation quite unnecessary, and Mrs. Geoffrey Fisher apparently agrees with him. If she can just be called "wife and mother" instead of "housewife" on the voters' list, she will be content. Yet, she might be happy to be called a housewife if she came to Canada and found that on federal voters' lists a married woman gets only a fat black dash after her name.

Nevertheless, the married woman's occupation should have a name, because it is so general, even though the nature of the work defies logical analysis. I am therefore going to propose a scheme which is so rational it will never be adopted anywhere. I would not help Mrs. Fisher kick "housewife" out of the language. I would reason that that mythical being, the average woman, has three things to look after: a husband, children, and a house. Why not register her according to which of the three she considered her prime concern? If she dotes on her husband, put her down as a wife; if she sees him only as the father of her dear children, list her as a mother; and if she makes her family subordinate to keeping her house in perfect order, call her a housewife. We all know many women who would fit admirably into one of these classes — but what of those who rank high in all three?

For them, I would suggest the title "matron", as being the most comprehensive word English has to describe the well-rounded woman — wife, mother, housekeeper, and citizen.

Or, as Solomon put in his description of a "virtuous woman": "Her children shall rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her, saying, Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all".

And I doubt if a woman who really deserved such a tribute would very much mind being called a housewife.

Determination Keynote For UN

Key to success in United Nations was given as "being informed on international affairs and showing determination by expressing opinions" here last night by Mr. Bud Trivett, chairman of the United Nations' Youth Activity Association.

Trivett was making a special statement to the press in connection with United Nations' week which ends Saturday.

Members of the University of Toronto branch of the Un Association plan a special UN-week session in the Arbor room today.

United Nations week began last Sunday. Hundreds of thousands of members of regional UN clubs in countries on all sides of the globe were swinging behind the seven-day observance of the organization which has been described as the "last resort for world peace".

In Toronto 200 speakers were addressing various local groups on UN work this week and the observance was opened Monday with an official flag-raising ceremony at City Hall.

On November 1, 2 and 3, local housewives will be able to view over CBL-TV a special feature on food-dishes put on by the local UN Association. The international cooking school will present dishes from 14 countries.

This page was specially prepared by the University of Toronto United Nations' Association in connection with the celebration of United Nations' week. The observance is being recognized all over the world by some 60 nations.

Symbolic

This symbolic figure represents all of us, everyone on earth, whoever we are, without distinction of any kind such as race, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property birth or other status.

—V.S.P. by Ed. Hoshiki

Kill The UN?

General Carlos P. Romulo describes the vital role of the United Nations in world affairs. An ex-president of the General Assembly, General Romulo said this about the U.N.

"Kill the United Nations and you kill the last organization where two sides in the world maintain the daily diplomatic and political contact which itself is a force for world peace.

"Kill the United Nations and you remove the last chance that the transition from colonialism to self-rule — one of the world's critical problems — will be peaceful and sane, instead of bloody.

"Kill the United Nations and you blow up a dam that already has prevented four local wars from spreading — Korea, Indonesia, Kashmir, Palestine.

"Kill the United Nations and you convince millions now receiving from it medicine, milk and plows that there is no hope for the hungry — except perhaps in communism.

"The truth is not that the United Nations has failed, but that it hasn't been given a chance."

There's A You In The UNO

The United Nations is not a mystical superstate which can put an end to war and aggression as an automatic result of its being a chartered organization with high hopes and ideals. It is a human endeavour and requires the collective efforts of all men everywhere who are interested in maintaining world peace. And with the development of atomic weapons, who can fail to see the necessity of such maintenance?

You, as citizens of a member country, cannot cease to worry about your position in this turbulent world and leave the responsibility to the United Nations' delegates in New York City. You, as members of a democratic society, cannot fail to realize that the ultimate success of such a body depends upon both your active support of UN actions of which you approve, and your constructive criticism of those of which you disapprove. You, as educated and, we assume, intelligent members of a University have both the opportunity to, and necessary machinery through which to express this practical criticism and support which past experience proves is so badly needed if such an organization is to continue its worthwhile activities.

In your immediate field of action there is the UN club on the campus and the larger Toronto Branch of the United Nations Association. Through these organizations reports of student and community opinion on issues and problems can be sent to the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa where they are of great use to the formulators of Canadian policy on such matters.

The United Nations was created for your good, to enable you to live in a mutually beneficial state of peace and co-operation with your fellow men.

varsity blue band morale hit hard by high expense

By JACK ELLIS

Several members of the Blue and White band yesterday expressed dissatisfaction with their present condition. They said that morale in their camp is steadily decreasing as more and more of the musicians are having trouble trying to keep up with the financial obligations band membership places upon their shoulders.

Each band member is expected to accompany the football team to all of its away games, including exhibitions. The SAC and the Athletic Association provide the members only with a seat on a train, said some of the band members. The necessary expenditure for room and meals must be paid by the individual player. Expenses add up to about $30.00 or $40.00 per season. As a result, said several of the members, many musicians are obliged to leave the band.

In other universities, bands are compensated for out-of-pocket expenses. In addition, "band instruments are in deplorable shape," remarked bandmaster Stan Clark. Clark pointed to a Sousaphone (large tuba) bell which he said was sadly crumpled and out-of-round. The mouthpiece was made to fit the instrument with the aid of several feet of scotch tape, and its player remarked that he had to buy a whole can of Brasso to approximate a shine on it.

Another member described his euphonium as "a relic of the Boer War" with the sound of a "clogged waterpipe." Henri leSueur took his pair of cymbals, and with only average force, turned both of them inside out, so that they would not sound. The COTC, not the SAC supplies these percussion instruments.

The band members would like to know what happens to their supposed $1000 grant from the SAC. They know their transportation costs are less than $800, part of which is said to be defrayed by sale of special train tickets to students. They would like to remedy a situation in which the bandmaster has personally paid for several new scores, and which disgusts musicians who cannot afford playable instruments of their own. They also wonder why SAC or the Blue and White Society could not look after a $5 trucking charge for the instruments of the McGill band, who will be playing in the Homecoming Float Parade this Saturday. Not even sandwiches are budgeted for this occasion, said some hands-men.

"This is a damn poor outfit!" cried leSueur. "We get attention only when the music comes out a little sour."

Skule Leads Flood Relief In Money And Volunteers

By CATHIE BRESLIN

The Engineers are still leading the field in flood relief — by a long shot.

A donation of $1000 was made by S.P.S. yesterday to the Hurricane Relief Fund sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council.

In a tag day for the fund conducted throughout the University last week, a total of $1532.89 was collected — the largest response that any tag day has ever produced.

The donation of the Engineers equals very nearly two-thirds of the contribution of the University as a whole.

The number of volunteer workers from S.P.S. has passed the 900 mark, and before the relief operation closes down a total of 1100 workers will have given their services.

Relief workers from other faculties and colleges reached a total of 200.

The skulemen have been labouring this week at Hick's Boat-house, south of Bloor Street on the west bank of the Humber. The job consisted of clearing the debris that threatened to wipe out the lower bridges in the event of further rain. The weapons of attack were chain saws, derricks, axes, shovels, and the inevitable elbow grease.

Earlier in the week there were some student search parties sent out to probe for bodies, but these unsuccessful efforts have been abandoned.

The main accomplishment of the week, according to Neil Irwin, one of the directors of the operation, has been "lots of hard work!"

Operation Engineer was organized through the personal initiative of three SPS students, Neil Irwin, Bosko Loncarevic, and Gordon West. Their proposal was met with enthusiasm by the Army and by the staff of the SPS faculty, and went into effect on Wednesday, October 20th.

Since then the operation has sent out an average group of 100 skulemen per day, drawing their volunteers from all of the larger divisions of SPS.

"I am surprised at the high spirits of the men," commented Irwin. "Even now, when the novelty of the idea has certainly worn off, we have no difficulty at all in filling our quota of volunteers."

By now the relief operations are nearly finished. The Army Control Centre has finished its week and most of the other volunteers have stopped coming. The bulk of the relief work now has been done. The rest of the clean-up will rest with the local authorities.

By special request, the Skulemen will continue their work with the skeleton crew through the weekend, and Sunday will mark the close of Operation Engineer.

Milton's Paradise Regained Opens UC Thursday Series

Students, staff, and public are cordially invited to our Thursday afternoon lecture series, reported Professor Getty of University College, Tuesday. The lectures, which begin this Thursday, are held at 5:00 p.m. in the West Hall of UC.

This Thursday lecture series is an old tradition at University College, said the professor. He added that the subjects of the lectures are independent of one another, and are given by men who are specialists in their own fields.

The subject of the opening lecture on this Thursday, October 28, is "The Theme and Pattern of Paradise Regained". The lecture will be given by Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse, professor and Head of the Department of English at UC, and a recognized Miltonic scholar.

Other lectures in the series will be "Current Aspects of Atomic Energy" given by Dean A. R. Gordon, "The Bible and Recent Manuscript Discoveries" by Professor W. S. McCullough, "The Magic Pilgrimage of Apuleius" by Dr. Frances Norwood, "Spinoza" by Professor D. Savan, and "Delacroix and Literary Inspiration" by Professor C. R. Parsons.

Masthead

There will be a Masthead Meeting in The Varsity offices today at 1:00 p.m. All masthead meetings are requested to be present as a very important story will be told. Prepare to have your teeth pulled by several volunteers from Dents.

The Anti-Sex Herd

We are fed up. In four weeks of publication this paper has raised many issues. In every one of these we have tried to give expression to what we feel to be the mature opinion of students on this campus.

In the pages of the Varsity we have discussed, Religious Illiteracy, Student Government, the NFCUS, World University Service, Rearmament, the Arbor Room, Student-Faculty relations, the implications of the recent Caput decisions, Labour-Management relations and many other topical problems.

In spite of this we receive more response in the form of "Letters to the Editor" over a letter from an unnamed contributor discussing the sex habits of Co-eds than any other single topic. An informal poll which does not claim to be statistically sound but only a cross-section of opinion, results in this paper being labelled a "garbage-wrapper" which depends on "sex and sensationalism" for its "popularity".

Is it only an accident that two obvious jokes are being taken seriously by so many students while the more important issues we have raised pass unnoticed.

You have chosen to ignore the questions we have asked. You have refused to think or act upon the fundamental issues we have raised. You have not reacted in any way to the important problems we have mentioned.

In short, you have placed in doubt your right to standing in a university community. You have left open to serious question, your ability to view with a sense of proportion the events which make up your university life and which find themselves reflected in the pages of YOUR paper. You have left yourself open to the gravest charges of irrationality and monomania.

On The Job

We hope that the members of the SAC have not already come to view their positions as an entree in to a select club.

In last night's discussion on the Caput-SAC liaison Committee's meeting only six members took any active part. One of these was the non-voting representative from the Varsity.

Several members of the Council were not even present at the meeting. Since they meet only every second week it must not be too much to ask to have them present at Council meetings.

It is useless for us to talk of responsible government when the elected representatives do not play their full part.

Congratulations

The Varsity wishes to congratulate Mr. Doug Hamlin on his election to the vice-chairmanship of the WUS administrative committee and Mr. Peter Martin on his election to the Ontario Regional Vice-Presidency of the NFCUS.

Responsible Government

By CLYDE BATTEN

On Thursday, September 23, 1954 the freshman class of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering was taken on a tour of the university. When they had been shown through Hart House by the Warden and his assistants they moved on to other university buildings.

During their "tour" through University College they succeeded in causing considerable damage and injuring a professor.

In a statement to the press the president of the university asserted that the occasion warranted the invocation of positive law and disciplinary action.

Since there exists only one disciplinary body on the campus, namely the Caput, the problem became theirs.

The Engineering Society executives were requested to conduct an examination into the incident and to present their findings to the Caput.

The president and vice-president of the society interviewed some six hundred engineers and then presented their report.

At this point the discussion leaves the realm of fact. For several days much speculation was being done about the possible statement from the Caput. Finally on Tuesday, October 19 the report of the Caput was released.

According to its terms, the constitution of the Engineering Society was revoked and the powers of governance transferred from the Council to the Faculty of Applied Science. In addition a fine of $4,000 was levied on the society.

While we may quarrel with the fine, it is not really at the heart of the problem.

What the decision of the Caput did ever achieve was to point up forcibly the attitude of the administration towards "student government" on the campus.

It has become clear that the officials do not regard the student government as a responsible entity except in a very restricted sense. It is painfully clear that the student executives have less real responsibility than some would have us think.

The Caput has reasoned that the engineering society was irresponsible in the performance of its duty and the power of governance must be taken away to make them aware of their dereliction.

We question whether it has occurred to the members of the Caput that this action of theirs denies the very responsibility they claim to have expected from the engineers' executive.

They are, in point of fact, saying that they do not really conceive of student government as an expression of responsibility on the part of the students concerned.

In a society such as ours in which the maturation process has been stretched to its limits, and in which the problems of assuming responsibility are manifold, it is to be regretted that the officials of this university have once more firmly aligned themselves with those who believe that university students are incapable of responsible self government.

Random Sampling

The Editor,

The Varsity,

I have attended the University of Toronto for almost four years and in that time the contents of the Varsity have never prompted me to write a letter to the editor. Until To-day. Yesterday's attempt to fill space on the front page concerning a survey on the drinking, churchgoing and (?) habits of university students was the turning point.

I wish to discuss the quality of your data and the validity of the inferences that your statisticians (?) drew from them. Let us examine one statement in particular (although the foregoing analysis applies to all the results you have given). About 50% of the co-eds on campus drink!!!! A proper random sample of the co-eds on campus would require numbering each co-ed, selecting 40 numbers from a table of random numbers and questioning the corresponding females. We can assume that this was not done.

The next best thing would be a stratification by college or course affiliation (e.g. choose three from U.C., two from Trinity etc., according to the proportion of girls in these colleges and faculties). The worst sample would be taken from forty girls who happened to be in the K.C.R. at 10:15 P.M., or forty co-eds drinking coffee, with no sugar, in the Arbor room on a rainy night. I would be inclined to think that the Varsity survey was one of the latter type.

Let us assume that your sample was randomly chosen. The generally accepted statistical inference would be that, with 99% confidence, the true percentage of the female students at the university who drink, lies in the range 26.3% to 73.7%, a range much too large to give any reliability to the estimate of 50%. This statement is made on the basis of the preceding assumption. Since the sample probably was not random, we can have even less confidence in the statements made by the Varsity statisticians. Similarly the figure twelve pints per week per girl drinker is equally unreliable.

For those who know something about statistical inference, the preceding confidence range is an application of the theory of sampling from binomial populations. For those who know nothing about statistics (there, alas, we must include the Varsity statisticians), any member of the staff in applied mathematics will verify my results.

Curiosity?

The Editor,
The Varsity,

Reference on article by Cathie Breslin, concerning the work of the students in the Flood areas, in the Varsity of Oct. 25, 1954.

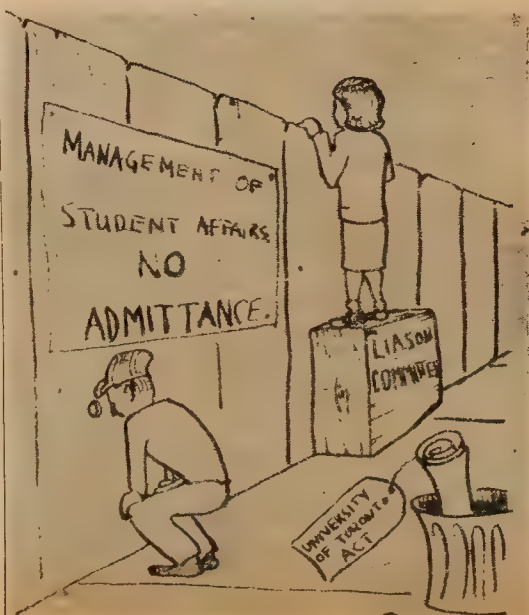

It is the feeling of the undersigned that Miss Breslin has been too harsh in her judgment of the fellow students.

The phrase, "curiosity, of course," used in reference to the motives of Flood Volunteers, is a sad indictment of the sympathy and sincerity of the student society of which she is a member.

Would Miss Breslin consider Volunteer Blood Donors as prompted by curiosity, and if not, why question the motives of the volunteers in such a dogmatic manner as "curiosity, of course"?

Just Onlookers

Garbage

The Editor,
The Varsity,

It seems that in your assinine survey, you asked the students "Have you ever?" Now this is such an obvious statement that no one above the I.Q. of three should have much difficulty in puzzling out what it means. Now obviously the purpose of this survey was to fill up space.

I would think that you or your news-editor (?), could summon up a more brilliant idea from your fertile brains. With the printing of this article as the main feature of the paper, you confirmed the suspicions of many that the Varsity is not a newspaper, but a garbage-wrapper which relies on sex and sensationalism for its "popularity".

Shorter

AM & D would be very much improved if the editor refused to print unnecessarily insulting reviews like that of G. Groen, on Sheila Henig. A student reviewer disagreeing with a performance or a showing should do as in the J. P. Denny or Michael McMor-die manner. Reiter's reviews should be handled entirely by the sports department and they should appear on its pages. I do not see their connection with AM & D. The long reviews of Mich-ener, Clinton, et al., are good, but AM & D's service to the campus would be increased a great deal by more, much shorter reviews. A "Call-board" listing worthwhile events and appearing once or twice weekly is almost a necessity. However, I still think AM & D is by far the best section of the Varsity.

John McPhee, II Trinity

Avant-Garde

I think it's the best thing in the whole paper. Excellent make-up. I think the movie reviews should appear sooner after the movie comes to town. The Varsity should be more independent in its approach and style of reviewing than the city papers. I think a student paper ought to be avant-garde especially in this field.

Diana Ellis III Trinity

Movies

I think it's quite good. There should be more of each and shorter. The average Engineering student hasn't much time to go to the Royal Alex except the occasional week-end and maybe one or two shows. I think there should be more emphasis on movies. I use the Varsity as a guide for what I should go and see. I wouldn't say I read it every day, but I read it every time I read the Varsity.

Bill Logan I SPS

The Same

I've read it some this year. It's the same before. Offers what the readers want. One of the few parts of the paper that has main-tained its standard. Should stay. Students who do go to concerts go as much off-campus as on, there-fore I think you should cover both. It should make the student aware of off campus functions.

John Carson,
Osgoode II

Best Here

My personal opinion is that it gives a better over-all coverage to AM&D than any other To-ronto paper. Obviously the only competitor is the Globe and Mail, and certainly the Varsity music coverage is better. As a former contributor in my under-grad days I'm prejudiced, but it's as good as it's been in years.

Prof. Wilson

Kill Sports

I must have read a Varsity this year. Let me see. I think you should keep a balance between Varsity stuff and the major Tor-onto shows. Not too much of the conservatory stuff. I like the movie reviews. What I'd like to see is some reviews along the lines of Max Beerbohm. More general articles. I'd be in favour of taking out all sports reviews and using the space for AM & D.

Elizabeth Endicott IV U.C.

Records

I read movie reviews and some-times others if its interesting. like that picture of the girl with a man strangling her. I go to see the movie first and then I see what someone else says. Usually a lot of people are interested in records. There might be some space for jazz fans or western fans.

Walter Kami-Takahara,

A Guide

The space is well taken, but they should cut some of the read-ers' nauseating comments. I al-ways read it with interest because it is a good guide to possible activities.

Jane Farquharson IV UC.

The Question

Today's Forum is the first (and probably the last) of a series of surveys, designed to find out what the students of this university think (if they do think) about such varied subjects as culture, anarchy and you name it. Last year topics such as character, labour versus management and Santa Claus were discussed by a cross-section of students and staff. Questioning was facili-tated this year by the opening of the Arbor Room. The inter-viewers were able to eat as well.

Students were asked: "What do you think of the Art, Music and Drama page? What should be added? What omitted? What interests you if anything in AM & D? What do you think of individual reviews?"

Although not completely rep-resentative, the poll seemed to indicate that the majority read "the culture page" oc-casionally and followed the movies, and that the few read all or nothing. Just another illustration of the old saying about as many opinions as people.

Ordinary

It's about what you would ex-pect. Nothing remarkable one way or the other. On books it's not worse than downtown papers, since they are the worst any-where. Films are quite well done. Music criticism is a bit erratic, but most music criticism is. Sim-ply ordinary: never learn anything from it, but not violently ob-jectionable.

Prof. Sparrshot.

FORUM

Too Clever

I think that there definitely is sincere feeling behind the re-views, although at times you get the impression that the goal of being a good critic is lost in showing how clever you can be with words. It is not fair to be so hard as you sometimes are on students because they are dedica-ting their lives towards it. I think you should cover conservatory concerts. After all they are uni-versity students and don't have a chance to get the criticism that professionals do.

Helen Spicer, music grad.

Malice

I feel that some of the music critics have a tendency to make up in malice what they lack in knowledge. No artist sufficiently eminent to be engaged for a Toronto concert is going to go home and help himself to strychnine just because The Varsity has panned his concert, so I think a little more concentration on the heights of artistic experience that you should get in any good per-formance would be in order.

Hugh McKellar, O.C.E.

HH Smells

I read the AM & D page till I got disgusted. I think it smells right now. They pan all the good movies.

Derwyn Hancock I SPS

New Blood?

It's a small wonder that they're asking for drama critics.

Colin Church I UC

Uninterested

I've only read the art, music and drama section occasionally because for the most I'm not interested to that extent. But there are more arts people than anyone else and they should be interested, so I don't think it should be cut out. I don't care to read movie reviews because I choose them by the stars and what my friends say. You might put in nutshell reviews of movies in Toronto for the week like what's his name puts in the Tely on Saturdays.

Jim Rowney II PHE

No Time

I never read it except for the movie reviews, because I never have time to go to see the plays anyway.

George Cihra, I Arts.

Ditto

I never read it.
Judy Ramsay II Pre-Meds

Sour Grapes

It stinks. The reviewers have an over-stimulated idea of their own importance. They seem to have the opinion that their pur-pose is to find fault with, not critically evaluate the productions and concerts which they attend. (I hate Marg Nodder)

Edward Walker IV UC

Technicality

There should be more technical criticism and they should try to obtain some reviewers who are enrolled in appropriate courses but it's a good page. The critics should be dispassionate. A good example of criticism was the Swiss Posters.

Ian McKinnon IV S.P.S.

Journalese!

If the "authors" removed most of the journalese from the page, if they wrote in a reasonable literary style, and if they got a few critics who knew their job, it would be quite a good page.

UC VICTIMS OF MEDICS FIRST WIN

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

The Interfaculty football season, now only three weeks old, has produced if nothing else so far, a variety of formations, all of which are netting their employers a variety of results.

In the old days, some ten years ago, the majority of football teams in Canada used the single wing attack, and then the introduction of the faster, smoother T-formation brought a new look to the Canadian gridiron, to say nothing of the numerous American exponents of the T.

This fall at least three teams in the Intramural league have departed from the standard T. The UC Tigers have returned to a variation of the old single wing, the L-formation. Usually in the single wing a hard-driving full-back of the calibre of Phil Muntz is what directs its success, and the Red and White squad have yet to iron out the rough spots in their offence to see victory.

Wide end sweeps with plenty of interference are another characteristic of the single wing, and here St. Mike's come into the picture with their new spread formation. It features four of the backs spread out beyond the ends, leaving one back to receive the ball. There is more deception in the Double Blue attack than in UC's, with the fullback spinning on most plays and handing off to the other backs. The success of this formation appears to depend on the perfection of deception achieved by the Mikemen in their backfield.

Meds, while still adhering to the T, are using a series of plays which we thought belonged to the single wing area. In the days of the victorious Aggonaut teams, it was common to see Fred Doty start an extension end run with Joe Krol and Royal Copeland. Meds coach, Hugh MacNeil has his team using somewhat the same play, and is having fair success with it.

Out of the realm of the Interfaculty is what is probably the most colorful formation that has been seen in several years, the Diamond T, currently being used by the Western Mustangs and also the Edmonton Eskimos of the Western League.

As they have already demonstrated in three league games, the Mustangs are having great success with their double quarterback attack. With two expert passers in the backfield, Don Getty and John Girvin, Coach Metras has hit upon a well-moulded offence. While Girvin plays in the regular T-quarterback slot, Getty plays about two yards deep of the half line. Its great power comes not so much from the deception, which is less than in the straight T, but from an ability to produce long or short passes with equal precision.

With hard runners like Gino Fracas and Ralph Simmons ready for pitch-outs and hand-offs, Metras has come up with a razzle-dazzle offence that could well carry the Mustangs to their seventh title in nine years.

From the Blue Room . . . Ex-Blue captain Roy McMurtry's UCC squad came up with a win last week, but met up with their stiffest opposition, TCS Saturday morning . . . the Double Blue footballers from St. Mike's are involved in an exhibition tilt with the Ryerson Rams this afternoon on the back campus . . . Varsity's rugged Blues get to prance in Varsity stadium against McGill on Friday afternoon at 2.30 . . . Question of the week is, what is the Intercollegiate scoring record, and how close is Steve Oneschuk to it with last week's 22-point splurge?

Broken Wrist No Obstacle To Don

One of the new faces on the Blues line this season is Don Johnston, a hard driving guard with a terrific amount of desire. Don is no giant for his position, at six feet and 173 pounds but his speed and determination make up for any lack of stature.

A team-mate of Harry Wilson at Riverdale, he played five years of high school football and also some basketball. His biggest year came as a senior in 1952 when Riverdale made the Red Feather Tournament and Don made the Telegram All-Star Team.

In his first year at Varsity, he was a standout for the Baby Blues but unfortunately he missed his year and so last season he toiled for the Vic Interfaculty team. Don got off to a fine start this year but a broken wrist suffered in practice slowed him down somewhat. Since then, he has played with a cast on the arm, covered by a leather guard. Because of this handicap he has played mostly defence, at the linebacker spot. The cast probably won't come off for another two and a half months.

Don is twenty-one and in second year General at Victoria. His good-natured smile and modest easygoing manner has made him a popular addition to the team.

Medsmen Desert Grid Cellar With 10-7 Decision Over U.C.

By MAX ROSENTHAL

Yesterday afternoon, the Medicine football team emerged from the cellar-dwelling position by defeating University College, 10-7. Featuring the game was U.C.'s new look, an unsuccessful passing attack. Disappointing was the fact that the Medicine men did not live up to expectations after they scored eleven points against Skule last Friday, the first points to be scored against Skule in ten games. Meds could not start rolling until late in the third quarter when they overpowered U.C. by running the ends.

In the first quarter U.C. surprised everyone and showed that they have progressed in the right direction when they scored their first points of the year. U.C. started a drive from midfield that took them to Meds' fifteen yard line. The attack, however, dissipated when Meds intercepted a U.C. pass in the end zone. The ball was given to Meds on their own ten yard line. On the next play Meds tried their now-famous end run. Unfortunately, the ball was fumbled, and U.C. recovered on the four yard line. From here Marv Tolksi sneaked for the major. Gord Rintoul converted to make the score 6-0.

A further indication of U.C.'s unsuccessful passing attack occurred in the second quarter when Andy Coppilino of Meds intercepted a U.C. pass on his own fifteen yard line and galloped to U.C.'s thirty-five. Although this was a very exciting play, Meds could not capitalize.

A few spectators braved the crisp weather and were treated to the best run of this football season. In the third quarter, fullback Jim Wheeler of Meds pitched the ball out to halfback Bobby Lee who scooted around the end, down the sidelines, eluded several tacklers, and was finally dropped on the U.C. five yard line. This run was good for sixty yards. Wheeler, who was the outstanding backfielder of the Meds' squad, then plunged over for the touchdown. The convert was not good and U.C. still led, 6-5.

In the fourth quarter, the Meds team started to break through the centre of U.C.'s line. Several line smashes and end runs brought the ball to the U.C. twenty yard line. Coppilino of Meds went around the end to the U.C. one yard line. From here quarterback Jim Hamilton plunged over for the major. The convert was not good. Meds now led 10-6.

As far as U.C. was concerned, however, the game was not completed. Pushing downfield they went to the Meds' thirty yard line. From here Rintoul kicked with the hope that Meds would fumble. The kick was good for a point and the game ended 10-7, with Meds as victors.

Running For 3 Weeks Blues To Try Skates

With their first exhibition game only nine days away, Varsity's hockey Blues will be taking to the ice in the Arena this Friday afternoon after almost three weeks of outdoor work in Varsity stadium.

Saturday night November 6, while the football Blues are in London, the ice men are scheduled to play an exhibition benefit game in Dixie Arena against the OHA Junior "A" Marlboros. The fact that this game occurs so soon in the season necessitates closed practices until the following week, so that an adequate team may be moulded in the six practices before the Marlies tilt.

Jack Wheldrake, coach of last year's championship Intermediates, and Harry Griffiths will be handling the Blue team until regular coach Jack Kennedy has finished his chores with the football Intermediates.

Besides this opening game with the Marlies, the Blues have also scheduled exhibition contests with East York Lyndhursts, St. Michael's Majors, and possibly the Kitchener-Waterloo Flying Dutchmen of OHA Senior "A" fame.

The Varsity club were edged 3-2 last fall by the East Yorkers, who eventually travelled to Europe to represent Canada in the World Hockey Championships. The Lyndhursts are again entered in OHA Senior "B" competition and the game with the Blues will be played in their home arena in East York, on November 20.

St. Mike's Junior "A" club has always been contenders in their league, and should offer the Blues adequate competition before the regular season opens.

UC Gals Win In 23-20 Game

The UC Senior-Junior team got off to a good start this season when they upset Meds, the defending champions, last night at OCE. It was a fast, clean game in which the outcome was ever uncertain. With only one minute to go the score was 22-20 in favour of UC and the way Meds were going it looked for a moment as if they would pull it out of the fire but a free throw by UC took off a little of the pressure and it ended at 23-20.

It was 13-6 for UC at the half; however, the play was much more even than the score indicated. Sally Wallace who was the leading scorer for the Intercollegiate team last year led the way for Meds right from the beginning. For UC in this half Claire McMullen, was most effective with her contribution of eight points. Pat Swayze added four more.

Meds came out fighting in the second half and in a few minutes had narrowed the margin to four points. The UC gals maintained their four point margin right up to the last minute. A timely basket by Sally Wallace made it 22-20. But Pat Swayze came through with the single point when it counted most. Pat Swayze had a total of nine; while Claire McMullen and Sally Wallace tied with twelve points each.

Blues In Top Shape For Redmen Tussle

The Blues of Varsity are at home this weekend to the Redmen of McGill, for the University of Toronto Homecoming Weekend and the second half of the Varsity McGill home and home football series. Last week, in Montreal the Blues smashed the Redmen 43-6, scoring the first Varsity victory of the current season. This week, while the Golden Gals from Kingston take on the Western Mustangs, Varsity tries to win its way into second place in the Intercollegiate League.

Bob Masterson's Blues are coming in for this game in perfect, or rather near-perfect shape. The line is at the strongest of the year, with all hands out for the game and no injuries hampering them. The backfield is in slightly worse shape, since an elbow bruise suffered by Bill Stevenson may keep the ace quarterback out for Saturday's game. Otherwise the backs are standing up nicely and should be in excellent form for the encounter with Western, soon to be played.

The return of Frank Palermo to the lineup in last week's game added much strength to the line at the end spot and, now with an array of men like Fred Smale, Don Smith, George Stulac, Harry Hall and Palermo to choose from Masterson isn't likely to have any more trouble with that position.

There may be worries this weekend about the guards. Bobby Waugh took a knocking in scrimmage with the Intermediates last night, but still was able to limp off without more than a supporting arm. Stu Winter was another scrimmage casualty, coming out with a swollen ankle.

John Sopinka isn't likely to play this weekend, since doctors suggest he wait another week, but he'll be back for the Mustangs, when he'll be needed.

Al Riva On Half Line Aids Varsity's Offence

Al Riva, Varsity Blues' gift from Linwell high school is as good a reason as any as to why the Blues are ranked so highly this semester. Al, is one of a great many boys whose actual value is not measured in the scoring column after the game. "Reeve", as he is dubbed by teammates, is part of one of the most powerful "sub-squads" in Intercollegiate football; actually, Al could be playing first-string with any other team but is sub for the Blues star half-back, Steve Oneschuk.

Now in his second year as a Blue "Reeve" is being eased into more action, as coach Masterson realized that he will be rolling from the halfback spot for two more years, whereas Oneschuk is in his last term at Varsity.

Al stands 5'11" and tips the scales at 180 pounds. He is twenty years old and is the only son in a family which resides in Thorold, in the Niagara District, where Al began his football.

The stocky Varsity back also takes his licks at basketball, with the Intermediates in 1953, and baseball in the summer season back around St. Kitt's.

The future Dentist explained that he thought this season had brought about many changes in the league and also a new threat to the league's supremacy, the Queen's Gaels. "Reeve" remarked that either Queen's or Western ought to be on their toes for their next encounters with the rugged Blue and White squad, because after mauling the Redmen from McGill the Varsity' appetites have been whetted for more of the victory wine.

The main difference in the play between Intermediate ball which he played in 1952 and Blue football, Al said, is the tough, jarring blocks which are thrown and the efficiency and the alertness with which the squad performs its gridiron duties.

Al's biggest football thrill came in high school ball playing for Thorold in 1951 when he ran back two kick-offs for T.D.'s. One run was for 75 yards and to show that his dash to pay dirt was not of the fluky variety, he raced the next kick-off back for a 98 yard touchdown. In that game, Al scored 17 points.

A quiet, good-natured athlete, Al is hoping for the only thing that would clear his memory of the touchdown pass to Murray Henderson in last year's Intercollegiate playoff game, and that is a championship flag high atop Varsity Stadium.

Panty Raid Ends With Probation

New Orleans: The University of Tulane put four freshman students on disciplinary probation yesterday for their part in a panty raid on a Newcomb College girls' dormitory.

In future, it was decided by the University Committee on Student Affairs; participation in any "panty-raids" may result in suspension or expulsion.

'French Student Life Hard'

"French students have a hard life," said Jane Farquharson addressing the Victoria French Club last night. She said that since the students work so hard all term, many of them spend the holidays at "rest homes." Also, many of them suffer from TB, because they lack proper food and lodging. However, they are able to purchase the necessities of life cheaper than the average person.

Miss Farquharson, U. of T.

delegate to the World University Study Tour said also that the French students she met had different political ideals. They all like Mendes-France, but don't all agree with his actions. They are very much opposed to the war in Indo-China and the Marshall Plan.

The meeting also featured a welcome from the president, Joan Bond, who said that the purpose of the French Club is to encourage the study of French culture and to strengthen the bonds between French and English speaking Canadians. The members of the executive presented a skit and all present joined in a singing.

Students From Rochester Guests Of St. Michael's

St. Michael's College will play the host to a visiting group from St. John Fisher College, from Rochester, N.Y., over the weekend.

The visit has been arranged as part of a program of such exchanges, which work on a literary-dramatic basis. A similar weekend took place last year when St. Michael's entertained a group from Assumption University. A return invitation has been extended by Assumption for the next term.

The idea of such a program evolved last year under the auspices of the literary and dramatic societies of St. Michael's, and it found enthusiastic reception at the other colleges.

It was generally agreed that exchange weekends could serve a definite purpose, is such a purpose was provided. The aim of this program, according to John Schoneberger, President of the Music and Drama Society, is, "to provide an opportunity to exchange our ideas, talents, and accomplishments."

The main features of the Weekend will be a panel discussion on "Drama in 1955" (the trends in modern drama), and the presentation of two one-act plays — selections from Oedipus Rex, by St. John Fisher, and The Happy Journey, by St. Michael's. The weekend will conclude with a Halloween party for the casts and audience.

Drinking Question

Most of the male students, the second survey indicated, were curious to know where the coeds got the beer they drank, since, in most places, escorts are needed. "I don't agree. I don't know any girls who drink beer, — they all want champagne," said Ron Garvie, in graduate chemistry, "but I'd like to know some who drink beer."

Some thought that this poll was of no real importance or a major issue, because it did not influence anyone, as a poll on why drink or go to church might have.

Said Peggy Endicott, 2nd year U.C., "The Varsity is getting pretty desperate for files."

According to The Star, Robert Popham, research associate of the Ontario Alcoholism Research Foundation, commented, "If they're drinking as much as they say they are, they are putting down almost twice the Canadian average."

Pertaining to the question, "Do you go to church," most thought the original pole represented the actual state of affairs. Since religion is a matter of emotion, according to Ron Garvie and Art Freeman, graduate chemical engineer, women, being more irrational and emotional than men, go to church more often than men. This stems from the fact that women need security while men are more inclined to stand on their own two feet.

Concerning the third question, it was ambiguously taken by many of the students and, hence, ignored.

Intramural Results

Tuesday and Wednesday of this week saw various Lacrosse, volleyball, and soccer intramural activities take place. On Tuesday U.C. I whipped S.P.S. I, 11-4 in lacrosse. "Nobber" Watson of U.C. scored four goals, Bob Wier of S.P.S. scored three. In volleyball St. Mike's beat Pre-Meds IB 15-2, 15-7, and Pre-Meds beat Trinity A, 15-3, 15-4. Soccer action saw Ed McKinlay score two goals to lead the Knox team to a 4-1 victory over Pharmacy.

On Wednesday Law dumped Forestry in a soccer game, 13-3. Al Eagleson scored five goals for Law. S.P.S. V's beat Trinity B, 2-1 in the other soccer game of the day. Volleyball featured a Pre-Med IIA victory over St. Mike's, 15-8, 15-7. Pre-Meds beat Trinity B in soccer, 2-0.

mentary course in journalism," Scott commented. He also approved the Varsity's coverage of the National Federation of Canadian University Students' Conference held here last week.

Michael Oliver, Music Rep, expressed his opinion that "even allowing for inexperience", the Varsity's staff was not up to par. Absolute standards rather than relative ones should be its self-imposed criteria, Oliver felt.

The vote of censure of the Dents' Students Parliament was referred to the Publications Commission for consideration, to be reported on at the next SAC meeting.

Sop's Survey

pigeon hole

By CHARLES HUMPHRIES

The drinking survey which was conducted on this campus by THE VARSITY seems to have had country-wide repercussions: from Montreal comes a telegram from the McGill Daily which asks the CUP desk to send up to 100 words on co-ed drinking.

This request allows us to recall the old story about the wood termite which staggered into a saloon, lurched up to the bar and, after looking around, said: "Pardon me, but is the bar-tender here?"

Berkeley—Jim Willett has been judged the winner of the "Most Beautiful Male Legs" contest held at the University of Southern California. Scrawniness was the deciding factor in this competition and Willett, blushing modestly, attributed the fine shape of his legs to mountain climbing in the Berkeley hills. The winner, gaily clad in a pair of gaudy plaid bathing trunks, promised to make good use of his contest prize, a beautifully wrapped pair of nylon hose.

Denton—And from the Campus Chat, the North Texas State College newspaper, an interesting short story.

Student: "Is this ice cream pure?"

Waiter: "As pure as the girl of your dreams."

Student: "Gimme a pack of cigarettes."

This same newspaper relates that Midwestern university has an attractive brunette who carries a dictionary with her everywhere she goes — in class, out of class, to eat, to parties, even on dates. She is a native of Colombia, and still has a great deal of trouble understanding the language, but is very optimistic about mastering it. "With all the world speaking English here, I will learn it soon", she stated to the Wichitan, school newspaper.

The Latin-American miss was surprised at some of the questions the boys on the campus asked about her country. "Why, they even ask me if we have dates, and what we do. I told them, the same thing they do here. What else can a boy and girl do together? That is the same everywhere, no?"

Debate Approves Classics

Last night Trinity College approved classical education as the ultimate in education. The resolution was carried by a vote of 46 to 37.

The motion was: "Resolved that the study of the classics is the best education."

Prof. Cole, the first speaker, defined a classical education as one which studied the civilization and culture of the Greek and Roman world. He said that the best source for obtaining a set of values for our education was the original source, of our Western civilization — the Greek and Roman period.

Prof. Ruddick of the French department, first speaker of the opposition, branded the classical education as impractical — requiring too much time to master the language before values can be sorted out. He suggested as an education that covered the classical subjects but one without the difficult language barrier.

Mr. Selby, second speaker for the government, called for a balanced education, one with quantitative restrictions but qualitative matter — a classical education.

Scott Symons, second speaker of the opposition, quoted a late classics professor who said, "The Classics were the curse of England." The speaker extended this statement to say it was a "universal truth". He described an education that developed the whole person, the latent potential of the individual.

Prof. Grube of the Classics department spoke from the floor in favour of the government. He said that education only starts at college. He believed that the best bases for education lie in the foundations of our Western civilization, the Greek and Roman civilization and culture.

tito gives wus yugoslav doll

The Yugoslav consulate yesterday presented the World University Service with a doll from that country, a gift from Marshall Tito.

The doll was received from Mr. Casule, Yugoslavian Consul-General, by Vice-Chairman of the World University Service of Canada, Doug Hamlin, and Tom Delworth, who last summer led a study tour to Yugoslavia. This tour was one of five which were sponsored by WUS.

The doll, which is dressed in Serbian costume and stands about 15" high, will become part of an exhibit of dolls from several European and Asian countries. This exhibit, Dolls of the World, is touring Canadian Universities with the Treasure Van, a WUS-sponsored sale of handicrafts.

The exhibit and sale will be on the Varsity campus from Nov. 22 to Nov. 25.

Parade Afloat

Tomorrow will see an invasion of this campus by a series of other worldly creations masquerading as representatives of various colleges. One of these monstrosities will win a prize which will bear no relation to its aesthetic merits. Anyone expecting beauty and truth are warned to stay at home. This is an occasion only for those who want fun.

Woodside Suggests Federal Bursaries

"Forces beyond the control of universities are . . . making financial resources a major criterion," Dr. M. St. A. Woodside, Dean of the Faculty of Arts of the University of Toronto, thus deplored the inadequacy of financial aid available for those wanting to attend university.

"A Crisis in Canadian Universities" was the title of the address given by Dr. Woodside, on a speaking tour sponsored by the Canadian Clubs this week.

He was heard by a total of about 450 people in Sarnia, Chatham, and Stratford.

He defined the university as a major developer of our natural resources — "human resources", and suggested that it would be sound government policy to establish a system of generous bursaries. The Dominion-Provincial Bursaries, he said, while a step in the right direction, and a great help as far as they go, are a long way from being adequate.

Dr. Woodside deplored the fact that purely financial reasons were keeping some of the most promising material out of university, and admitting many who really should not be there. He also criticized the fact that education is the responsibility of the Provincial Government, thus hindering the planning of any aid on a nation-wide scale.

Dean Woodside advised a further implementation of the report of the Massey Commission, and outlined a plan for a system of national scholarships, which, he hoped, would make the future more hopeful for all who are in search of a higher education.

In connection with the issue of national scholarships, a motion was passed at the SAC meeting on Wednesday night, requesting members Bill Angus, Ron Gould, Don Stevenson and Gordon Hurlburt to arrange a meeting with Members of Parliament for Toronto and York, to ask their support in a campaign for the establishment of a system of National Scholarships.

The House is open to ladyguests on the last Sunday of every month.

Religion is Topic McCurdy's Talk To Student Group

Practical values of life should be the most important goal of religion today, said Professor McCurdy, Professor of Social Philosophy, at the University, yesterday. He was speaking to about 60 students on "Religion without Orthodoxy".

Orthodoxy is a set of answers, which are conditions to membership in a faith, he said. However, the individual's answers should be open to re-examination and susceptible to reaffirmation. They should try to answer the questions of the deeper values of life, the significance and effectiveness of ritual and prayer, and the meaning of truth.

Professor McCurdy criticized the back-to-religion move, because of its call for belief in a thing which is admittedly outgrown. Still, he said, we wish to build up enough artificial belief in this thing to withstand all criticism. If we don't bother to determine the existence of God, he said, we can then search for the more important values of life.

The talk and discussion were not sponsored by a campus group. Another meeting is planned, and there was interest in a continuing series of discussion on religion, ethics and morals.

Coeds Outcannibalize Men 12-7 Waitresses . . . Survey

More than a hundred University of Toronto students gave conflicting replies here yesterday to a poll conducted by the News Editor of The Varsity and a pretty girl reporter. The three point poll included two questions on eating and cannibalism.

It was discovered by the Varsity statistical staff that the coeds who eat (about 50%) will gobble up about twelve adults and five children a week. (This also explains the shortage of cadavers in the Medical Faculty downtown dailies take note).

Men students (of whom 60% eat) digest approximately seven coeds and nine waitresses a week. They prefer deans of women, but the supply is limited.

This is the text of the questionnaire presented to fifty women and fiftyone men: men and fiftyone men:

(2) Approximately how many adults or children do you consume a week?

(3) Have you ever?

Although the questionnaire was carefully worded, nobody seemed to have misinterpreted the third question.

Dr. Beauregard Yumpff, eminent gastroenterologist said that we should not condemn this high rate of consumption, because tomorrow's leaders have to be well fed.

Editors of The Varsity expected violent eruptions of editorial exuberance from Toronto's other leading dailies, but felt that for the sake of truth and morality the statistical data had to be revealed.

They said they expected visitors from the staff of the Star and the Telegram at tonight's staff party. The identity of the menu has not yet been revealed.

Advocate More Religious Education

More religious education at the University of Toronto was called for here yesterday at a session of the University College mock Parliament. Opposition toppled the government by a narrow 29-28 margin.

Government speakers H. Arthur and Miss G. Sanouillet were unable to out-voice opposition members Tom Daly and Nancy Donnell.

Prime Minister Arthur opened the debate by reciting the fable: "It is not for knowledge that you go to college but to raise hell at the KCR."

Arthur deplored any extension of religious education and condemned it as the "opiate of the masses".

Trinity Comedy Set

To-night at 9.00 in Cartwright Hall at St. Hilda's College, the Trinity College Dramatic Society offers as its first production of the season a lively interpretation of Terence Rattigan's comedy, Harlequinade, originally staged as a curtain-raiser and/or antidote to the same author's lugubrious masterpiece, The Winslow Boy. Harlequinade, is in itself a one act play in the best traditions of English farce-comedy.

Tom Daly, opposition leader, congratulated the government on the "timelessness" of the topic and "narrowness" of outlook. He called religion the creation of man... "the soul and life-blood of our civilization."

Government-member Miss G. Sanouillet argued that students did not have the time for additional lectures in religious education. She thought churches and "religious clubs" was the place to acquire additional saving grace.

"Dr. Smith was responsible for the mind of the student, not his soul," she said. She called religious instruction the function of the rabbi and the minister.

A second speaker for the opposition, Nancy Donnell, stated that the purpose of education was to extend, and develop the mind. She thought that religious instruction at the university was too narrow.

Sergeant-at-Arms Bryan Cragg was roundly rebuked when he rose up to speak, flourishing a great constitutional axe. Opposition members quickly objected and Cragg was forced to relinquish the weapon before he was permitted by speaker Earl Berger to speak. Cragg thought students were not much interested in religious instruction.

Asked someone of the Sergeant-at-Arms: "When did you last attend church?" "Have You Ever?" Cragg retorted: "Frequently...but not to my knowledge."

Carabin Visit Now in December

The annual Carabin Weekend, originally planned for the weekend of November 18 and 19, has been postponed until December 2, 3, 4, 5. Forty students from the University of Montreal will make the trip to Toronto, and the visit will be returned by Toronto students sometime next February.

The weekend tries to combine good times with serious discussion so that both French and English students may come to understand another culture. This year, the programme will include a welcoming reception, discussion groups, lectures and dinner and a square dance at Nobleton.

Applications will be available at the S.A.C. office until November 9.

Woodhouse Comments On "Paradise Regained"

Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse suggested that Christ was refusing knowledge and beauty in the service of evil, not in themselves.

He described the epic as "the least read work of Milton, today." It was the first in this year's series of Thursday afternoon public lectures.

The series was begun almost a decade ago. Professor Woodhouse suggested the reasons for neglect of "Paradise Regained" are (1) the difficulty of understanding the poem without first knowing its theme and pattern, (2) the fact it does not lend itself to modern literary criticism ("not even Cleanth Brooks could isolate the symbolism"), (3) and the disappointment that Satan, the great romantic, is not the hero.

"Does Christ reject all secular knowledge and art without distinction in the second temptation?" asked Prof. Woodhouse. "Similarly, when Christ turns down Satan's offer of beautiful objects, is He rejecting beauty as worthless?" Prof. Woodhouse

"Paradise Regained is marked by a very high degree of balance and symmetry", which extends to the internal structure", he said. "The last of the temptations balances the first, in the repetition of the banquet scene, and the three temptations move from the extreme of defect, or distrust, to the extreme of excess, or presumption".

Prof. Woodhouse said the poem was divided into four books to obtain a deliberate, staggered effect, which allows the symmetry to impress itself gradually on the reader. After the climax, Milton proceeds to a quiet ending, as Christ returns to his Mother's house.

"The final note is on the humanity of Christ," he explained. "Mary is presented as the essence of Christian heroism".

In closing, Prof. Woodhouse suggested that the parallel between Christ's ordeal in the wilderness and Milton's ordeal in the world is very close.

THE CREST

Charley's Aunt

Charley's Aunt is in town again and the lady from Brazil (where the nuts come from) is as winning as she ever was. John Wilson's ivied arches caught the college atmosphere and Jane Ashford's elegant costumes were a triumph in the expression of their wearer's personalities. (Question: does the genuine Oxford undergraduate wear his white flannels baggy or pressed?) We wonder, however, if it was his make-up (spiky white beard) which led Max Helpmann to play Mr. Spettique as if he were Sheridan Whiteside? George McGowan, on the other hand, although disguised in the attire of an Anglo-Indian colonel (retired) was surprisingly reminiscent of the brusque young reporters whom he has portrayed with such success on previous occasions.

Although it was given a loving and enthusiastic performance, the play, we must admit, carried the actors, rather than the other way round. Some scenes between Peter Mews and Jack Medhurst (who, as Jack and Charley, gave excellent and expressive individual performances) were strained and heavy because of a certain hesitation as to what came next which occasionally struck both gentlemen. When all three undergraduates were on the stage, the musical-comedy blocking, which kept them nimbly hopping about was highly effective.

The ladies of the company were singly, and collectively, charming.

To be sure, Barbara Chilcott's very strong-minded voice struck as less 'period female' than Lois Shaw's bunny-wabbit lisp, but we must concede that Miss Chil-cott yields to none in coquetry. Betty Leighton as the real aunt and Margaret Griffin as her niece labored under the dismaying burden of having to speak, with due feeling and sincerity, what must be some of the most mawkish lines ever written but which, illogically, so endear to us the characters of this ridiculous play that no one can bear to see them cut. In spite of this obvious handicap, Miss Leighton managed to remain dignified, Miss Griffin sprightly, and both, amusing.

As for Eric House as Lord Fancourt Babberley (the incorrigible undergraduate with the unexpected talent for impersonation) if we had been wearing a hat we should have raised it. With a single twitch of his eyebrow, Mr. House had his audience rolling in the aisles. His funniness never flagged for an instant; he was enveloped in an aura of the ludicrous. Yet his performance was never anything but delicate and perfectly controlled. No matter how good a time he was having Mr. House never let matters get out of hand.

In the brilliance of his performance of the Aunt to end all aunts, his role of lovesick undergraduate almost disappeared. Mr. House rescued it just in time to remind us that he was not merely performing a tour de force, but is an actor of extraordinary versatility and stature. We should like very much to see Mr. House in a serious role, something from which he has so far been debarred by his extreme excellence as a comedian. We have a feeling that he would be eminently successful.

TSO MISSES MARK

The broadcast portion of the Tuesday night concert by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra sounded uneven and noisy; Wednesday night in Massey Hall the unevenness had given way to a general slackness, and the noise was reserved for passages which should have been just loud. I have seldom heard Berlioz' brilliant "Roman Carnival" overture played with such lack of spirit. There was a little more life in the playing of Jean Vallerand's The Devil in the Belfry, but the music, a kind of latter-day Danse Macabre was so inconsequential as hardly to warrant the effort. There has been better music come out of Montreal.

Whatever life there was in the playing of Schumann's A minor Piano Concerto was put there by the soloist, Guionar Novaes. There was no integration of orchestra and soloist, merely alternate episodes, in which one of the protagonists tried to make something of his particular bit. The honours went to Mme. Novaes: she has a small but fine tone, she played sensitively, if with no great depth. The second movement was most successful — Mme. Novaes was able to raise the spirit of the orchestra to a gentle serenity, with flashes of real feeling. The final chord of the concerto was shockingly out of tune.

It is unfortunate that the conventional idea of Tchaikovsky's music has been so much influenced by his biography. He greatly admired and was influenced by Mozart, and shows the same ability for brilliant orchestration, dramatic development and melodic writing. Sir Ernest MacMillan's performance hardly showed this. All his tempi just missed the mark. The first movement was much too heavy, the allegro con grazia too slow, and certainly not graceful, the third movement pedestrian. The finale came off best: Sir Ernest avoided exaggerating the lamentoso, and the orchestra, lifted from its lethargy, played with more intensity. For the rest, the performance by the men was pathetic: repeated ragged entries from the trombones, the trumpets strident and the clarinets out of tune. In all, a most unfortunate evening.

In reply to only one of the many letters in Thursday's Varsity, may I point out to Hugh McKellar that while it would be nice to concentrate "on the heights of artistic experience", it is sad, but true, that not all famous artists are great, or even good musicians; that not all great musicians always give great, or even good performances, and therefore hearing great music is not always a great experience. But the critic has to listen.

h house string orchestra

Wednesday evening at 7.30 the new Hart House String Orchestra under Boyd Neel gave its first concert, over the CBC. It began with two movements from a symphony by Anton Filtz, a contemporary of Johann Stamitz at Mannheim. Pleasant music, or no great consequence, but the playing was strained and harsh.

Bela Bartok's Divertimento for string orchestra which followed was much better. It has little of the bitterness of some of his other compositions, with much of his usual emotional intensity. Boyd Neel succeeded in conducting it this way, through the tension of his phrasing, his control over the sections of his group. The playing of the orchestra was warm and alive, its tone full and clean, with only occasional edginess.

Bob Revue Opens Monday

Something strange is going on in Valhalla! The Victoria College Bob Revue will look into the question at Hart House Theatre on November 1, 2 and 3. Paradise Misplaced is the title of this year's extravaganza, and it shows what happens when the Heaven of the Heroes goes to College.

The script has been provided by Terry Sheils, a second-year Arts student at Vic, who has this to say about Arts types in general: "Arts: The term applies to those who occupy the upper bracket of University society, by virtue of their superlative inability to do any sort of practical work." The music was composed by Jean McNeill, a third-year student, and Jeff Johnson, who is in his fourth year, is producing the show.

The Bob Revue is the result of a long Victoria tradition. It began in the 1880's, when Bob Beare, (Vic's janitor when the College was in Cobourg), used to invite the male students to his office for an evening of songs, skits and apples. The event gradually evolved into a full evening's entertainment for the men of Vic. In 1951, the Bob amalgamated with the co-ed show, the Scarlet and Gold Revue, and the 79th annual Bob was the first to include women in the cast.

Those who remember the early days of the Bob would scarcely recognize its modern counterpart. Plans for this year's show have been afoot for a year now, and the script was ready before the College closed last spring. Director Gloria Gillies explained that this year's Bob is one of the most ambitious, with 64 in the cast alone. She estimated that at least 200 students would be involved in the production.

helen phillips' concert

The Women's Musical Club brought the young soprano Helen Phillips to Eaton Auditorium for the second time yesterday afternoon. Miss Phillips has a big brilliant voice of a beautiful quality. She sings with warmth and sincerity. Technically however, she still has a great deal to learn. Faulty diction, poor breathing and phrasing, and difficulty in controlling the volume of her powerful voice marred the soprano's performance.

Interpretively, Miss Phillips showed especial skill in the creation of a mood, whether it was the breathless calm of the opening of Die Mainacht, or the earthy exuberance of Chere mo lemme toi. In her only operatic selection, L'altra notte in fondo al mare, Miss Phillips created an alternately frenzied and hopeless Margherita. It was such a stunning "mad scene" that one could forgive technical shortcomings.

The Role of a Liberal Church

The Gospel of Luke refers to Jesus as "the voice of one crying in the wilderness". Through the ages, many voices have called to mankind — the prophet, the philosopher, the reformer. Men have accepted the challenge and gone forward to discover new knowledge and to seek better ways.

For over 100 years, the Unitarian church has been the voice of liberal religion in this city. We call to those who question doctrines and catechisms, to those who cannot pay homage to traditional forms. Unitarianism imposes no creed, no dogma, no limits upon man's religious freedom.

If you are looking for a church that applies reason as a test of religious belief, a church that seeks new truths and affirms the dignity of man, we invite you to join in our service this Sunday.

Reminiscence

Returning to the campus this week-end will be many graduates of this university. In fraternity houses, restaurants, bars, and dining halls they will be meeting to talk over the days now past when they roamed through the environs of the university with "carefree" undergraduate grace.

They will talk of Long John Sinclair, and "Moose" Rogin, sports stars of another age. They will reminisce over "Paddy" Ryan and an upstart named Mackenzie King, indefatigable crusaders in the pages of the Varsity.

Will they forget, we wonder, the sombre aspect of Andrew Allan, the "buccaneering figure" of Nat Buchan, or the drawn features of Jamie Rennie.

Will they talk of the good old days and forget the thread of personal revolt which has run through student life since time immemorial? Will they cast sanctimonious slurs on the calibre of students today and forget the painful sense of inadequacy born of an age when youth is misfit.

Will they come back as disillusioned men and women in whom the dreams and visions of yesterday have been ground to dust by the friction of life? Will they recall only with sardonic pity the sullied white plumes of their younger days? Or will they see that in this maelstrom of university activity we are fighting the terrors that they have made in the same manner as they have rebelled in an earlier era.

Homecoming Program

FRIDAY:

- 9.00 p.m. — Pep Rally and Dance at the Drill Hall.
- 10.30 p.m. — Band and Cheerleaders to meet McGill Train.

SATURDAY:

- 10.30 a.m. — Float Parade.
- 12.30 p.m. — Parade passes Judges' Stand in front of U.C.
- 2.00 p.m. — Game—Varsity vs. McGill. Special half-time show.
- 4.39 p.m. — Tea Dance at the Drill Hall.
- 9.00 p.m. — Homecoming Dance, Hart House. Five Bands featuring Mart Kenny.

Parade Route

Lest anyone become confused by the devious wanderings of the floats entered in the Float Parade, tomorrow let it be known that the following is the parade route.

The parade assembles on Devonshire Place just below Bloor. It moves northward to Bloor Street and along Bloor Street to Yonge.

At this point it heads south but before tasting the glories of the newly refurbished

Yonge Street, a sharp right hand turn is made at College Street.

When the Wallberg Building is reached, a sudden foray is made into the University grounds. After three (not seven) trips around the front campus the whole thing disperses.

If this advice should not be sufficient there will be loudspeakers located at the judges' stand in front of U.C. to direct the mobs.

homecoming floats featured parade football saturday

Oh Happy Day! Here we are all recovered and ready for another football week-end (Sis Boom Bah, Ooooh Rah, Go, Go, Go, and all that sort of thing). But this football week-end is a special super-duper one, because it is HOME-COMING WEEK-END, which means that we have a FLOAT PARADE.

...This auspicious event has — in previous years — occurred in the morning, when a great many floats from different faculties (accompanied by the Lady Godiva Memorial Band) go trotting all over Toronto, holding up traffic and drawing all sorts of adverse criticism. The best float is awarded a Grand Prize, won by Dentistry for the last two years.

Float Parades generally have themes. This one will have a Canadiana theme, to — it is hoped — promote Canadian culture. Take note, O Engineers.

IM SORRY, BUT IT'S NOT QUITE WHAT WE'RE LOOKING FOR —

—Cartoon by John Ricciardelli

The Float Parade is usually preceded by raids. Most faculties try to get the Skule Cannon, which goes on display during the parade — chained to a group of Engineers. The Friday night before the parade, groups of sinister-looking individuals can be seen gallumphing furtively (is this possible?) across the campus, looking for floats belonging to them, which can be effectively destroyed — in a humane manner of course.

The Floats themselves are occasionally criticized for containing cheesecake, which is, of course, bad. Two years ago, Skule was the object of much controversy when they entered Lady Godiva. They felt that after all, if she could ride to Coventry, she could certainly ride to Hart House.

All sorts of themes will be in evidence at the Parade. Under the heading 'Pioneer Spirit', last year, such individuals as 'Painless Barker', the barber-surgeon and undertaker, romping pirates (female too), and Harvey (the rabbit critter) made their appearance. Oh happy day, oh goody-goody, golly gee — we're having a parade. Don't miss it.

We talked to John McKelvey, publicity director of the and White, in the Arbor yesterday, and from what he tells us, this looks like quintia essentia, the epitome paragon of all football events.

Don't miss the pep rally Friday evening at 8:00. Eight beautiful Varsity leaders, dancing, a square group, Bob Masterson and co-captains to give a few on the game, and even a new amplifier system. Spec us that there used to be dances after these affairs, er if...?

The float parade starts at A.M. on Saturday, and is judged from the front street.

Varsity staffers are giving twenty-seven to one that One Eye Benny's float cops the Alumni Shield, but Dents have been building their entry for a month, and don't even think it's fair to take your money. Twenty-five entries will go to post, and win, place and show appear at half time in the stadium.

The half time show is shaping up to be one of the best in a good many years. The University and Law School horses have recuperated and are at last returning by popular demand. Rumour has it that the Skule cannon will be uncovered under the aegis of what is now an unknown group. To get on to the more organized part of the show, John McKellar tells us to look out for a top-notch gymnastic team making its premier appearance at the stadium.

Both bands promise brand-new routines. We're still wondering how the Blue and White Band is going to play the Hawaiian War Chant and dance to it at the same time, but anything Flip Phillips can do, the Varsity Band can do better, so here's wishing them luck. The faculty cheerleaders have been turning out to practices every morning at 7:30 under the direction of Bill Harris, chairman of the Blue and White. Spoke to that lucky man the other day, and he promises a good show. Incidentally, might make things easier for the performers if you keep off the field and confine the revelry to the stands.

The Blue and White is throwing a Tea Dance after the game. Good place for the social types to get organized for the rest of the evening.

We hear that there are a few tickets left for the Blue and White Dance on Saturday evening. Mart Kenney will be the feature attraction, backed by four other aggregations scattered about in various dimly lit sections of Hart House. Bob Cunliffe has been chasing fifty artistic women around what was once our last stronghold of masculinity and is coming up with decorations in an autumn and Hallowe'en theme.

from my crystal ball

By ONE-EYED BENNY

All week I am laughing at the numerous fish who were being too smart to take my advice on the Western-Queens game and Monday I am collecting all my loot from these suckers who were sure the Gaels were too good for the Horsies.

Already these boys are crying for my infallible prognostications for Saturday, November 6, but I am being very shifty and am not saying what is sure to happen until the time is ripe.

I am hearing rumors that my old buddy Frank Tindall is crying, because the Mustangs are not rumbling away touchdowns to his Gaels, but he is not fooling me. They are saying that the three-colored boys are tough on their own field, but I know that the Horsies are too strong for the Queensmen and so I am seeing two touchdowns with converts for the purple boys from London and Gino Fracas will probably kick another field goal, while the Gaels will only get one converted touchdown and Thompson will kick two singles. This is making things 15-8 for the Horsies.

One dim fish is playing the long odds, and thinking the Redmen can beat the Blues tomorrow, but I am telling him there is nothing to stop my Blues now that the ball is rolling. They are not having any trouble at all with the McGillians who are permanently without Ed Pavente. The Blues are not toying with the Redmen tomorrow, and are scoring some six touchdowns with converts and maybe two singles, while McGill are not even threatening. I am counting on the boys in Blue to keep the Redmen off the score sheet like they nearly did last week, and things are shaping into 38-0 for the Blues.

These being my sure predictions for Saturday afternoon, I am retiring to my hovel and brood on the outcome of the big game in London.

The Campus Kids

By TANK FRUMPANE

University students have shown once again that they are immature, irresponsible idiots. They, who are supposed to be the future leaders of our country, are throwing away the greatest opportunity they ever had.

Before it was just irregular outbursts; burning effigies, and attacks on professors. Now it is a continuous neglect of duty, and wild orgies of drinking.

And who is to blame? Co-eds.

The same editors of the Varsity who made such prolific statements on NFCUS have brought the true facts on drinking to light.

Let the caput now sit up and take note. This is the time to step in and take action. The leaders of the co-eds must be severely disciplined if not expelled.

BLUES AIMING FOR SECOND PLACE

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

In Tuesday's Montreal Star, a noted sportswriter, engaged in reflections on McGill's apparent impotency in recent Intercollegiate football campaigns, finished off his column with the following thought.

"In all probability though, the reason for McGill's decline lies in the fact that other colleges are doing some of the things that outsiders and insiders have been urging McGill to do but which is not likely to be done, no matter how much pressure is put on the University to give students a 'leg' up so that the institution can have a real contending team."

Unfortunately the writer does not make clear just what he is referring to; an athletic scholarship, undercover graduate financial aid, or doctoring of marks. We were exceedingly disturbed to discover that this idea was still being considered as possible in the Intercollegiate Union. We were even further amazed as we recalled that the same idea had been expressed by several McGill supporters last weekend in Montreal.

One of them commented after the game in which the Blues had trounced the Redmen 43-6, "well at least they kept their amateur standing, sure, the biggest bunch of amateurs I've ever seen", turning a pointed remark into a relatively harmless criticism.

We don't pretend to know anything about how things are handled on the campus of this University, but we have always supposed, and still do, that athletic scholarships don't exist here. Marks, as far as we know, are not doctored to push a promising football player through. There are several examples in the last few years of those who couldn't play for the Blues because they missed their exams, and who could conceivably have been passed to facilitate their football careers. Furthermore, if graduate assistance is in practice nobody seems to know about it.

It's too bad that people must resort to such excuses for a football team that just isn't good enough to match the rest of the Intercollegiate football clubs.

The High and the Mighty . . .

. . . records of the Intercollegiate Union could be due to fall tomorrow when the McGill Redmen invade Varsity stadium. Unfortunately the CIAU's records are not too clear, but as far as we can discover the highest score in one game was back in 1922 when the Blues dropped McGill 51-5. In 1948, Varsity whipped the Redmen 41-0, and in that game Bill Danylchuk scored twenty points. Steve Oneschuk's twenty-two points last week in Montreal must be pretty close to a league record. At any rate the Blues could do a lot of damage to the Montrealeers with a dangerous aerial attack; the Redmen have virtually no pass defence.

From the Blue Room . . . Trinity College and University College involve themselves in their annual Bowl game this afternoon on the back campus . . . take a jaunt up to the stadium this afternoon when the Rugger Blues play their return match with McGill . . . look for One-Eyed Benny in tomorrow's gala float parade.

On The Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Whoever is bound for '54 swimming honors this year will be decided Saturday night at the annual women's interfaculty meet. Not that we have any Marilyn Belles around here, but over at the practice last night the gals looked ready to do justice to this annual event.

It's not the year for predictions. Last season we could be almost certain of a PHE win, but since the '53 toppers lost Claire McMullen and Beryl Lewis, it's anybody's game.

There was such a mob out to the practices this year, the meet had to be run off in two heats. Wednesday night the gals battled in the synchronized stuff with Vic taking the lead by 5.0 points. Vic hit a total of 33.5. PHE ran second with 28.5, and Trinity finished third with 19.0.

This gives Vic a good lead for the Saturday meet. But this year, the old college is lacking the power of one Mary Crowther who graduated last spring. Nancy Doubt of PHE was high scorer of the event followed by Nan Peel of UC.

The speed and diving are scheduled for Saturday in Hart House; the time is 7:00 p.m. Nancy Doubt and Nan Peel are slated to do an exhibition in the synchronized line.

The meet climaxes a tough season of practices which have been going on since early October. The intercol bout will be at Queens on the 22nd of November and those who participated in the interfaculty meet and who wish to get into the big swim are asked to continue the regular practices.

Yesterday, the women of the campus welcomed a guest from the US of A, Miss Ann Delane, of the American Field Hockey association. Miss Delane now a PHE instructor at Smith College, was invited here to lecture to all those on the campus interested in that particular sport. In 1949, she was president of the American Association and for five years she played All-American.

A series of lectures will be given today. The first is 9:00 a.m., 12:00 — 1:00 p.m. and one at 2:30. The final lecture and demonstration will be given Saturday at 9:00 a.m. All classes will be conducted at Trinity field. It might be well worth while to take in a lecture or two

Varsity Should Repeat Victory McGill Here For Homecoming

Homecoming Weekend for old Varsity grads and the students of this day is sure to be a big event come Saturday morning when the Float Parade moves through the Campus and then in the afternoon when the Varsity Blues move through the McGill Redmen. After last week's easy defeat of the Montrealeers on their home grounds,

Rated as the best team in the Intercollegiate League before the season opened the Blues took three games this year to live up to their press clippings and this has put them back in the point standings, with Western Mustangs and the Queens Golden Gaels ahead of them. Last week's victory over McGill was the first Toronto triumph of the year and another tomorrow could, if Western were to win again, bring them into second place and close up the competition.

Bob Masterson's Blues are in fine shape for this game with no one forced out because of injury, for the first time this year. Quarterback Bill Stevenson may miss the match but if so he will definitely be back for the Western game next week. Likely starter at the quarter slot is Harry Wilson, the giant with the accurate throwing arm who passed a few well against the McGills last week. The big man in the Blue backfield is expected to be Steve Oneschuk, who really started to roll last week against McGill setting a 22 point scoring record in the game. This was 2 points better than the record Steve set last year when also against McGill he gained 20 points in the Varsity 34-0 shut-out of the Redmen.

The Varsity line is stronger than it has been for many weeks this weekend, with end, formerly an uncertain spot, now one of the strongest. Bob Masterson will choose from among Frank Palermo, Don Smith, Bruce Day, Fred Smale and George Stulas. Tackles are all up for this game and the way they are starting to go they should be especially tough for old McGill. Guards, the brightest part of the Blues line are strong as ever. McGill had no luck trying to move Bob Waugh, Earl Ford, and the others around and it isn't likely that they'll do too well this Homecoming Weekend either.

Centres are in shape for the game and in the backfield there isn't too bad a situation, if the Blues can get by with such as Bob Pinkney, Steve Oneschuk, Phil Muntz, Al Riva, Bill Horton and the others. Since these are generally considered to be the best in the League they should do just fine.

Stainless Steel Bob Waugh Is Blue Line's New Ironman

One of the most difficult positions to fill on a football team is that of guard. A guard must be durable and rugged. Because Bob Waugh possesses these qualities he has, for the last two years, been a first rate guard for the Blues.

And capable he should be, for he has played at the guard position seven years. Four of these years he spent playing for Oakwood Collegiate, one for the baby Blues. Bob's sport activity has not been restricted to football. He has wrestled on the Varsity Intercollegiate team for the last two years, placing a creditable third each year.

Although Bob appears inconspicuous to most fans he is well known by all players of the Intercollegiate league as an extremely hard-driving defensive guard. Bob feels that his height (5'8") is advantageous insofar as it is very difficult for the opposing players to block him. In fact, tail men are usually awkward, he says.

Bob is well-known in another respect, in that he is the best dressed Blue at all parties after the Blue games.

At the present time he is in his third year of Mining Engineering. As far as his future is concerned, Bob has been subsidized by the airforce. That is, his University fees are being paid by the airforce with the stipulation that he will serve them for three years after his graduation. This contract is agreeable to him because he would like to play professional football for Edmonton in the west, and the contract allows him to be shifted to the site he chooses.

Bob is of the opinion that the Blues have one of the best teams in the Intercollegiate Union, and should have won all of their games thus far. Given the chance says Bob, they probably will.

Big Test This Weekend JV's, Colts To Tangle

Saturday the Intermediates travel to Kingston for their big test of the schedule. A win over Western is a must for the Baby Blues to retain the title. A split with the Colts in their two encounters will not result in a play-off game, and both clubs will be declared co-title holders.

Although the loss of Stu Winter would not have affected the strength of the squad in their first Western clash, as Stu was billed to line up with the Seniors this week-end, he will be greatly missed in the return game. Stu suffered a broken ankle in scrimmage Wednesday and his injury will remove a fine competitor from the football scene for the season. A brighter note from the injured list is the rapidly improving Bill McKenna. Suffering a shoulder separation against Queens has been on the sidelines since, but is due to return to action Monday.

The Baby Blues will be looking to their full-back power of the last two games, Joe Whitmore, to provide as great an offensive threat Saturday. Joe starting the year at the half position, was shifted to the full-back spot for the second game and has been there since. His proficiency at the spot has been forcefully displayed by the ten point per game clip he has accomplished, following the move.

In boxla action yesterday the Meds I's beat the Vic I's by the score of 9-3. Bill Kerr scored three while both Fred Papsin and Chuck Bull scored two each. Hal Urquhart and Daniel Jones added singletons. Twiddle and Little each scored one goal for the losers.

There were two soccer games played and both were ties. Emmanuel tied Forestry one all. Davies scored one goal for Emmanuel and Wynia for Forestry. The tie moved Emmanuel into first place in the standings one point ahead of Forestry. Junior SPS and Senior Meds battled to a scoreless draw.

Junior SPS B's defeated SPS III's in volleyball action by scores of 15-4, 16-18, 15-10. The Pre-Meds I B team defeated U.C. V's 15-11 and 15-7.

St. Mike's Trample Rams Ryerson Roars For 2

By DICK VON HENDY

In an exhibition game yesterday, the Double Blue of St. Michael's College rolled over the Ryerson football squad by a decidedly one-sided score. The Mikemen racked up eleven first downs to Ryerson's one as they marched up and down the field in a 21-2 victory.

Two of the St. Mike's scores came in the first half on passes from Ron Renzetti to Jude Fusco. Both were thrown out in the flat, with Fusco going over from about eight yards out. The other major came on a St. Mike's punt, Dick Koterski booted the ball and then proceeded to race downfield, recover the Ryerson fumble on the play, and sprint the remaining twenty yards to paydirt.

The St. Mike's passing attack clicked well, with Renzetti hitting Ahearn and Babirad for long gains, and seven completions for ten attempts.

Ryerson's lone two points came on a safety touch following a long punt which drove the Mikemen back to their own goal-line. Hoffman broke through to make the tackle for the Rams.

The fine running of Bill MacIntyre, Fusco, Koterski, and Leo McQuigan was set off by a hard charging Double Blue line. Priestner, Driscoll, Russel, Dave MacIntyre, and DuBois broke through the Ram's defence time and again to spill Ryerson backs for big losses. The splendid line play of the Mikemen held the Rams to only one first down, compared to their own eleven.

Jones, the Ryerson Q.B., threw some fine passes, but only three of them were held. Daub, the left end for the Rams, made two fine catches, but the Ryerson ground attack, running from a single wing, was stopped cold by the Double Blue line.

Gals' Softball

An 18-hit attack and well-balanced pitching gave St. Mike's a very convincing 19-4 victory over St. Hilda's yesterday at the stadium. Anne Kotze was superb on the mound for the Irish, giving up only 3 hits.

Cathy Murphy, Diane Purvis, Anne Kotze, and Norma Walsh smashed homers for St. Mike's. Dolly Molnar aided the winning case.

Shiela Grance, Cecile Philips, Marg Bouldon, and Liz Rorke were the best for St. Hilda's.

SPS Streak Snapped Vic Stops Skule 11-0 To Gain First Place

By JOHN VOITECH

All good things must come to an end. And so it did for SPS last night as Vic handed the Skule football team its first setback in eleven games. The SPS team held a winning streak of ten straight games which extended back to last season when they won the Mulock Cup in eight consecutive wins. This year they had won two games and were set for the third, but Vic had other ideas. Led by Frank Ebenhardt the Vic team ran over the Engineers by the score of 11-0.

The first quarter was a rugged affair with the linemen of both teams standing out. It also showed that both teams wanted to win this game and their spirit showed it.

The second quarter was a different story as Ebenhardt tossed a seventeen yard pass to Bill Williams for the first Vic score.

A penalty to Vic gave SPS the ball on the twenty yard line. Successive drives by Larsen, Kelly and Grusse brought the ball to the three yard line. From there the Vic defensive line stiffened and SPS was forced to give up the ball on downs. The half ended with tight plays which were meant to be conservative.

Byron picked up an SPS fumble on the SPS twenty and ran the ball to the SPS fifteen. Bertram brought it up to the six yard line. Ebenhardt then proceeded to give a pitchout to Frisbee who outdistanced the SPS defenders easily for the major. Benson converted.

In the fourth quarter, the SPS team tried desperately to get onto the scoring sheet but they were frustrated by the stand of fellows like Frisbee, Elliot and J. Cochon. Larsen of SPS tried to get several passes away in the last quarter but he failed to nail any of his intended receivers. Most of the time he was rushed by a charging Vic line. On the line: Ebenhardt's kicks kept Vic out of trouble when SPS had Vic backed deep into their own end. Ebenhardt shows the promise of a future Blue punter as he got many a low snap away . . . Karpinski, Lyons and Selby were best on defence for SPS . . . Larsen did a lot to prevent Vic from turning the game into a rout for Vic.

McGill Battling Blue Ruggerites

For the members of the Varsity Blues rugger team, the McGill weekend starts off a day early, as they meet the Redmen in Varsity stadium at 2:20 this afternoon. Admission is free, and the spectators will certainly get their money's worth.

After dropping last week's game in Montreal by a solitary unconverted try in the last two minutes of play the Blues will be spoiling for a comeback, and have their best chance in years of taking the title away from the visitors. A few changes among the forwards makes the scrum probably the heaviest that Varsity has ever fielded, and should more than counteract the slight edge in weight that McGill had last Saturday.

Among the three-quarters, the only replacement is at centre three, the position filled last week by Drummond-Hay, who will be out due to injury. Bob Trillis, one of the team's top speedsters, will be taking his place.

The team for to-day's game is as follows — Butt, Burger, Laughton, Lepper, Trillis, Chadwick, Campbell, Gamble, Anderson, Sacre, Harper, Robinson, Baines, Fayle, Ham.

Eng. Soc. Fine To Go On Loan

The board of Governors of the University of Toronto have decided that the $4,000 fine levied on the Engineering Society will be put into a special loan account for the benefit of deserving students. Professor R. R. McLaughlin, dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering has announced.

Loans may be made to any engineering students from this account by the Committee established by the Board to administer loans in the Engineering Faculty. This committee is composed of members of the staff and the alumni of the faculty. "We know from experience that such loans provide badly needed assistance to worthy students, and that they are always repaid," Dean McLaughlin said. "It is easy to envisage the beneficial effect this fund will have in perpetuity."

The $4,000 fine was levied by the Caput following raids by engineering students on various campus buildings September 23.

Smug and over-confident, Varsity's Blues took to the field against the McGill Redmen, the punching bags of Intercollegiate Football this season, and nearly were victims of the upset of the year. Varsity thoughts must have been entirely on the important game with Western next Saturday, because the Blues paid slight attention to the game with McGill. Toronto won the game 36-12, but not until they had come from behind a 12-0 McGill lead.

For almost half the game the Montrealers returned the humiliation done to them last week by the boys in Varsity Blue. They held the Varsity runners to pathetic yardage, caused fumbles and exploited same for two fast and neat touchdowns before the Blues remembered that they were supposed to smash this team. Once the Blue attack started to play up to standard, they managed to pull ahead by a single point, leading 13-12 at the half. Last week, in Montreal, Varsity had led 31-6 at the break.

Hard rough play featured the game with both clubs struggling desperately for their every gain until Varsity quarterback Harry Wilson began hitting on deadly long passes. From there to the end, it was only a matter of how many times Varsity could score before the gun.

Injury to first string quarterback Bill Stevenson, was supposed to slow the Blues up and give the Redmen a chance against them, but Harry Wilson, his initial stage fright under control proved what Blue fans have been saying all along. Varsity has a second string backfield every bit as good as their first. Behind a line that settled down to play excellent ball, Wilson took all the time he needed throwing for 16 completions in 29 tries. Surprising even his own teammates, Wilson worked the Varsity offense with imagination and good sense — a combination that had the reeling McGills a little punchy. On one third down, while marching to a touchdown, Wilson watched the McGills pull their men back to take the third down kick, then he whipped a short bullet to Smale on the right end for 21 yards and the first down.

After their starting spurt the McGills got to meet big Jack Strapp at his tackle spot and wished they hadn't. Walking through the McGill front wall, Strapp fouled up the Redmen plays on several occasions and gave an idea of what had been on in last week's game. Strapp and Bob Waugh were two good excuses for the Redmen weakness in the passing department, their rushing of passers causing Ken Wright to hit on not a single throw. Before his injury Frank

Engineering Volunteers Stand Out in Flood Work

"The Engineers were as outstanding as any group could possibly be," commented Brigadier Robert L. Purves, D.S.O., and Army Commander of the Central Ontario Area, in reference to the flood relief work of the S.P.S. students.

"Of all the volunteers, the students worked hardest and most thoroughly. They were steady, punctual, dependable, and seemed to put all their energy into the job," continued Brigadier Purves, who described them as "fine, public-spirited young men."

Brigadier Purves offered to write a letter to the University authorities commending the services of the students, and appealing for consideration of these in regard to the Engineering Society dispute.

The Red Cross, too, acknowledge appreciation to the Skulemen. "No one knows how grateful we are to those university boys," said one spokesman. "Their contribution was unusual, and their work on the bridges alone was worth a great deal."

"Their co-operation was wonderful — they would do any thing," continued the Red Cross representative, who asked that the director of the operation, Neil Irwin, be especially commended. "At a meeting of the Relief Board, Mr. Irwin's part was particularly mentioned. Certainly the success of the operation could not have been achieved without him."

The owner of Hick's Boathouse, the scene of some of the worst debris damage, said that he was "exceptionally pleased" with the work of the Engineers. Mr. Kim Langford learned of the disaster through a Miami newspaper while basking in the Florida sand and sunshine. Returning to the land of the flood, Langford said that the Skulemen made him "more than happy" with their aid.

"I should like to make it a point of letting the University know about the job that they did," commented Langford. "The students were more than co-operative, not only in their search and clean-up, but in giving me a helping hand around the place."

"They are a great bunch of fellows," according to Councillor W. R. Hodgson, chairman of the Etobicoke clearance committee.

"They have been working in muck right up to their ears."

Councillor Hodgson added that Report on Dresden

By RUTH LOR

How does it feel to be in a restaurant where the waitress ignored you and the manager would not speak to your companions all it just because they were Negro? Let me tell you about it.

We were hungry; we hadn't eaten in the five and a half hours it had taken us to drive from Toronto. We waited from 15 to 20 minutes for service which was refused us along with an opportunity to speak to the manager.

This happened on Friday in Dresden, Ontario, that now infamous town about 15 miles from Chatham. Earlier this year the provincial Fair Accommodations Practices Act had been passed making it an offence to discriminate in "public places on grounds of race, creed, color, nationality, ancestry or place of origin." On Sept. 28, Judge Schwenger of Hamilton conducted a public hearing of three complaints of restaurant discrimination in Dresden in which the two accused restaurant managers admitted their guilt.

The announcement came on Oct. 20 from Labour Minister Charles Daley that he would not prosecute in the Dresden cases unless there were further instances of anti-Negro action. He placed great confidence in the "good sense and good judgment of the managers concerned to obey the law. He had heard of no further complaints since the hearing but this, unknown to him, was because no tests had been made pending his decision.

With this in mind, the Toronto Joint Labor Committee for Human Rights organized a test of the restaurants concerned. Taking part were Hugh Burnette, a citizen of Dresden and secretary of the National Unity Association, Bromley Armstrong, financial secretary of the Massey-Harris-Ferguson CIO-UAW union of Toronto who are both Negroes, and myself also a Canadian, but of Chinese origin.

When we reached the second restaurant, we found the door locked and the dining room lights off although it was 2.30 p.m. There was a light on in the pantry and a waitress peering out at us. Apparently, they had been warned of our coming and had closed shop.

How does it feel to be refused service at a restaurant? Disgusted. It makes one pretty aggravated first, that there are places in Canada where friends cannot sit down together to eat or enjoy coffee and secondly, that we have a law forbidding such discrimination — a law which has so far proved ineffective. After all, legislation against robbery is not made in the hope that citizens will obey merely on the strength of the existence of the law. Why then is this the case thus far in the legislation against this "racial" discrimination which robs human beings of dignity and mutual appreciation?

LPP Club Hears Penner

Canada is not competing with the United States in Trade, said Mr. Norman Penner to a meeting of the Labor Progressive Party Club Friday. He was speaking on "What's ahead for the Student", and dealt mainly with economic trends in Canada and their probable results.

Penner forecast another economic collapse in Canada within the next few years, if the present government stays in power. He cited examples, such as Canada's textiles industry, which cannot meet U.S. prices on dumped textiles. Another example was Canada's aircraft industry, which is turning out solely military aircraft for the NATO nations, and is getting no chance to experiment with civilian aircraft. He said that the government could provide 100,000 new jobs if Ungava iron ore was processed in Canada. And he criticized the Canadian government's subservience to the United States' demands, for example the St. Lawrence Seaway fiasco.

In the LPP program, called National policy, Penner called for a return to the statesmanship of MacDonald and Papineau. National Policy calls for action in matters such as Commonwealth trade, low-cost housing, and a Canadian Bill of Rights, he said.

Arbor room noisy?

Yes And No

By SANDRA SKY

"I was interested in having a scientific confirmation of something, everybody knows. However, my chief concern is to have a pleasant atmosphere for our patrons, and if this is the way they want it, it's fine with me." This was the reply of Warden McCulley of Hart House.

Several days ago, two enterprising engineers made a survey of campus noises, and found the Arbor Room to be among the worst offenders. Since then, we have attempted to get a cross-section of opinion from the patrons of the newly-established Hart House coffee shop, as to whether the noise is offensive.

Bernie Eastman, II UC, thinks the noise is necessary to the atmosphere of the room, and gives the boisterous people on the campus (like skulden) room to let off steam. Mary Barnett, III UC, on the other hand finds it too difficult to talk over the babble, and adds that the juke-box doesn't help matters any.

This brings to light another aspect of the argument. What or who is to blame for all the racket? Some thought the music had lots to do with it, while others, like a group of anonymous merry Meds-men think the juke-box should be much louder, and that the room should be equipped with four or five speakers and better acoustics.

And so the controversy continued. Peter Moore, II Pre-Meds was unable to offer an opinion because he said it was too noisy to hear what was being asked. In contrast, Peter Van Nostrand, on being questioned said, "What noise?"

Apparently, Vic girls are quite reconciled to the supposed uproar. Marlene White assured us that it was no worse than the Vic coffee shop, and Roberta Forrest pointed out that people didn't come in there to study... "they have the library for that."

Getting a behind-the-counter point of view, we asked one of the waitresses who works in the Arbor Room. She stated that at times, it is so noisy that orders have to be repeated several times before they are heard. However, since they turned down the juke-box, the situation is greatly improved, she added.

our writing readers:

95 Decibels Of Cacophony

The Editor, The Varsity
The Arbor Room has proven a splendid success in its function as a campus meeting place. Here an informal atmosphere makes it possible for students and staff to meet each other in a spirit of good fellowship to weigh and discuss, praise and condemn.

Yet the picture is marred. From the Art Gallery to the Debates Room reverberate 95 decibels of purchased cacophony originating in the Arbor Room juke box. Let no one deny the place of music in the House. The Record Room, the Sunday Evening Concerts, and the Weekday Recitals play an important part in student life. But the most significant and enduring institution of Hart House is the bull session.

The bull session is choked by a juke box.
The juke box should go.

More on the Juke Box

The Editor, The Varsity.

We wish to offer our congratulations for the laudible renovation which has resulted in the Arbor Room. However we have one small complaint in mind. This resides in the Juke-box. Presumably the purposes behind the Arbor room involved more than the providence of a place where the student body might gather for refreshments. It seems that, situated as it is in the heart of the campus, such a place should be conducive to that invigorating exchange of ideas among the members of different faculties & colleges which characterizes an adult group.

Unfortunately, the selections now being played, together with the present sound level (95 decibels — a level slightly less than that of a jet, as well as the jacked-up base range (especially notable in the highly distorted rumbles of the bass-strings are conducive neither to conversation nor that state of relaxation prerequisite for proper digestatory process. Indeed so accentuated is the bass that one literally feels ones intestinal tract in resonance with the rumble.

Further, most of the music now being played which apparently tends to draw groups of stomping herds before the awe-inspiring machine (reminiscent of Maori fertility rites) can hardly be said to be in the best taste.

We therefore suggest that: (A) either the instrument be returned to the Asylum or dropped in Lake Ontario, (B) the sound be diminished to a dull roar & that the box be stuck in a corner, possibly draped, and that subsequent selections be chosen with an ear to the avoidance of hilly-billy music. Confident that standards of Hart House as etched on the stone-plaque in the main corridor will be maintained, we remain,

Arbor Room Picture

The Editor, The Varsity.

A milestone, sir. The week of October 25, 1954, will be remembered by untold future inhabitants of the Arbor Room as a milestone in the history of this ivied institution. After an inauspicious beginning, three week's progress produced a tradition of coffee dates, and an occasional visit from a Queen's Park "Professionnelle". That this was not sufficient to satisfy the suppressed desires of most normal university students was evidenced by the controversy over recent vaguely-obscene Varsity features as contrasted with the apathy surrounding more worthwhile subjects.

The remedy, sir, was brilliant. The normally austere "Picture of the Week" was replaced by a portrait of a woman fulfilling "the mission for which Women has been ordained: Procreation..."

The description of the picture adds, "her body is warm and caressing, her head is thrown back in sheer ecstasy..." We need only await the moment, sir, when female visitors to the Arbor Room take the hint. No more frustration, no more suppression, only pure eroticism, A milestone, sir.

AUGUSTUS LEADS IN FLOAT PARADE

School of Law and Skulemen Best Represent 'Canadiana'

With the reluctant assistance of Augustus, the jaundiced horse, the legal-beagles carried off the Alumni Shield for the best entry in Saturday's float parade.

Using the theme of legal progress as their basic idea, the law men contrasted our legal evolution with the bloody revolutions other countries have had. This theme and its execution were good enough to get the nod of approval from the three judges, Dean C. T. Bissell, Warden Joseph McCulley, and SAC president Bill Angus. Angus registered his abstinence.

Many variations of "Canadiana" were found in the float parade with its twenty entries. Many of these centered around the U.S. view of life in Canada.

Second prize went to the Skulemen for their presentation of the driving of the last spike in the CPR. Accompanying this float was the notorious Lady Godiva Memorial Band rendering appropriate wild west music.

The men of Trinity shooting Dan McGrew took the third prize. Of course the Lady that's Known as Lou was giving the necessary encouragement.

Joe Divok of the Blue and White Society was in charge of the arrangements for the parade. Divok said that he was very pleased with the co-operation he had received from everyone.

Bill Angus, president of the SAC and one of the judges, said, "The fifth annual float parade was the best ever as far as the theme was concerned. Perhaps it was not quite as good from an artistic point of view."

During the half-time intermission in the afternoon's game the two best floats were driven around the track at the stadium.

In addition to the various Canadian characters who were represented in the parade the university was honored by a visit from his satanic majesty. However a piper from Knox College sent him into shivering agony with renditions of soulful music from the bagpipes.

A caried tooth being rejuvenated with goo wholesome Canadian milk provided a warning for those who were looking forward to a week-end of dissipation.

It does seem that almost anything can be made "Canadian" with enough ingenuity.

"No Reds Here" — Law

This is the School of Law's prize-winning float at Saturday's pre-game float parade. The lawyer with the red flag is urging the assembled multitudes to arise and throw off their chains. "Evolution Through Law—Not Revolution Through Bloodshed" was the theme of the float.

Skule Choo-Choo Places

CPR No. 1 got a full head of steam going again last Saturday as the Engineers depicted the building of Canada's first railroad in their float. They won second prize for their efforts. The Lady Godiva Memorial Band was also on hand to provide inspiration to the stalwart skulemen as they drove the last spike.

Record Collection Opens Season Soon At Mech. Building

The Carnegie Record Collection is opening its season with a tea this Thursday at 4:30 in the staff lounge of the Mechanical Building. This collection is finding a home at the U. of T. after being presented at universities in the United States and Canada.

The group will also be drawing on other record libraries and private collections around the campus. Individual students are invited to prepare and present their own programmes; they can be presented to the curator, Bard Bakker, II Trinity, at this Thursday's party.

The Varsity will carry weekly announcements of the programmes.

Angel Voices

An incident of great import occurred in Dresden this week-end. Three people, two negroes and a girl of Chinese descent, went to restaurants in that city but were refused service.

Despite this obvious flouting of the Fair Practises Act, Labor Minister Charles Daley refuses to prosecute the responsible parties.

While we realize that the situation in Dresden is intolerable we are at complete loss to explain the attitude of an elected member of the Legislative Assembly in whose province this matter lies.

The managers of the restaurants concerned in Dresden may be giving in to social pressure, which in a small community can be extremely powerful. The Labor Minister has the weight of a recently-enacted law behind him as well as the social conscience of the rest of the province and his refusal to act must be unmitigated blindness.

Some people have expressed their belief that there are communists behind the agitation in this small Ontario community. It is certainly our fault if the communists have taken advantage of the situation to create tension.

If we allow such open sores to continue to exist we have no control over the type of infection which will infest it.

Nor will our petty moralizing vindicate us before the bar of history. As Abraham Lincoln declared just prior to the Civil War, "No man can escape history. This fiery trial through which we pass will light us down in honor or dishonor to succeeding generations."

There is no time now for paralyzing platitudes or professional buck-passing. The conscience of a nation "pleads, trumpet-tongued, the deep damnation" of this travesty.

Graduates' Return

We are guilty of an egregious error in judgment. We assumed that the program of Homecoming Week-end was directed to returning graduates.

Try as we might we could find very little this week-end which was specifically planned with the graduates in mind.

One of the greatest problems in handling Homecoming Week-end is the tremendous number of grads who have some tie with the University. It is manifestly impossible to interest even a fraction of the estimated 60,000 living graduates of this university in any program.

If some way could have been found of approaching portions of this group, a very successful week-end could have been organized.

It may have been possible, for example to have invited back all the T4's — 9T4, 0T4, 1T4 and so on. This would have reduced the problem to manageable proportions and enable the Alumni Association in co-operation with the Blue and White Society to have staged a week-end of interest.

Conceited Paper

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Varsity has a lot of conceit to expect letters from the mature students of this university. The letters it does receive come from those to whom Varsity appeals the most, people with minds like frying pans, who conform very well to the present sex-conscious, libertine age.

Certainly women who feel themselves low enough to be insulted by "The Cavalier" deserve that insult. That so many should do so is perfectly natural, great majority of the students being still far from maturity. Immaturity is not a crime and cannot be condemned. To adolescents, even those who condemn it, sex is very important, more important than NFCUS, WUS, and other USEs.

Personally I find Varsity sometimes entertaining, often informative, sometimes not worth the paper it's printed on, but in no instance I should think it worthwhile to take an active part in one of its controversies.

Paul Wyszowski,
I SPS.

Important?

The Editor,
The Varsity.

So our friends from S.P.S. want that old razzle-dazzle "Joe College" football game back again, do they? Well, they are among the people who can do something about it even with the supposed restrictions of university officials. In the last few years the inter-faculty rivalries have developed to such an extent that they now secure more of the Varsity students' attention than the inter-university rivalry.

When one goes to a football game at Varsity stadium all one can hear at the end of the Toronto yell is "Yeah Skule". When the engineers do their valiant job of defending the goal posts are they doing it for U. of T. or, as appears more likely, are they doing it for the honour of old S.P.S.? To cite another example: when Vic has its Soph-Frosh apple battle has it actually been (up until this year) a chance to show the uninvited, but seemingly welcome Engineers that Vic is as strong as Skule?

When we have decided that Skule is not as important as Varsity, nor Vic, nor U.C., nor Dents, nor any faculty, then we will be able to get that University of Toronto spirit that the writers and many more of us want.

Carabin Weekends

The Editor,
The Varsity.

It has come to my attention that plans are being laid for another Carabin Week-end. I therefore raise my pen to protest against what I consider to be a waste of students time and money.

In the first place the system of choosing the members of the week-end is woefully inadequate. I have no doubt of the sincerity of the men and women who are responsible that they are manifestly incapable of knowing all the facts. Each student who is interested fills out a form giving among other things, his academic standing in the fields of undergraduate activity in which he is engaged. The organizers of the week-end make in addition two recommendations to this committee. Then (the fortunate few are chosen) simply on the basis of a piece of paper and a name. The committee cannot function wisely without a personal knowledge of the applicant. Since it is physically impossible for six people to know more than a fraction of the student body how then can they act wisely? The result is that a handful of campus politicians, those faces more or less familiar to the champions of E.A.C. appear on Carabin week-end.

In the second place, the week-end is designed not consciously mind you, but designed, to give a false impression of French Canadians to English Canadians and Vice, Versa. It is a week-end of song, laughter and camaraderie with a dash of serious thought. On Carabin week-end everyone is everyone's brother. It is a party, and parties are far removed from the daily round of care, from the forces that motivate men and women. How then can the students gain a true picture of the other man's way of life? According to the professions of E.A.C. this is the object of the week-end.

The event is of course expensive. Thus it is a lost week-end in two senses, not only in time but in money, money earned by the sweat of the students beyond the pale.

Kenneth A. MacDonald

The true and Right Society, at its weekly Inspiration and Fellowship meeting last night passed a motion to enlist the noted evangelist, Dr. Willy Cracker, in its current "Convert the Campus" campaign. In accordance with its declared purpose; "To foster University spiritually," The Society voted unanimously to invite Dr. Cracker to lead the nightly devotions in Varsity Stadium.

"Our aim" said Brother Bull Harrass, "is that all university students should repent from their wickedness and be saved. Like us", he added modestly. Pointing to a recent survey, which proved that 50% of students who went to church did not drink, and that 50% of those who drank did not go to church. Brother Harrass concluded; "50% of the students of this university are lost in Sin!"

"Willy Cracker's appeal is emotional," sighed Sister Epiphany Carpark, "and that's just what college men need. More emotion." She went on to say that trying to convert students by means of clamorous, dispassionate reasoning would only be using the devil's weapons.

The Varsity Band, which is practising such old college favourites as "Is there a nickel on the old bass drum" and the new Varsity song, "Take time to be holy", will be provided with new concertinas for the occasion. An order has been placed with the Muskrat Lumber Company for enough sawdust to fill the stadium, it was revealed.

The meeting ended with testimonials by all members, and prayers that all students (with the exception of St. Michael's students) should turn from their sinful ways and be filled with the Spirit. (Varsity spirit, of course).

On A Screen Darkly

Mixed Fare

Recently in San Francisco, lecturing in the San Francisco Museum of Art's superb Art in Cinema series, Gene Kelly said what I think is the final word on what the musical film is and should be: "a frame of reference within which the public, the studios, and the censors will accept a freedom of imagination they won't accept in other frames." It is unfortunate that the same Mr. Kelly happens to be the choreographer and star of a musical which, regardless of its great entertainment value has probably set the American musical film back about five years. I speak of Brigadoon, of course, which is now drawing crowds to Loew's theatre. Brigadoon, however, is enchanting the public because of the great charm which was inherent in the original play, and not because of anything the cinema has added to it. Perhaps in spite of what the cinema has added to it: Kelly has derided the Cinemascope screen as being utterly the wrong dimensions for good dance film.

Despite the beautiful songs, romantic plot, and passable dance routines, the film of Brigadoon is as stagebound as if it never left Schubert Alley. Even disregarding the specially unrealistic sets of the little Scottish town, a good film might have been made just from the resources of subtle editing (as Kelly and Donen did in On the Town) or the sheer charm of the staging, (as Vincette Minelli did in Meet me in St. Louis).

But in Brigadoon the attempts of Minelli to keep his camera moving and use the enormous screen space to the best advantage are pitiful. Perhaps we better face the fact that the director has not yet been found who can make Cinema-scope look like more than an animated bill-board. The only scenes in Brigadoon which really come alive are Cyd Charisse's (or somebody's) singing of Waitin' for My Deary, towards the beginning of the film, and the hilariously saffric (and by now almost legendary) sequence in a New York bar where Tommy and Jeff realise the crass and smoky world of the Junior Advertising Executive is not for them, and for which MGM's casting director must have subpoenaed half of Madison Avenue as extras. These two brief scenes are the only ones from the whole monumental production that owe any of their success to the peculiar resources of the cinema.

Kelly's dancing in Brigadoon is best forgotten, I think; perhaps he was just disgusted with the sheer futility of the whole thing. At any rate, in no instance does he measure up to his earlier work in American in Paris, Singin' in the Rain, or any of the several films he made with Frank Sinatra. Cyd Charisse, however, has her best role, and does her best job to date, as Fiona. Her acting is satisfactory, and her dancing, since she isn't required to do anything in the classical tradition, is, to use a confusing but descriptive phrase, superbly sufficient. Elaine Stewart makes brilliant use of her one scene as Kelly's worldly New York fiancée, and almost walks right off with the movie. I shall resist the impulse to follow up that last phrase with "and I wish she had", because Brigadoon, if it does nothing else, is a crackjack example of everything that a good musical film shouldn't be, and as such perhaps its preservation for posterity is in order.

—Germaine Clinton

russian export

The Studio theatre is now featuring "Stars of the Russian Ballet," a film starring, people's artists of the USSR and mostly Stalin Prize Laureates.

The People's choice dancers are mostly very good. Ballet is one thing started before the revolution that was not repudiated by it. There have been some changes made, however. The shortened version of Swan Lake, the first of three ballets in the film, has been transformed from tragedy to comedy with the addition of a scene where the good man throws the bad man over a cliff and returns to claim his swan-maiden in a touching close-up. Ulanova, described in iron-curtain terms as "the greatest living ballerina", gave a beautiful performance as Odetta. To a base of sound technical mastery she adds the costume of characterisation in carefully imitative swan gestures and the make-up of character through the emotion of her personality. Dudinskaya by contrast had a technique as brilliant as a three-hundred watt bulb in the part of Odilla, but a characterisation just as unsubtle. No prince would have been fooled by her impersonation. There were many other variations from versions we know that are of interest mainly by comparison.

The second ballet, called Flames of Paris, was a Russian interpretation of the French revolution. The peasants sing the Marseillaise in Russian and do Russian peasant dances while the "palace plots against the people." Likewise the court dances are made to be unbearably dull and the royal crest is knocked down by a fellow posing with a hammer. Concealed behind the "message" of this ballet and the chopping of scenes for plot there is some fairly attractive dancing.

The Fountain of Bakhchisarai is a sort of variant on a Scherezade-type. The man proves unfaithful and the favourite, dressed solely in yards of gauze, kills her rival. The most interesting part of this ballet was the dancing of Plisetskaya as the "rejected favourite. Strong and sensuous she presented the role most vigorously.

Movie-wise this ballet film was no star. The camera imaginatively showed nothing more than any theatre-goer could see, with his own eyes and a pair of binoculars. Also Sequences were often disjointed and the colour was predominantly browned. Even the NFB has done better things to ballets.

The Meaning of Masques was the topic of Prof. MacLraith in the fourth in the series "Exploring minds" which was telecast yesterday at six. From a hallow-e'en masque the discussion moved to Indian masques borrowed from the Ontario Museum, outlining the several significances: religious, medicinal and pictorial.

On the whole it was an interesting lecture, interestingly presented. The cameras moved from the straight man Percy Saltzman and the speaker MacLraith to concentrate on the masques themselves, and attempted one link-up shot of the British

Picture Loan Society

Jacques de Tonnancour said once on the CBC: "In order to appreciate a painting you have to live with it for a month." The Picture Loan Society gives you an opportunity to do just this.

The society rents the drawings and paintings of its artists members to its public members for 2% of the work's total cost, per month. Public membership in the Society is open to anyone who is willing to pay the nominal membership fee. So slight are the returns to an artist that I wondered myself just why he would be interested in such an arrangement. I asked Douglas Duncan, the guiding spirit of the Society — a tall grey-ing man with a habit of leaning against the radiator. He suggested that most artists are happy to receive the price of a tube of paint as rental for a painting which might otherwise just gather dust around his studio.

The rental idea gives an undecided buyer a chance to take a picture home and make up his mind at leisure. (If he decides to buy it within 6 months after renting, the society will deduct the rent already paid from the purchase price. He can pay the rest in instalments of 10% per month). However, there is no compulsion or obligation to buy. If the picture remains unsold the artist can console himself that he has contributed to popular education and taste. To the student, all this is an opportunity to look at his leisure at a number of works of original art and appreciate them in detail, without going into debt.

Renting pictures is the more spectacular activity of the Picture Loan Society. It performs an invaluable service as the "business manager" of many Canadian artists and gives them a chance to display their works, an opportunity which even the most famous of them might not otherwise have, surprisingly enough.

Unfortunately the ordinary commercial galleries are forced by their nature to exhibit what is profitable. Since the taste of the majority of picture buyers tends to be rather naive and fashion-following, what is profitable, is not always what is "good" and never what is not widely recognized.

The Gallery of Toronto can provide space only for the great and the society shows which give a small representation to a vast miscellany, while a limited, non-buying public views the "prestige and education" shows at Hart House and Victoria College. Only at the Picture Loan can many Canadian fine artists find the consideration and the hanging space they must have to make a living.

The stimulation provided by the Picture Loan Society is well worth the 10-minute walk to No. 3 St. Charles Street West.

—Les Lawrence.

Canadian Music

Musically speaking, many otherwise up-to-date people are living in another century. However, contemporary music is written by men living and thinking in our own times, men who must create a new musical idiom for the modern world. Our musical heritage must not be neglected, but truly creative work has always been unafraid to produce something new. Our problem is to evaluate new and unfamiliar music, especially hard to understand because of the apparent barbaric sounds our composers bombard us with. In the last fifty years familiarity with the works of Debussy, Stravinsky, Schoenberg and a d their "contemporaries" has done much to influence our musical taste.

Canadian music has begun to speak rather well for itself in the last decade through the work of the Canadian League of Composers, an organization which makes Canadian music more familiar to the public through their annual series of concerts.

In the past our minds have been influenced through an overdose of foreign music. We have so busied ourselves with deciding the worth of this work that our music at home has been inexcusably neglected. In many cases the fault lies with the composers themselves. Their works smack of a complete disinterest in their own individuality. Fortunately, on the contemporary Canadian scene, there has arisen a pure mature voice which has spoken and will continue to speak in a music which we as Canadians can be justly proud of. John Weinzwieg, a founder of the League of Composers has set an example that all other composers in this country may well follow. Weinzwieg is sensitive to the peculiar needs of the twentieth century. As "Professor Weinzwieg" he has been instrumental in shaping the minds of our younger musical students, giving them an insight into the process of clear creative thinking.

Now is the time for all conductors, instrumentalists, composers and programme arrangers to consider seriously their responsibilities to the musical community and act accordingly within the limits of their scope.

WESTERN STOPS INTERMEDIATES

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

Queens' Golden Gaels have really thrown a monkey wrench into the Intercollegiate Union's standings by whipping the Western Mustangs 18-11 in Kingston Saturday, and assuring themselves of at least a playoff spot when the shouting is all over.

Our statistically-minded sports staff has come up with a very logical set of final standings in the College league. McGill's future is simple; they lose their remaining two games. Queens win next week in Montreal but lose to the Blues on November 13. Western also beats the Redmen on the thirteenth, but suppose the Blues and the Mustangs battle to a tie in London next Saturday.

If you stop to figure it out, that leaves Queens, Western, and Toronto all tied for first place in the league with eight points each. This brings to light a situation never before seen in the Intercollegiate Union's long history. It would seem unfair to settle this problem in any other way than playoff games, but that will conceivably extend the College season right on to Gray Cup day, and punch holes in UBC's plans for a College Bowl on November 27.

However, you can all sit back and relax, now that we've mentioned it, because those same Blues are not planning to tie the Mustangs in London. Next Saturday, football history will be made in Little Memorial Stadium when the Blues crack the jinx that has held them winless in the old London since 1936.

It Pays To Be Ignorant . . .

. . . for some people but not last Saturday in the Stadium press box. One bright young man from McGill quipped in the first quarter when the Blues were having a bit of trouble, "Sure miss Stevenson, don't you", fully unaware that the same Mr. Stevenson was sitting right in front of him. But the point of the story is that while several people might have been saying that in the first half, Harry Wilson so completely changed their minds that he'll probably see a good deal of action against the Mustangs this Saturday.

From the Blue Room . . . Ex-Blue captain Roy McMurtry's UCC football team all but won the Little Big Four title last Saturday, defeating TCS 13-11 . . . the Varsity Hockey Blues begin a rough schedule of exhibition games this Saturday night in Dixie Arena against the OHA Jr. A Marlboros.

PHE Girls Victorious In Interfac Swimming

Another season, another swim meet and another championship for the PHE gals. On Saturday night, of all nights in the week for a meet, the prospective Marilyn Bells of the campus got together over at the Hart House Pool to decide which college had the best to offer in the way of speed and synchronized swimming. PHE with 62.5 points had just a little too much finesse for the types from U.C., Trinity, Victoria, Medicine and St. Mike's.

Although the synchronized swimming champs had been decided on Wednesday night, diving and speed were left until Saturday evening. These three divisions of the meet, in spite of the fact that PHE for the fourth year walked off with the honours, were evenly split with PHE taking the speed, Trinity, the diving, and Vic the synchronized.

Demonstrations of synchronized swimming were given between events by Nan Peel, Nancy Doubt, Marg Stott, Joan Davie, Mary Lou Nash, Mary Wingate and Janet Baine — all were winners on Wednesday. In the diving, Joan Archer, Trinity III was the star of the board with team mate Rosemary Wheally following close behind in second place.

Those early Saturday morning classes of last winter in swim officiating paid off on Saturday night with the girls of Varsity running their own interfaculty meet like a group of professionals. A lot of credit is due to Miss Baxter in this effort to raise more interest in swimming around the university and also to make it possible to have more meets for the gals. The only suggestions the writer has to make is, if any more swim meets are planned, let's not have them on Saturday nights, especially if the Saturday night happens to fall on Homecoming weekend.

Team Standings — PHE, 62.5; Victoria, 49.5; Trinity, 39; St. Mike's, 26; Meds, 4.

Individual Standings — Barb Gluck, PHE, 21; Nancy Doubt, PHE, 20; Nancy Peel, U.C., 18; Sue McGlouchin, St. Mike's, 16; and Joan Archer, Trinity, 14 and Rosemary Wheally, Trinity 14.

Trinity Beats UC In Their Annual Toilet Bowl Classic

On Friday afternoon, the Trinity football team was presented the Priory Award after defeating U.C., 11-1, in their annual game, the Toilet Bowl.

Because of a muddy field both teams were neither consistent nor particularly effective. Trinity's chances were hampered a great deal because of frequent fumbles; U.C. at the same time, because of their lack of depth in the backfield, were not strong enough to prepare a good attack in the late stages of the game.

Both teams' lines, however, were impressive even though their backfields were not. For Trinity, guard, Dewey Farquharson, and centre, Max Sanderhson, and, for U.C., guard, Ron Banks, and centre Chris Wansborough, were all good.

The score does not give any indication of the play as both teams appeared evenly matched. In the first half, two Trinity fumbles recovered by Don Bittkal and John Moffat of U.C. did not aid U.C. in the scoring column. Barry Monree of U.C. kicked a single, however, thus giving his team its lead.

In the third quarter a quick kick by U.C. on their second down was short. The ball fell on the 35 yard line of U.C. From here Trinity started a ground attack that took them to the five. Jerry Azziz then went around the end for Trinity's first major. The convert was not good.

The score remained 5-1 for Trinity until the dying minutes of the last quarter when Jim Brown of Trinity intercepted a pass on the U.C. 50 and ran 60 yards for the touchdown. Tony Barwick converted. The game ended 11-1 for Trinity.

Blues Trounce -

Palermo also did his bit in messing up the McGill attack.

Stars of the game were the Varsity quarter and his receiving ends who tallied a total of 387 yards in the air. Fred Smale was the top receiver but Don Smith and George Stulac showed some fine playing for unappreciative McGill eyes. Stulac took one smooth touchdown pass and blocked well. Backfielders weren't as good in the receiving department, though Gerry Lansky took a nice one from Wilson, going 54 yards before McGill caught him.

Phil Muntz's leg injury proved another point about the powerful Blues. With the fullback position open Masterson threw his other three fullbacks, most of whom worked only on defence previously, into the offense. Wally Bulchak, Bob Kimoff and Don Cheeseman showed utter disrespect for the McGill line, going through it with ease and diving over when it piled up in front of them.

Of the six Varsity touchdowns, four came on passes, one on a quarter sneak by Wilson and the other on a display by Al Riva. Riva went for two touchdowns, both in the first half, and was the Blue workhorse all afternoon, playing his standard strong game. Wilson's touchdown throws went to Smale, Stulac, Lansky and Riva. Steve Oneschuk hit for five converts and a single.

BLUE BITS . . . Steve Ones-

chuk has just too much power in his right foot. One convert was called bad because the referee said it went too high to be judged properly, and so he called it wide. Spectators saw it go through and thought it was not allowed because of a penalty . . . One McGill man in the press box was heard to say that none of McGill's first string could match the Varsity benchwarmers. It would seem that he was right . . . Fumbles were Varsity's greatest failing Saturday. They set up all the McGill points . . . Though Muntz and Palermo were injured slightly both came back before the end . . . Steve Oneschuk got away some strong punts, later it was found that he had been doing his best kicking of the season with a stiff knee.

Colts Whip Jr. Blues Game Being Protested

London, Ont., Oct. 31. (Staff) — Rain in the first half, snow in the second half, and one of the best backfields in several seasons in the Intermediate Intercollegiate league, combined to give the Western Colts an 18-5 verdict over the Varsity Intermediates here Saturday afternoon. The Toronto team played the game under protest, as Western dressed thirty-one men, while the Baby Blues on ly-dressed twenty-six. The league rules limit the number of players to be dressed to twenty-six, but Western maintained that no league really exists.

Willie Casanova, triple-threat halfback from Windsor Patterson High, was the individual star of the game, passing very effectively from the tailback spot in Western's Diamond T offence. The Colt's touchdowns were scored by Bogart, Doug Atchison, and Tony Andrejicka, while Jack Hillier kicked a single in the first quarter, and Casanova converted two of the majors.

The Baby Blues' lone score was early in the first frame, when Joe Whitmore drove over centre after two previous cracks at the tough Western line. Western led 6-5 at the end of the first quarter, but the Baby Blues appeared to be holding the vaunted Western offence at a standstill, while gaining little ground themselves.

Western stuck mostly to ground plays in the second quarter, running quick-openers almost every time they had the ball. The Colts were not outplaying the Blues badly in this frame, although they made several marches into Varsity territory only to be stopped short by the Blues at their twenty yard line.

In the third quarter, as the rain turned to snow, the Western team began to launch a passing attack with amazing accuracy. However, Larry Joynt, in the quarterback slot for the Intermediates held his own until late in the period when Varsity fumbled on their own twenty-one yard line. Western recovered and rolled to their second touchdown by Andrejicka. Casanova kicked the extra point to give the Colts a 12-5 lead.

Just previous to that fumble, Joynt had hit Jack Rogers with a 25 yard pass, but Rogers couldn't break away from the Colt defence. Not to be denied now the Colts struck for one more major in the fourth quarter by Bogart and Casanova again converted to make the final score 18-5 for Western.

Gaels Reverse Form Top Mustangs 18-11

Kingston, Ont., Oct. 31 (CUP) — Sparked by a complete reversal of form by their front wall, the Queens Golden Gaels galloped their way into a first spot in the Senior Intercollegiate standings here this afternoon when they handed the Western Mustangs an 18-11 setback.

The win, kept the Gaels' unbeaten streak intact in Richardson Stadium this year. The Metras-coached Londoners had smeared the Gaels 27-1 just one week ago in London as the two clubs opened up their home and home series.

Terrific plunging and running by Al Kocman, moved to the fullback spot earlier this week, featured a Gael attack that kept the Mustangs bottled in their own end for the greater part of the game. The Gaels were also strengthened along the front wall by the return of 210-pound all-star centre Gary Lewis, and by Bob McRae, a 195-pound tackle. Both Lewis and McRae came out of retirement in an effort to help the Gaels and both are expected to finish out the season.

The Mustangs, with the services of hard driving fullback Ralph Simmons, were unable to match the ground attack thrown at them by the renovated Gaels. Don Getty, passing from the Diamond T formation, spearheaded the Western attack by running for their second touchdown with two minutes left to play in the game; Murray Henderson gathered in Getty's 20-yard toss on the lost play of the first half and lateralled to Gino Fracas who went across for the major. The convert attempt was blocked by Gary Schneider.

Walt Delahay fumbled at the Western 23 early in the first quarter to set up the first Queen's touchdown. Ron Stewart, the Gaels' speedy little half-back, went across two plays later for the first of two touchdowns.

It was 6-5 for Queen's at the half, but the Gaels added to that margin midway through the third quarter when Ron Stewart crashed off tackle from the two-yard line. Schneider converted. Stewart's touchdown capped a Gael march from the Western 20, where Al Kocman had recovered Delahay's fumble.

Minutes later the Gaels went across for the third time, with Kocman lugging the ball over centre from the two-yard stripe. A series of end sweeps by Gael backfielders brought the ball deep into the Western zone and Wally Mellor calling the signals for the Gaels made no mistake.

The win climaxed a general Alumni reunion being held here this week-end and made the Gaels' odds-on favorites to beat the McGill Redmen here next Saturday afternoon.

McGill Bests Blues Wins Rugger Title

The Varsity rugger Blues must have felt a little discouraged late Friday afternoon. After McGill beating them at Montreal by a single unconverted try, the same team had rubbed it in by coming down to Varsity Stadium and defeating them by no more than a convert. The final score of five to three for the Redmen is equivalent to a score in Canadian football of six to five — and it must have hurt.

Both the game and the conditions under which it was played could hardly have been more discouraging for the home team. After their scrum had been pushed off the ball most of the time at Montreal, Blues tried to change the situation on Friday by picking the heaviest forward line they could muster. The tactics should have worked, but then the rains came! With the first half played in a downpour that left the field like a swamp, the lighter McGill men were able to keep moving while Blues floundered.

After a scoreless first half, it looked as though Blues were finally managing to keep together in controlling the slippery ball. A concerted forward rush with the ball at their feet 15 minutes after half-time brought their try, Anderson diving on the ball as it bounced loose in the visitors' end zone. The convert from an oblique angle failed.

McGill, attacking strongly from then on, connected shortly after a Varsity kick went astray and cannoned off an attacker, who caught up with the ball and went over with it almost between the posts. Jackson made the other two points with the convert, adding a fine place-kick to his other achievements for McGill.

The game on the whole was patchy, but considering weather conditions this was hardly surprising. When Blues managed to get rolling with the ball at their feet, they gained considerable ground, and certainly had it all over McGill in the loose scrums. It was significant that Anderson of the Blues, the most outstanding player on the field, was also one of the lightest.

The three, on the other hand,

Varsity Titlists McGill Beaten

The University of Toronto senior soccer team won the Toronto and District Soccer Association Cup last Saturday morning by virtue of a 3-2 victory over McGill. The Blues beat the Redmen 3-1 in Montreal last week, and the two wins give Toronto the Eastern Intercollegiate title.

Saturday's game was possibly one of the best seen on the Toronto campus in years. McGill put up a dogged fight, but were not quite good enough for the Blues. Jose Atucha struck for the first Varsity goal in the first half, but McGill tied it up as the Blues scored on themselves just before the half.

Webb and Griffiths scored for Toronto in the second stanza, and then the Redmen got one more by Fitwake in the last ten minutes of the game.

John Hubicki, of the Varsity eleven was the outstanding player on the field, but was ably assisted by Rod Green, and Brain King.

Atucha, Green, and King scored for the Seniors, while Courtice provided the only answer for OAC. For the Intermediates, Wood and Ross scored once each, while Werry scored twice. Layne duplicated Werry's feat with two for the Aggies, while Osborne, Perry, and Weir added one each.

On Tuesday the Seniors and Intermediates travel to Hamilton for two league games with McMaster University. The Intermediates are now tied for the lead in their league with OAC, while the Seniors are well out in front of theirs. The buses for McMaster will leave Hart House at 12:30.

SPS Goes To Air Defeating Forestry

Turning on an aerial offensive that paid off against a determined bunch of Foresters; the SPS Juniors came up with a 12-5 victory on Friday to gain a second place tie with Dentistry in Group II.

The Woodsmen appeared capable of holding the Engineers at nearly all stages of the game, but flagged twice to allow the Skulemen to break into the scoring column.

The first major came minutes after the opening kick-off when a series of passes left SPS deep in Forestry territory. After two cracks at the line, Smith finally went over centre for the touchdown. The attempted convert was blocked.

The other Skule major came in the third quarter when quarterback Doug Kearney cut loose with a long pass to Lorne Rosebrough who galloped thirty yards to make it 10-0. Patterson booted the extra point.

A partially blocked kick in the fourth quarter, the result of a sudden burst of drive from the Green and White line, led to the Woodsmen's lone score. Fine running by Kurt Sprague and Don Lowman brought the ball to the Skule fifteen, and Sprague bulled his way across the goal line on the next play. The convert attempt was wide.

Skule's other point came from a rouse conceded by Forestry after Lefty Martin had attempted a field goal.

The Woodsmen seemed to have the advantage on the ground but a weak pass defence spelled doom for their attack. Led by Don Harroft, the Forestry backfield showed much improvement over their last game, and hard running by Lowman and Sprague should have given them a win.

Jordy Johnson and Ab Moyer sparked a line that made the Engineers look sick for over half the afternoon.

But Skule's excellent ends, Nobby Clarke and Lorne Rosebrough played a hard tackling game, and along with the pass attack helped to turn the tide for the Blue and Gold.

Martin, Park, and Sid Shaeter were best on the Skule line, while Borthwick and Stewart led the backfield.

John MacClelland's passing was not accurate enough for the tired Forestry backs, who appeared to be lacking in condition although not in spirit.

Still winless after two outings, the Woodsmen will have to win both their remaining games with the powerful St. Mike's and Trinity squads, to retain a chance of playoff competition.

Vic, St. Mikes, POT and PHE In Women's Softball Finals

The regular women's softball league finished up Friday to pave the way for the finals which are being held all this week.

As far as league standings are concerned, Vic firsts ended up on top of league 1. Saint Mikes won the second with POT taking honors in the third. Second place goes to PHE 3 and UC in the first, PHE 2 in the second and PHE 1 in the third. That could possibly give the Physeders one-hundred per cent second place.

UC and PHE have tied for second spot in the third league and will play off this afternoon to decide the final standing. Quarter finals are scheduled for today with Saint Mikes playing second place PHE 1 in league one. Second place PHE 2 will battle first place POT in league three.

In the semi finals, beginning Tuesday, Vic firsts will play the winner of Monday's Saint Mikes game. The winner of the PHE 3 game will face the winner of Monday's POT event.

The finals will begin Wednesday, the winner being the squad who takes the best out of three

Here are the latest gleanings from University papers from across Canada and the United States.

Kansas.—Kansas university students have come up with an idea to rid themselves of various faculty and staff members — just auction them off. The university's chancellor and eight others will be offered up for sale as part of the Faculty Follies. No one seems to know how long the bargains are guaranteed good.

Minnesota.—Nick Odemus, St. Bernard dog entered in the "dean for the day" contest, was leading the field of twenty candidates. Nick also came in in third place in the absent-minded professor contest.

Ryersonian.—"Pigs is Pigh" — An editor received a story about the theft of 2,025 pigs from one farmer. Curious about the large number, he called the farmer to verify the story. "Are you the farmer whose pigs were stolen?" he began.

"Yeth, I thure am," replied the farmer.

The editor thanked him and hung up the phone. Then he turned to his typewriter and rewrote the story about the theft of two sows and 25 pigs.

Any one elth heard any good thtoriesh?

Ubysey.—Almost six thousand students are registered at UBC this year, with women outnumbered three to one by the male population. If any of the men don't like the present odds, tell them to come on down to Toronto, where the ration is half and half. We'd love to have them.

Alberta.—If anyone complains modern art gives them a "pain in the neck" there's a very good reason. Prof. Glyde, head of the department of fine arts, admitted that Gordon Wheeler's painting, "Abstract Composita" has been hanging upside down in the Arts building for two weeks. However, since no one had noticed, he concluded that it didn't really matter.

Perhaps the versatility of the artist is proven by the fact that his painting looks equally good from any angle.

Story of Baha'i Told

The story of the Baha'i World Faith was told by Miss Catherine Heward in a talk to the Baha'i student group entitled "Mankind's Greatest Gift".

Miss Heward said the same forces which were dissolving whole sections of contemporary society were at the same time building up a new world order. She said man must be brought to the side of constructive action, reason, brotherhood and love of humanity if the human race is to survive.

The growth of the faith was described by Miss Heward from the 19th century, when twenty thousand believers died under torture in Iran, to the present day.

In the discussion which followed the Curator of Canadiana, Royal Ontario Museum, Mr. Spindlove said the Baha'is view religion as a recurring springtime, one not displacing the others, but each renewing life once again.

Last Of The Cavalier

The Editor,
The Varsity.

O my God, what have I done? My few observations on the species Coed seem to have started a veritable avalanche of controversy. Coeds are uneasily surveying each other trying to assess the other's degree of chastity; numbers of sweet demure girls suddenly become trooping suffragettes with the cry, "hang, draw, and quarter the cavalier of the streets", impressionable freshettes examine their con-sciences like nuns about to take their final vows, while administering angels of mercy to be patronizingly psychanalize the Cavalier's byronic character, and one humourless male from St. Mike's comes to the defense of this harem with a display of abuse that makes me wonder if I shouldn't attempt a critique of the lamentable state of the campus male!

My profound apologies everyone. But my impression remains the same however. You see I have had the misfortune to have studied at three different universities and I have observed in all of them the same dimly recurring pattern in the lives of the Coeds. And I've become irrevocably disillusioned — but this is actually quite silly when you come to think of it because it's just this damned "mother image" that tortures the average man so. No matter how much of a routine of conduct he himself may be, he still is bothered by seeing all these sweet doll-like things so indiscriminately liberal with the sweets of their gender!

To the "disgusted, respectable female" may I say that my letter more or less described the pattern of the coed's existence but each one of them still has the choice of conforming to it or not, and secondly, I should advise your never taking anything you read in the press seriously!

Of course I am aware that there are all sorts of exceptions; one of them, I suspect, is Miss Shirley Stephenson whose letter was perhaps the kindest and

Freedom Of Thought In Christianity Stressed By Moore At SCM Meeting

"For the sake of truth, there must be freedom of thought and speculative inquiry." This principle was stated by Dr. A. B. B. Moore, President and Vice-Chancellor of Victoria College, in his sermon at the first chapel service sponsored by the Student Christian Movement last night. He spoke on the subject, "Faith and Freedom of Thought."

Dr. Moore pointed out first that there is unavoidable tension between university education and Religion. "How close we come to solving this tension will show the extent to which we have brought to bear Christian principles," he said. He proposed to answer the question, "If a person wants to retain his Christian faith, is it possible for him to have freedom of thought?" He maintained community, and any limitation would "strike at the heart of the university purpose."

However, he said, sometimes such limitations are internal dogma. "Commitment is inherent in the very nature of self." Commitments influence all our thinking, and they are necessary to life. The real question, Dr. Moore explained, is "what sort of commitments are to direct one's thinking."

If we accept the commitment of Christianity, we are not obligated to believe a set of ideas "expressed in the thought forms of sciences which no longer believe" ... not the terminology of the creed, but to a belief in Christ. Since there has never been any expression of what He stood for that is completely satisfactory and conclusive, freedom of thought is necessary to strive for an understanding of Christ. Dr. Moore observed that such mental exercise is most powerful where there is freedom. "To continue to grow in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, one must accept the responsibility of thought."

Former Asst. Registrar Dies At Saturday's Game

Former Assistant Registrar of the University of Toronto, A. T. Laidlaw, died on Saturday at the Varsity-McGill football game. Mr. Laidlaw was also Secretary of the Faculty of Arts.

Mr. Laidlaw attended the game with an old friend, Dr. Bert Hardy, and he suffered a heart seizure early in game. Mrs. Laidlaw was phoned in an effort to contact his son, but Mr. Laidlaw died on the way to the hospital.

Mr. W. D. Foulds, present Assistant Registrar and Secretary of the Faculty of Arts, commented: "I owe a great deal to Mr. Laidlaw. I went into the Office just after the war, and took his place when he retired in 1951. I am very grateful for his training."

Mr. Foulds remarked that the fact Mr. Laidlaw's life had been a very happy one made his death somewhat less of a tragedy. He said that the job Mr. Laidlaw had had with the Metropolitan School Board after his retirement from the University had interested him greatly.

He is resting at the F. H. Matthews Funeral Home on Spadina Ave, and the funeral will be held on Tuesday at 1:30 p.m., at Deer Park United Church.

UBC Exposes Discrimination In Sororities

Vancouver (CUP) Non-Caucasian girls are struck off a list of names used by Pan-Hellenic, women's organizations at UBC to issue invitations to coeds asking them to join sororities. This was admitted recently by Nancy Underhill president of Pan-Hellenic, when confronted with evidence gathered by the Ubysey. Pan-Hellenic publicity chairman gave a small budget for rushing" as an explanation for not mailing the booklets to everyone.

Dean of Women M. Mawdsley said she would take no action on charges of racial discrimination levelled against Pan-Hellenic Society. She declared that no discrimination exists, and that she had "no control" over sororities. She felt that Asiatic girls did not receive rushing brochures solely because Pan Hell did not consider they would be interested in rushing.

Financial Muscle Men

Next time you're thumbing through back issues of the National Geographic, you may run across pictures of the muscle-building executives of the Bank of Iran. It's enough to make Canadian bankers ashamed of themselves. Iranian bankers believe in physical as well as fiscal soundness. At their zur kheneh or House of Strength, they meet regularly, dressed in embroidered leather breeches to drill with clubs, lift heavy wooden shields, and toy with iron chains. They begin by touching the ground and shouting "Ya, Ali!" While a spiritual leader beats cadence and recites Persian verse, the banker-athletes do push-ups.

If any Royal Bank manager wants to build up his muscles, that's his business. However, he's got to do it in his spare time because during office hours he devotes every minute to keeping clients happy. If you'd care to join the happy band of satisfied Royal Bank customers, there are four branches nearby, all keen to add more Varsity names to the books. You'll find them at Yonge & Bloor, Yonge & College, Harbord & Spadina, and Spadina & College. The Royal Bank of Canada.

the work of the Skulemen in the flooded area entitled them to have their Engineering Society privileges restored, and that he would appeal to University President Sidney Smith on their behalf.

These were the reactions of the officials concerned with Operation Engineer, as it drew to a close yesterday. Under the guidance of Neil Irwin and Bosko Loncarevic, the Operation has supplied 1100 students to the work of flood relief and clearance.

Since October 20th, the Skulemen have been going in groups of fifty and 100 to the disaster scene, for an all-day session of good hard. Operation Engineer became the major source of volunteer relief.

Through the co-operation of the faculty, lectures were cancelled for the workers of the day. The Army supplied transportation and direction, and the Red Cross produced most of the free meals.

The directors promised at the outset to supply men for as long as the demand continued. They stuck to the bargain; the Skulemen were the last of the volunteers to stop their work, and they did so at the request of the officials, who were disbanded their organizations.

Yesterday evening, Operation Engineer died a quiet death. The only comment of its weary director, Neil Irwin, was, "I'm glad it's over."

FLOOD FUND AT $5,000

Winter Weather Beanery Open For Commuters

A Commuters' Lunch Room is operated in the east end of the Debates Room in Hart House, according to Mr. Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden. This service began last week, and will continue through the winter. The overflow from the other lunch rooms is cited as the reason for this manoeuvre.

Students are informed that there are wastebaskets situated in strategic positions in the lunch room, and they are urged to try their skill at the old game of Throw - your - lunchbag - into - the - basket. Sort of a pitch - till - you - hit idea. Otherwise the staff may have to clean up the mess left by some careless slob, and thus hold up the use of the room, McDowell said.

Wallets Rifled By Arena Thief

Over $60 was stolen yesterday morning from the wallets of Vic students attending a hockey practice in Varsity Arena. An unknown thief rifled the wallets of about a dozen students who were trying out for the Vic senior team.

The thief did not touch any change or other valuables in the wallets, but just removed the bills from the pockets of the clothing while the Vic students were practising from 10.00 a.m. to 12.00 on Monday morning.

The clothing which contained the money had been left in the dressing room of the Arena while the players were on the ice. "The dressing room is usually locked," said one of the victims of the robbery, "but had not been this morning."

One student lost $15, another $14, another $13, and other students lost various smaller amounts.

Where Do I Start?

Where do we go from here? A number of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering is obviously puzzled by the wilderness of debris left by Hurricane Hazel. These Skulemen were helping the Ontario Hurricane Relief at Woodbridge.

Charge Outside Talent Being Utilized For UC-St. Michael's Musical Comedy

Grapevine charges that the University College — St. Michael's musical, "Brigadoon", will import professional talent which raises us to the level of professionals.

"The directors of Brigadoon are definitely not using professional talent," said Griesdorf, Producer of the musical.

"I don't know where the idea came from," continued Griesdorf. "The explanation may be that many on the cast have worked professionally at some time — myself included."

"However," commented Griesdorf with a smile, "I hardly think that raises us to the level of professionals."

The problem might also be that some of the cast were "from slightly off-campus." In cases where the position could not be adequately filled by either St. Michael's or U.C., applicants from other colleges were accepted, he said.

"There is definitely no pay-

Fund Sky-Rockets As Money Pours In

Total contributions to the University's flood relief fund have sky-rocketed to the $4,700-mark, it was announced yesterday by E. A. MacDonald, the secretary-treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council.

Donations are still being accepted by SAC, Mr. MacDonald said.

The campaign was described as the biggest ever staged in the university's history. The near $5,000 in contributions was more than double that disbursed by students for the Holland and England floods of two years ago.

The big five-band Blue and White Society dance Saturday night directed a whopping $900 into the Flood relief pot. Over 1,200 couples squeezed into a handful of Hart House rooms for the giant Homecoming affair.

Other big single contributions to the Flood Relief Fund were the $1,532.89 donated by students in a special tag day and $1057.72 turned over to the fund by Engineering students. The Engineering students raised the $1000-odd in a one-week drive.

Speaking of the drive yesterday, Mr. MacDonald spoke of "the tremendous effort" of the students and that he hoped realization of the devastating effect of the flood would inspire still more students to give "to this very worthy cause".

Damage estimated by sensationalists to be brushing $100,000,000 was created in the north-western fringe of Toronto about two weeks ago when Hurricane Hazel ripped through the area after traversing across south-eastern U.S.

Engineering and other students from the University took valuable hours off from classes to help with rehabilitating the over 3,000 families rendered homeless in the catastrophe.

The flood campaign was authorized by University President Smith upon suggestion of Mr. MacDonald.

Manitoba Installs Its New President

Dr. Hugh Saunderson was formally installed as President of the University of Manitoba at an official ceremony last week.

More than a thousand people, including special guest representatives from many Canadian and American universities, were present for the occasion. Dr. Victor Sifton, Chancellor of the University of Manitoba, installed Dr. Saunderson as Vice-Chancellor and President.

In his inauguration address, Dr. Saunderson said that: "Man's aim, besides earning a living, is to have a sound body, mind, and character . . . which is a result . . . of a free type of education . . . in a free country."

The Decay of Civilization

By BILL SMYTH

Have you ever met Marcus Aurelius? Or the little old lady that lives on Wilcocks St? Marcus Aurelius is orange and white with a bit of black and is a cat. The little old lady, who prefers to remain anonymous, looks after Marcus Aurelius, who — strangely enough — is a her-type cat.

From various conversations with the little old lady we have managed to gather that she is a U of T graduate — 1896 or so. She taught Latin in high school for ages, but is now living in quiet retirement, looking after her cat and talking to the new generations of students.

The only trial in her life is that Marcus is usually lost. She has a great deal of SA (for cats) and seems to spend her time entertaining them, which means that

Mrs. Marcus (as she is affectionately called by the students in the neighbourhood) must spend a great deal of her time looking for the wanderer. But this is alright too, because she meets more students that way.

The last time we talked to Mrs. M. was in exam time last year. We met her on the street, and she said: "Have you seen Marcus? She's an orange cat . . ." And we stopped to talk to her, and she told us to study hard, and gave us some tips for our physics exam . . . and we passed. Mrs. M. didn't seem to like some of us too much because we used to play with a baseball (rather wildly) in the yard, occasionally putting Marcus Aurelius in imminent peril. But she forgave those who talked to her, even if they weren't taking classics.

But the social life of Mrs. M. is much broader than this picture implies. She can often be seen in a local coffee shop discussing things romantic with the elderly gentlemen of Wilcocks street, who are also — no doubt — U of T graduates. They sit tranquilly amid the din and confusion, with the dignity of by-gone days.

We haven't seen Mrs. Marcus this year yet; she wouldn't recognize us if we had, probably. Her life is full enough that her acquaintances are soon forgotten if not immediately renewed. But she is still with us, surely, because her cat still can be seen in the alleys and laneways, parading her feminine charms, and chasing off her rivals.

Sic regnat gloria mundi.

All Together Now!

Engineering the hard way! These hard-working Skulemen flounder knee-deep in the mud as they move a log in the grim search for bodies left by Hurricane Hazel. The operation closed on Sunday.

STEVENS AT VIC

A trip around the Caribbean, through Mexico and the British West Indies provided Dorothy Stevens R.C.A., O.S.A. with the inspiration for most of the paintings visible in the Vic alumni hall this week.

Dorothy Stevens is by far the most successful as a portrait painter. Her rather standard technique is able to give the appearance at least of sensitivity. The portrait of Austin Willis of the CBC is one of the most successful. In her studies of native types the painter seems fascinated by the effects of cold light on the warm dark skin, effects sometimes a little spectacular.

Much less impressive are her landscapes. The best of them look like on-the-spot sketches, with lots of canvass board showing through. The worst are muddy, or apparently naive in color, rather formless in shape.

About this work there is a feeling of things taken pretty much as they are. Although she seems to be very much in control of her medium, (with certain disturbing exceptions like Granada), Dorothy Stevens in my opinion has nothing exciting to offer us in the use of color or form and nothing very important to express.

The show hangs in the Vic alumni hall, newly decorated in tasteful warm greys under the advice of a prominent Toronto collector of fine paintings. When the main building at Victoria College was rewired during the summer, the three inadequate hanging globes were replaced with modern fluorescent lighting. The result is that the once cave-like hall is now an excellent place to hang pictures and a very pleasant place to be.

ART

The Scandinavian show continues at the Royal Ontario Museum until Nov. 12. Well worth seeing, even if you're not planning on setting up house.

The Dorothy Stevens exhibit is in the Alumni Hall at Vic.

DRAMA

At the Crest theatre Charley's Aunt goes into its second week, one of the longest running shows in town. Eric House in the title role is a very successful impersonator.

The Royal Alexandra has dropped to the Art, Music or Drama? category this week, with the Dorsey Bros. and their little show. If Dorsey is here can Caine Mutiny be far behind?

MUSIC

Wednesday night the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir and the TSO perform Brahms' Requiem and two works by Vaughan Williams. Lois Marshal will sing as well the three songs of Godfrey Ride-out that were chosen for the all Canadian program which Toscanini conducted. Oh yes, Sir Ernest MacMillan conducting.

Elisabeth Scharkopf, soprano, will sing Thursday night in the Eaton Auditorium Series.

Halina Bilashevsky, violinist will be playing in the Hart House Wednesday at five o'clock.

MOVIES

Most of the shows in town are sticking around for a while. Sheas is still showing The Caine Mutiny and the Studio is still showing Stars of the Russian Ballet. Music-comedies Brigadoon and Women's World on at Loew's and Odeon Toronto respectively. An old and new Gable and Turner in Betrayed at the uptown. It seems we are to be favored with our first sight of "Vista Vision" in White Christmas. The yule season is opening even earlier this year.

BOOKS

It is book week. And who uses more books than students? And what book sells better than a prescribed textbook? And what are some of the highest priced books on publishers lists? And where do publishers make up for other unsuccessful books? Oh, well. Happy book week to you. May you all buy more, better, cheaper books.

Several Canadian books of interest are appearing. Ethel Wilson has written another novel called Swamp Angel, a story of escape from mediocrity. Ditto for Robertson Davies. His is called Leaven of Malice. Hugh MacLennan has got to the essay. The second book on Stratford stage, entitled Thirty and Three, entitled Twice Have the Trumpets Sounded is due soon. Clarke Irwin is also publishing a "New Stratford Shakespeare" under the editorship of Guthrie and Harrison, with the accent on stage production.

Book Exchange UCLA To Asia

A book exchange plan will soon get underway with Indonesian students, it is hoped, under the auspices of several University of California U.C.L.A. students who visited Indonesia last year. A campaign for funds to support the project will be started soon in Berkeley.

Indonesian students are mostly in need of textbooks of a technical nature. Some of these books will be distributed directly, while others will be copied at a mimeographing centre recently set up by the World University Service.

A list of needed books is now being compiled by Indonesian students. When they receive the list, the California student group will embark upon an intensive book campaign, designed to obtain large quantities of books with a minimum expenditure.

Indonesian students plan to reciprocate by sending a selection of books, depicting significant facets of Indonesian culture.

One of the problems in Indonesia has been the change from Dutch to Indonesian which came with Indonesia's independence. As a result, Indonesian students are sorely in need of books at all grade levels.

News of the week in many college papers were their annual Homecoming festivities.

Baton Rouge, La.—Before last Saturday's football game, the homecoming Queen and Maids of Honour were escorted into the University of Louisiana's stadium. Trophies for Homecoming decorations were presented to winning groups in six categories.

Kingston, Ex-Cadets of RMC who descended on the College for Ex-Cadet week-end were treated Friday night to a tour of the College. Saturday's annual meeting of the RMC club was followed by the annual RMC-Queen's Intermediate game, which RMC won. Saturday night, an Ex-Cadet banquet, and Sunday, a church parade.

Minneapolis, Minn.— This year's Homecoming week-end was climaxed by the announcement (after five days of mystery) of the campus queen, and by the annual Varsity show.

Petersburg, Va.— The Annual Homecoming float parade started out last Saturday before the football game. 42 floats and float elements, and a 90-piece college band were featured. The Homecoming queen and her two attendants, here at Virginia State College, are all negro.

Denton, Tex.— North Texas State College had scheduled a pop rally, bonfire, two stage shows, a giant parade, the annual football game, and several dances, for its returning graduates a week ago Saturday. Theme of the Homecoming float parade was "The Door is Open". Newest feature of the week-end was a baby-sitting service for future North Texas graduates during the game.

And finally, from Duke University, comes news that thousands of alumni and guests were invited for Homecoming, October 16. An uninvited guest was Hurricane Hazel.

U.S. Students On Campus For Exchange Week-End

A group of American students from St. John Fisher College visited the Toronto Campus last week-end.

As guests of St. Michael's College, the students from Rochester, N.Y., took part in a literary - dramatic exchange week-end. The week-end was patterned on a similar one which took place last year with Assumption University of Windsor.

The John Fisher students were somewhat overwhelmed with the University and its campus; their own college is only four years old, and still very much in the stage of development.

Already the total enrollment of John Fisher College has passed 450, and is expected to increase indefinitely in the next few years. As yet no residence facilities are provided.

Along with six students from John Fisher (which is a strictly masculine establishment) were two girls from Nazareth College, their feminine neighbour.

The visitors presented selections from Oedipus Rex, and St. Michael's produced The Happy Journey, at the usual Music and Drama gathering on Sunday Evening.

Aside from this, the Americans acquired their first taste of rugby at the Blues - McGill game, and a passing acquaintance with the University, climaxed by a tour of Hart House and tea with the Warden.

Julian Huxley To Stop Over In Toronto

British scientist-author Julian Huxley arrives in Toronto today for a brief stop-off on an extended lecture tour across major cities in Canada and the U.S.

Huxley will address a meeting tonight in Unitarian church at Avenue Road and St. Clair Ave.

"All major advances in human evolution have come with the expansion of knowledge," Huxley told in a lecture recently in Berkeley, Cal. He said people today must encourage creative diversity and resist totalitarianism in every way if we want to achieve a progressive society.

Surveying the three principal phases of the great scientific revolution of the past 300 years — the Newtonian, Darwinian, and the present social revolution — the lecturer emphasized the latter as being the first period in which we have available a reasonably accurate picture of the relation of man and nature.

Academic Amoeba

A poll conducted by Varsity staffers has revealed even more interesting facts than the one conducted last week.

This time the topic was more serious and the significance of the replies more revealing.

On the question, "Is student government a right or a privilege?" many students had no opinion at all.

The major proportion felt that it was definitely a privilege which we must treat with respect.

It is interesting to note that many students are satisfied to be treated as little children by their great white father, the administration of the university. Practically no one considered student government an absolute right.

It is apparent that our social customs have succeeded in instilling into its youthful products an unhealthy awe of university officials and the administration.

It is disheartening to see them accept so readily the imposition on their rights.

What has clearly happened is that the university has abrogated unto itself the functions of the church, the home and the social club. When a student enters university, they say, in effect, "Give us four years of your time and we will turn out an educated well-rounded personality."

What they probably do not see, and what the student definitely does not see, is that the university is not turning out personalities at all but highly polished automatons who will slip unresisting into society's prescribed channel.

In addition, this attitude turns student government into a game played by the students in practice for their roles in society.

Since the game is without meaning in terms of real existence, and since it is predicted upon a belief in the infallibility of the university, and since it is regarded universally as of consequence it might be well to relegate it to the scrap-heap.

The result of such an action would leave us with one of two courses. We might develop a government which was founded on fact, rather than illusion or we might sink uncomfortably into the slough of lethargy and let the university continue to play mumblety-peg with us all.

However, as long as the university is trying to spread itself, like an amoeba through all the spheres of our lives, let us not be duped into thinking that we are receiving an education when in point of fact we are being trained for a society based on premises which will be dead before we graduate.

our readers write:

Idealistic Socialists

The Editors,
The Varsity.

In the latest issue of the "Campus Comment" Mr. Robert Saunders was "exposed as the man who attempted to clean up the campus by putting garbage where it belongs."

Admittedly each person is fully justified in a free country to advocate his views as best he can. This however does not mean that he is entitled to expect the public to co-operate fully, particularly when the vast majority of the public feels that the views expressed are harmful, and slanted in an undesirable direction. I am sure Mr. Saunders categorizes the Campus Comment, not unjustifiably, among these detrimental publications.

The sheet is given free of charge to the student body, and members of that body are entitled to do what they please with this generous gift. If the editors of the Comment feel that the garbage can is too ignominious a fate for the yellow sheet, they may either discontinue their efforts, or charge the readers for each copy. If Mr. Saunders would then take a number of copies without paying for them, his action could be compared to the "petty thievery" of "Globe and Mail". As the case is, Mr. Saunders is legally entitled to sue the Comment for libel.

Furthermore, the Comment periodically tries to divorce democratic socialism from communism. Admittedly the two movements are not identical, although the former is exploited by the latter in the West. For communists are self-seeking, unscrupulous people, who use the dreaming, idealistic democratic socialists to sow dissension among us. Naturally they seek to exterminate the democratic socialists as soon as they grab power, because under communist rule socialists, who are recognized to be too impractical to be given power, are soon disillusioned, and there are no greater enemies of the left than the disillusioned leftists.

It is rather pitiful to find so many ardent and sincere supporters of the left on the campus level, who are being used whether consciously or not, by the encroaching menace, communism. It is time to realize that democratic socialism is not, and can never be a serious threat to capitalism, as long as their ideals are impractical, and impracticable.

In closing, I should like to salute Mr. Saunders, and commend him for his worthwhile work.

Carabin Defended

The Editor,
The Varsity.

I should like to reply on behalf of the Carabin Committee to the moderate but provocative letter which appeared in yesterday's Varsity.

I deny, to begin with, his contention that Carabin is a week end for Campus politicians. The Committee seeks first students from the professional faculties and language students. If politicians appear it is probably because of their contribution to undergraduate life. Contributions to any phase of Campus life are viewed in the same light as student government and related fields. The relevant facts are on the application form, and the Committee, with the above considerations in mind can and does choose wisely.

Neither does his second argument square with the facts. The Carabin weekend is not a party with a "Dash" of serious thought. Two afternoons and an evening out of three days are devoted to the problems of a bi-cultural nation. Two mornings are for the inspection of our city and University and one for the public Worship of God. In addition since the students are in each others close company from Thursday night to Sunday afternoon, it is impossible not to learn a great deal about the thought and life of ones companion.

I therefore cannot agree that Carabin is a waste of time and money. On the contrary if E.A.C. did nothing but Carabin the Commission would have earned its keep. G. Johnston, IV Vic.

The Editor,

Heigh, ho, hee,
And a good long cheer
For the Vars-i-tee...
(And you can throw in a beer)

And specifically congratulations are due to Nan Donnell for presenting the first respectable AM&D review to be seen in the U of T rag (mop?) this semester, in her bit on "Charley's Aunt" at the Crest. It was actually possible to read her morsel from stem to stern without so much as a single yawn... which must be something of a record as far as the Varsity AM&D department is concerned.

So batten down the hatches, Clyde, and let's have a few more of those.

By the way, Mr. Editor, "have you ever...?"

RIGHT OR PRIVILEGE?

Privilege Still

Student government is still a privilege rather than a right, but it is a privilege that involves many duties. If the privilege is not abused, it could become a right. At the university level there should certainly be a strong enough sense of responsibility among students to justify the continuance of this privilege. If there is insufficient interest or ability within the student body, then the University is justified in withdrawing the privilege and taking means to ensure that it never becomes a right.

Responsibility

If student government is made a right, then there must necessarily be a responsibility corresponding to that right. Otherwise, self-government is a privilege extended by those who are willing to take the responsibility upon themselves.

Al Burt, Grad. Studies.

Confined

It is a privilege because the purpose of students in coming to a university is to learn from those more wise and experienced than they, therefore it is an institution which should be confined to social activities and kept in its operation under the strict control of University authority.

Elizabeth Child, IV Trinity.

Abused?

By tradition, university government was in the hands of the faculty — student government is a recent privilege accorded to students, and if abused would be withdrawn.

Pam De Bulnes, IV Trinity.

Obviously

Student government must be a privilege, because obviously it can be withdrawn.

Dee Lloyd, Vic.

Principle

"In principle, I think everyone should have the right to govern themselves. But, because they haven't made full use of their right, it is now more of a privilege.

Wendy Day III UC

Myth

It's a myth.

Peter Grant, I Meds.

Snobs

It's a privilege for engineers and a right for us.

Tini Gray, III Trinity

Control

"Student government started out as a privilege. Now students seem to consider it a right, the faculty considers it a privilege. As long as the faculty has any control over the student body, student government will be a privilege.

Charles Rogers I UC

FORUM

The Question

Contrary to popular opinion last week's poll on the AM&D page was not the last for this year.

Herewith we present a cross-section of opinion on the question, "Is student government a right or a privilege?"

As representative a cross-section as possible was interviewed. However, this does not preclude any further discussion of this problem in the "our readers write" columns of the Varsity.

It is our intention to continue this policy of conducting polls on subjects which we feel are timely and which have direct application to the life of the student.

If there are subjects of this nature on which any student is interested in furthering discussion the editor would be pleased to hear of them.

One interesting feature of this particular poll was the large number of people who had no opinion to express. It is hard to understand such a condition existing on a university campus.

Not Yet

Under the University Act it appears to be a privilege. It should be established as a right, but has not been as yet.

Norm Chalmers, III Law.

Autonomy?

Student government in any university is a comparatively recent innovation. In the University of Toronto Act, 1947, it is referred to as self-government. This term has many possible connotations, and therefore generalization is impossible. Self-government implies control of all spheres of student government. This would include control of financial affairs, which is fundamental to any self-governing body, while in most English universities, student unions do enjoy complete financial autonomy, the SAC does not, since any fee raise subject to the approval of the Board of Governors.

Thus, it is clear that the Administration has not granted student government as a "Right", and should not be officially referred to as such. Student government on this campus is rather a "Privilege", granted by the Administration. Its continuance is dependent on the successful assumption of certain responsibilities, to be judged by the grantor of this privilege.

Doug Hamlin, IV Vic.

Middle Ages

If you go back to the Middle Ages, you will see that universities were a union of faculty and students, joined together in a mutual agreement. Later, each group strove for the upper hand. In this university, it is obviously the faculty who have won out.

John Burbidge, II Vic.

Preparation

Student government is a right. Graduation from high school implies that society, through its educational system, has prepared the youth of the nation for the responsibilities of citizenship. To say that student government is a privilege, is to say that society has failed in this fundamental task.

Carolyn Wood, IV Trinity

Young Adults

Student government is a right, like self-government. If you agree that government is for adults, and students are young adults, it is obviously their right.

John Douglas, II Vic.

Trade Union

"Just as there are trade and labour unions to give the individual worker the working conditions and salary he desires, so should the students have the right to a form of government to make their working conditions and lack of salary satisfactory".

Jane Emerson, I Pre-Med

Tradition

"It certainly is a part of university training for the students to govern themselves in some things, in that we have an obligation toward our country now and after graduation. Thus, if we are to take part in a democracy now and certainly when we enter business, it is only fitting that we govern ourselves democratically while we are in the university. Thus, I say that self-government is our right, just as is trial by our peers, lawfully and traditionally.

Ron Adams, II UC.

music appreciation

I Was A Reviewer For The G.F.J.

By HUGH McKELLAR

Judging from the page in last Thursday's Varsity, some people are none too happy about the type of music reviews presented in this G.F.J. (J. stands for journal: for the rest, do you think Great Family or God-For-saken is more appropriate?) I propose to add fuel to the flame by contributing a review of a concert I attended in another city over the week-end, and readers will soon see for themselves how infinitely more interesting this way of describing a performance could become in expert hands like those of the regular Varsity critics. Here goes.

The concert was presented for a very select group of music-lovers, who form a sort of Society for the Abolition of Romantic Music. Their first rule is that no work by a 19th-century composer may profane their concert-hall; their second, that music is cultural rather than entertaining, so that it is a real crime to play truly melodious selections. Their finicky musical palates demand large doses of Bach, pre-Bach, and the ghastlier of modern composers; so it goes without saying that they have to rely on generous patronage for their support. The general public could never be persuaded to pay for such evenings of refined torture as they provide. Nevertheless, whoever desires to be considered Anybody Musically in that city has to put in an appearance at their concerts, and shudder as little as possible. If you can put up with their puristic interpretations, including their performances of old instruments like the viola da gamba and clavichord, you get a kind of Certificate of Culture. Therefore, I went to their miserable concert. Comprenez-vous? (I think a critic should always state his motives frankly.)

The first number was a violin solo, accompanied by a very small, nervous pianist. He played loud enough to keep the audience awake, however, and when the violinist finally stopped, they were so glad they applauded lustily. In fact they clapped so much that both artists took two bows, and were just about ready to assault their defenceless instruments again, when the little page-turner decided to take a bow on her own account. Since she was wearing a daringly décolleté gown, she got more applause than both players, who had enough sense to retire backstage muttering.

The next group included three songs by a soprano who happen-to be a Millionaire and a patroness of the society. Now, while English was considered a language quite good enough for her husband to make his money in, it is not sufficiently classy for her to sing in. She therefore rendered a German lied, a French chanson, and an Italian aria; and not an English word appeared on the program to guide the wretched hearers as to what she might be warbling about. Her performance was spoiled because she and the orchestra had two different ideas of pitch; and since such an exalted person as a Millionaire couldn't possibly sing flat, we must conclude that the orchestra played sharp. There also developed a contest between the singer and two violinists in the front row, who seemed to be determined to drown her if they could. But she held her own magnificently: the harder they sawed, the louder she yelled. And she won out: one of the violinists snapped a string, the other retired from the unequal contest, and the millionaire concluded with a triumphant war whoop of victory, somewhere just below a high C.

I don't know what happened after that, because the next number was an organ solo, a modern French number, and in the first eight bars I was blasted out of my seat, so I went home. But it was a most elegant concert, and I feel I have got enough culture from it to do me for about the next ten years. So there, I have the advantage of being thought a Musical Person without the labour involved in attending many concerts; and I hope this style of reviewing may induce other people to follow my example.

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

It looks like a good winter. That's what they're saying in Varsity Arena as the Hockey Blues prepare for their best assault in years on the Queens Cup. And they're talking the same way in Hart House where an embryo crew of Basketball Blues are shaping themselves into one of the sharpest quintet ever to grace the campus.

And while all this noise is being made about the major winter sports, some twenty feet from the big gym the Varsity wrestlers can be seen five nights a week, building a contending team out of what's left after a hurricane of graduation.

Under the direction of Kirk Whipper and Jack Amos, the Blue grapplers have been working out for several weeks now, taking time off only on Thursday nights for some wrestling education gleaned from a series of films on loan from the University of Michigan. This year the coaches plan to develop a new style of wrestling, emphasizing the natural ability of each individual man. The net result should be some really interesting bouts before the Intercollegiate meet sometime in February.

The backbone of the team is made up of the few remaining wrestlers, among whom is big Harry Robinson, who is currently doing time with the Varsity rugby team. Harry wrestles in the heavyweight class and brings the experience of several years to the team. Also returning is Blue footballer Bobby Waugh who won the 167-pound title last year. Coach Whipper hopes to move Bobby up to the 177-pound division, and his place may be taken by Bill Bush, last year's 157-pound champion. Murray Berman in the 123-pound class, and Jack McOaut in the 130-pound division will also be back, each bringing two years of Senior Intercollegiate experience.

Among those new men who should show up well are Roy Smith who wrestled with the Intermediates in the 147-pound class last season, and Don Boynton who showed promise when he was with the team two years ago. Dave Clutchey and Glynn Leyshon, both of whom are at OCE this year, wrestled with Western's Senior Intercollegiate team last season. Leyshon was the champion in the 147-pound class, while Clutchey represented Canada in the 114½-pound division at the British Empire Games last summer.

Several good dual meets with both the senior and intermediate teams participating are planned for the winter, with the first bout being scheduled for December 11 in Montreal against McGill University. Last year the Intermediates grappled with teams from Western and OAC in the Intercollegiate meet. The seniors met teams from Western, OAC, McGill, and Queens in what was one of the best meets ever held on the Toronto campus.

This season the Blues will be out to make a clean sweep of the meet, and recapture the Porter Trophy which they shared with Western last spring. The Intermediates should be in the picture too, with many promising new prospects already turning out to the practices.

From the Blue Room . . . The buses carrying the Senior and Intermediate soccer teams to Hamilton for their games with McMaster today, will leave Toronto at 11.45, not 12.30 as we erroneously said yesterday . . . the Blues' clever end Fred Smale has a broken rib, but it doesn't appear to be bothering him . . . Western Colts' ace halfback, Willie Casanova, plays professional baseball in the New York Yankees' extensive farm system . . . Three former members of the Leafs' farm system, Dave Reid, Paul Knox and Clare Fisher, go together to give the Blues one of the best lines seen in Intercollegiate hockey since the Carabins' big three of Bernie Quesnel, Claude Hotte, and Claude Degenais. They work so well in practice that they could be a permanent arrangement.

Gals' Softball

Physots started out the quarter round of the gals softball finals yesterday at the Stadium with a 5-0 victory over PHE II, despite the snow and icy temperature.

Both teams were scoreless in the first inning. Physed got only one hit — by Dottie Hudson, while Pot gals were retired in order by Ruth Marshall. In the second inning PHE was again held scoreless despite two hits. Pot went ahead by 2 runs scored by Helen Alver and Betty Payette.

Strong defensive plays from pitcher to first, kept Physed again of the score sheet. A hit by Noreen Cossar and a home run off the bat of Helen Alver scored 3 runs for Physots in the third inning.

Physed started fast in the fourth getting 2 gals on base but pitcher Rosalee Marsh retired the next 3 batters in order to end the game 5-0.

Georgia Brock was a stand-out defensively for PHE. Mary Marg O'Neill starred for POT at first base and also running the base paths.

In the other game played yesterday Saint Mikes trounced PHE I 17-8 to enter the semi-finals against Vic.

Selby And Hart Star Skule Scores 33-3 Win U.C. Slowed By Mud

By WALLY SCHMIDA

The Skule machine shifted into high gear again yesterday afternoon and off the assembly line rolled a crushing 33-3 victory over U.C. Only the approaching darkness and a greasy field kept the score that low.

Halfback Ken Selby was the games individual star, counting 13 points on 2 touchdowns and 3 converts, besides piling up a lot of yardage on plays around the end. Marv Larsens pitching and the return of old pro Don Hart to the Skule lineup were other highlights of a rather loosely played game.

U.C. started with a rush, driving from their own 30 yard line to the Engineers 20. A 35 yard pass play from Tolsky to Shoom put the Red in scoring position but Karpinski recovered a fumble to relieve the pressure. Minutes later a high snap sailed over Moultons hands and when he recovered it behind his goal line, Shoom fell on him to score a safety for U.C.

A 35 yard reverse by Lyons and a 25 yard smash through centre by Selby gave S.P.S. its first T.D. In the second quarter Comish and Selby ripped off some long gains. Finally on a third down kick formation Moulton passed to Weaver on the U.C. 10 and he took it over. Near the end of the half Tolsky of U.C. tried a pass which Selby snagged and ran back 25 for his second touchdown.

Chris Wansbrough, a U.C. stand-out, kicked off short to start the second half and recovered the ball on the midfield stripe but the Tigers couldn't get a drive started. Rintoul kicked deep to the Skule 11, and Moffat, a U.C. end, blocked a third down kick. Eastman tackled a Skuleman in the end zone for U.C. last point. Comish scooted for 21 around right end and a Larsen to Russell pass were the 2 touchdown plays for the Blue and Gold in the third quarter. One of the games best moments came when Hart made his debut. From the U.C. 19, Hart faded back and just as he was about to be snowed under, he threw perfectly to Finch in the end zone for the final score.

Except for the first few minutes, it was all Skule. The U.C. club seems to be more disorganized with every game. They are trying to operate from a formation for which they have neither the experience nor the material.

Sopinka Stars For Blues Playing In Left Half Spot

John Sopinka, a 21 year-old crew cut kid from Hamilton, who rolls from the right half-back slot in the Varsity backfield, is another of the essential parts of the Toronto offensive attacks. John stands 5' 11½ and packs 170 pounds into a well-proportioned frame.

John's football craze began in 1947 with Hamilton's Salt Fleet High School Team. He played quarterback for the Juniors from 1947 through 1949 and then he swung into the half position in his senior year. Upon graduating "Sop" caught on with the Hamilton Junior Ti-Cats and was high in the scoring column with four touchdowns in eight games. After a year of Ti-Cat football John attended Queen's University. He played football for the Golden Gaels for one year and then came to Toronto to play with the Baby Blues. "Sop" scored 25 points last year and was one of the main factors in the Baby Blues capture of the Intermediate Championship. John now plays left half for the Blues.

Sopinka is a third year arts student attending Vic, and he hopes to be playing three more years of football, as he aspires to be a lawyer.

The year John played ball for the Ti-Cats he experienced his greatest football thrill. The team went out to Edmonton, and because of the long trip out, weren't given much of a chance to score a victory. Along with "Sop's" five points, Hamilton scored 23 more, and beat a highly touted Edmonton squad 28-1.

John's spare time, of which there is little, is taken up with the chore of co-coaching the undefeated Vic Inter-Faculty football team.

John hopes that the Intercollegiate race narrows down to Queen's and Varsity and that Varsity in the sudden death game beats Queens, so that he can have the last laugh on his former chums, playing for Queens. As John puts it, "When Queens beat us two weeks ago, Kochman and the rest of the fellows I know from Queens really gave me the raspberry. Boy, I hope we knock the hell out of 'em". And so do we.

Varsity End Don Smith Bolsters Blue Defence

Don Smith is one Blue who needs no introduction. This year he has been chosen co-captain because of his character and his ability to play. One of the factors that makes Don popular is the spirit he generates on and off the field.

Before Don came to Varsity he was a member of the Oakwood C.I. football team through the 1947-49 period. In 1950 Don joined the Cobourg "Galloping Ghosts" as their first string end. Not recognized as a high scorer Don came to Varsity with the reputation of being an excellent blocker and a good defensive end. As it appears now he is almost certain to gain an All star berth for his defensive work.

In 1951, Don entered Varsity and in his freshman year was outstanding as a member of the Baby Blues when they won the Shaw Trophy.

Last year he scored his first and last touchdown of his football career with the Blues. His importance, however, has never been measured by the number of points he scores. Don's importance arises from the fact that as a defensive end he is never deked into the backfield on every play. He has football instinct in that he knows when to rush and when not to rush.

Don is fortunate because, as mainly a defensive end, he can preserve his hands for the professional services he will give as a dentist. He is now in his third dental year.

of this meet. Starting time will be 4.30 p.m.

In 1952, Don's first year with the Blues he suffered his first serious injury, a punctured plural cavity in a Queens' game, that kept him sidelined for the last two games. Fortunately for the Blues Don has not been injured this year, as everyone is counting on him to be one of the assets contributing to the Blues success.

In Soccer today, Sr. Meds. and St. Mikes battled to a scoreless draw, and Architecture blanked the Legal Beagles 1-0 on a goal by centre half Penkak.

In the Lower Gym, S.P.S. II and Meds III played to a 5-5 tie. Montieith of Skule and McKenzie of Meds netted 3 apiece. In other lacrosse action, U.C. II defeated Vic II, 3-0.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

When the softball season got underway this Fall, U.C. announced that they were entering one single solitary team in the league. It seemed a bit odd that the largest college on the campus should not be crowding out the other colleges and faculties in game time. Well, they didn't.

In fact they thought so little about getting into the swing, they defaulted their only hope for a playoff position yesterday afternoon. They gave away to PHE third year, who no doubt are very glad to fill the spot.

What kind of spirit is this? Or don't they care to uphold their college name. Perhaps that's just what they are doing—upholding a name that stands for poor participation!

It's not a very nice way of looking at the matter but it still holds true. Look at PHE, one of the smaller faculties around. They entered three squads. Even Vic put in a couple. And the Meds gals who are pressed enough for time got a team together. And they all finished the season.

Torontonensis—Bigger, Better And Milky-white

...Anyone who can come down to the Torontonensis office and recite the title of our estimable year book ten times, fast will be offered a prize. The 'Nensis Editor, David Wood, did not disclose the nature of the prize, but guaranteed that it would be forthcoming.

Operations for the 1955 year book are about to go into effect. Advance sales — the only means by which the book can be obtained — will begin in two weeks. The price will be the same as last year's — $4.50, and an estimated 1500 copies will be sold.

The most novel feature of the forthcoming issue will be a change in the colour of the cover, from royal blue to "milk-white". Editor Wood hastened to add that the cover will be washable, or will not be milk-white.

"There will be a number of rather striking improvements," said Editor Wood, including the use of a more dynamic introduction, and a more clear and consistent make-up.

Wood stressed the fact, that the staff aims at establishing a good balance between the photos and the prints. "The tendency can be toward too many photos," he said, "And we would like to avoid this trap."

Torontonensis will be published this year for the 52nd time. Publication is anticipated by graduation time. "At the moment," said Wood, "we do not anticipate any difficulties."

Well, it looks as if the finals lie between four squads. The Vic-Saint Mikes game should really be a lulu this afternoon. Both squads are tied for seasonal wins and Saint Mikes chalked up a red hot victory over PHE first year yesterday.

POTs took out another Physed squad to win the semi-final position against the sole remaining group of the PHE trio. The winners of these two games will battle in the playoffs for the best out of three.

Earlier in the year we staked a claim on Vic. But since we've seen this Saint Mikes group in action, the picture has changed considerably. This may be sticking our neck out a bit too far, but we'll take the winner of the Vic game to clean up this year.

What's news at Inco*?

Delivering concrete by blow- pipe

"The Romance of Nickel", a 72-page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

YOU have seen concrete pouring down a trough from a mixer. Can you imagine this heavy, wet mixture being carried by a blast of air through a 6-inch steel pipe—blown up more than 200 feet, blown around corners, along the level or straight down for 1600 feet.

When Inco engineers decided that there would be advantages in using concrete instead of wood as supports in many parts of the Creighton mine they had to find a way to transport the wet concrete from the mixer to the working locations.

A continuous blast of air from the mine's high pressure system is used to carry hundreds of tons of concrete through the intricate mine workings. With new methods such as this, Inco is continually improving the efficiency of its mining operations.

Campus Survey Reveals

Library Delay Unpopular

By JANE EDGAR and MARGERY STERN

"They also serve who only stand and WAIT!" commented one student, expressing the opinion of many students polled yesterday by the Varsity on current library conditions. Over 200 students from various faculties were questioned as to how many times they had used the University of Toronto Library, how they rated the service, and whether they considered that the "difficulties of construction are an adequate excuse for any delays or inconveniences."

About one half of the students had not used the library. Fifty-three percent of those who had, considered the service "poor." Twenty-five percent considered it "adequate," eighteen percent considered it "nil," and three percent termed it "excellent." That conditions can be excused by the construction problems was the opinion of sixty-seven percent, while the remaining thirty-three percent attributed it to other reasons unspecified.

The large number of students who have not yet entered the portals of the University of Toronto Library gave an assortment of reasons for this. Some considered the facilities of their own faculties adequate to their needs. Others had been warned by students, and asked by professors not to use the library except for essential work, to allow the staff to make order as quickly as possible. A few had not yet found where the library was.

"It's just like Yonge Street," stated one student on library service, and added that it was "a question of where to lay the blame." Many students felt they did not know enough about the inner machinations of the library and its staff to judge how much of the service trouble was due to the construction and shifting of books going on. "The contractors are being used as scapegoats," maintained one "In view of the agitation against them, it would seem to be Varsity's obligation to publish an article on the cause of the delay."

Several students mentioned that it might be partially attributed to the large numbers of new staff who have not yet had the chance to learn the system. Other upperclassmen felt the system was inadequate, because there had been "delays and inconveniences" last year. B.C. (Before Construction). Some thought that the staff was not large enough, other thought it just "inefficient." "The efficiency is nil on getting books; excellent on paying fines. They don't even make you stand in line," was one bitter reply. But most 83 people thought the trouble due to the reason suggested by the Varsity poll. Many distinguished between the Wallace Room, whose service was called "extremely good," and the main circulation desk.

Present library conditions seem to have had an influence on freshmen, who have not seen it any other way. One commented that "the library is good for one thing, only — a girl-friend of mine went there to study . . . now they're engaged."

The Trinity Library reported that their volume of trade has not increased this year. The Trinity Library moves next year to the basement of the new Chapel, and the staff is prepared for some confusion. They hope the students will "have patience" — now and then.

St. Michael's library has doubted its business. A member of the staff attributed this to "the return to books movement, and the new in Carr Hall facilities with the University problems coming third."

Generally, everyone, even those who had experienced their library problems vicariously were aware of the problem, although they were not sure as to the causes or solution. Most of the "have not beens" stressed the "yet" and hoped that the situation would be alleviated, in fact eliminated.

Welcome, Seminar

The Varsity welcomes to the campus another newspaper, Seminar, published by the Newman Club of Toronto. The paper is a printed four-page effort, ranking with Toke Olke of S.P.S. and The Gargoyle of U.C. The purpose of the paper is that of the Club, "to introduce to others on the campus our way of life, which is knowledge based on intellectual truth." We wish it success.

New Library Comes of Age, Stops Its Growing Pains; Debut Plans by December

The new and controversial extension to the Main University Library will be fully opened on Monday, November 29th.

According to the officials, the new wing was to have been opened on September 7th. "We were given that date in July," said R. H. Blackburn, Chief Librarian.

When asked to answer criticism over the delay of the $3-million University of Toronto library, the general manager of the J. L. E. Price Company — the firm awarded the contract last year — refused to give any explanation of the hold-up.

C. W. Power, general manager of the contracting company, answered, "I have nothing to say."

When reminded that the firm had promised the completion of the building by the beginning of last month, Mr. Power countered with, "You know what I mean; you're a university student . . . when I say 'I have nothing to say,' I mean I have nothing to say."

"Due to failure of the contractors, and the disruption of the plans of the library staff, it has been extremely difficult to locate certain books," admitted one library employee. Hour-long delays in taking out a book are not unusual — students have reported. The record is held by one individual who waited for three hours — unsuccessfully.

According to the latest report of R. H. Blackburn, Chief Librarian, the situation will be worse before it finally improves.

"We are hoping to open the Wallace Room in the new wing on Monday, Nov. 15th. This is a large reading room, with a great many of the most frequently-used books on open shelves, and it will likely be open until 9:00 p.m. It will close on the 26th and the 27th of Nov. but otherwise it will be open for the rest of the term," said Mr. Blackburn.

The University Library extensions at Flavelle House and the Economics Building will be open as usual all term. The Medical Reading Room will close from Nov. 24th to 29th, in order to finish the process of moving.

All other sections and services will be closed from Nov. 22nd to Nov. 27th, inclusive.

The re-organized library will be completely opened in the Sigmund Samuel Building on Monday, November 29th. (According to popular opinion, the new extension will be worth its price.)

New Library

This is a picture of the Architect's Model of the new addition to the Library. A campus Poll taken yesterday by two Varsity Staffers revealed that students are dissatisfied with the Library's service.

HH Turns Thumbs Down On Religious Illiteracy

"Religious Illiteracy" went down to defeat yesterday in the Hart House Debate. The House voted — by a margin of 22 to 6 — that they would rather not be illiterate about religion.

The resolution was "that this house approves religious illiteracy."

Dr. Swanson, Hon. Visitor, stood up to speak against the motion. Since the house was debating about the phrase invented by Dr. Sydney Smith speaking to students concerning the University, Dr. Swanson thought the motion should be debated with respect to the University; a point the speakers had referred to previously.

He continued by stating that since the university is a place of universal knowledge and since religion occupies such an important position in everyday life, it should be included in the studies of a university producing a well-rounded person.

He could not understand how university students could defend illiteracy because illiteracy was ignorance.

He did not agree with the eyes that people had lost faith in religion. "The churches are still being packed on Sunday."

He also attacked the individuals who derided "Christian Superstitions." Modern chemists would not accept Medieval alchemy if it were thrown at them. Neither would today's doctors take responsibility for ancient practices. "Why should Christians be bound by some concepts of their ancestors?"

Countering the statement that people were dropping religion in favour of science, Dr. Swanson said that there was no clash between religion and science. He said that both were true in their own particular media; there was only clash of two types of closed minds.

Mr. G. S. Kell, Vict, supported his motion by extrapolating the second law of thermodynamics. He said, "History goes forward, not backward." The Middle Ages could not return. What could remedy a lost situation?

Mr. I. G. Scott, SMC, speaking against the motion emphasized the moral breakdown of modern society. "Teen-age vice begins at home now, where Charity began at home before." He called religious illiteracy the "suicide for university and for the whole Western Society."

Mr. Clyde Batten, third speaker of the house, quoted Billy Graham to support the resolution. He said that religion was an experience which transcends the senses. Thus, we could have no knowledge, and couldn't be illiterate.

Mr. H. B. S. Symons, speaking against the motion, said "Our age is an age of cheapness and arrogance..."

Choice And Chosen Orators To Visit Foreign Rostrums

The trials to choose members of the intercollegiate debating teams will be held Friday, Nov. 12, announced Gord Hurlburt, Debates Commissioner of the Students' Administrative Council yesterday. These trials are held each year to decide who will represent the University of Toronto on the three debating tours to other universities.

The annual Pittsburgh Cross Examination will be held again this year on December 10-11, Hurlburt reported. There will also be a tour to Massachusetts in February. The Women's Invitational Tournament will be held at Toronto this year, probably near November 26 or 27.

The men's trials will be held in the Wallberg Bldg., room 3037 on Nov. 12. The topic will be "Resolved that Student Government on This Campus Is Not Responsible". The women will compete in Brennan Hall at St. Michael's College on "Canadian Universities—United They Stand, Divided They Fall". The contestants will prepare and deliver ten-minute speeches on the topic, and will be given five minutes to prepare a three-minute speech on one of a list of topics. Three judges will mark the competitors on a point basis.

Gord Hurlburt expressed a wish for more prospective debaters: "We hope that this year's turnout will be much better than last year's." He also pointed out how valuable debating experience would be in later life.

Fros Continues Noon Discussion On West Indies

"The West Indies have a higher standard of education than has Canada", said Egbert Tertulien, II U.C., in his talk to the FROS yesterday noon.

He was speaking at the third in a series of three lunch-hour discussions on the British West Indies. Previous discussions have covered West Indian history and culture. Yesterday Egbert Tertulien described the educational system, and the newly formed West Indian Association on this campus.

Concerning the Association, of which he is the President, he said, "The reason for the formation is obvious. An organization was needed in which the character of the West Indian could find expression." There are 105 students at the U. of T. from various parts of the West Indies.

The secondary schools may be government-sponsored or private, but in all cases, they are quite expensive. The final examinations are set by Cambridge University.

There is only the one university in the West Indies, the recently-founded University College of the West Indies. However, the Senior Cambridge Certificate exempts the Indian students from first year of the Canadian universities.

The second speaker was Bradley Phillips, who is doing graduate work at O.C.E. He discussed education in Jamaica. A question period followed his talk.

Bob Revued

Paradise Cut Up

An enthusiastic cast and a couple of good voices do not make a spectacular show, but they do inject enough strength into the 1954 version of the Bob Revue to carry the script.

Entitled "Paradise Misplaced", the show has a plot that is not thin so much as cut up. The exit lines are often obvious and when good are only so through the actor's ingenuity, such as when James Mainprize, the not too cowardly professor Randall gleefully trails Friyr (Suzanne Cousland) off stage.

Briefly, three new entrants to Valhalla (Warrior's Heaven) arrive during King Odin's absence. Two are welcomed as legitimate residents but the third, Prof. Randall was picked up by mistake. His immediate removal to Niffelheim (last stop for cowards and women) is delayed because he prefers not to spend eternity with his wife. As an alternative the gods talk Randall into organizing Valhalla University as a surprise for Odin. Unfortunately, Loki (Terry Sheils), heretofore, benign god of evil, decides to straighten up, and throws a wrench in the plans by importing Mrs. Randall from Niffelheim.

The continuity which the plot does afford is broken up by six, on the whole, entertaining entr'actes and a ballet sequence by Mary (Shiela Catto) which is performed well enough, but is not very artfully worked in. The best entr'acte is Ray Carl who as Bragi never flags in his parody of 'the inspired poet'; and one is the best scenes in the show is the Act II Entr'acte where Terry Sheils and Dee Lloyd do a take off on the villainous landlord — I won't foreclose if you'll give me your daughter — routine. Molly Hewitt as the mother is amusingly convincing and speaks some of the funniest lines in the show.

The songs as well as the script improve in the second act and if not memorable are sung competently particularly the solos by Paul and Suzanne; Lillian Mit-

Here are the latest gleanings of the CUP harvest from universities across the United States and Canada:

London, Ont.— The Western Mustangs have received an offer from the British Columbia Athletic Round Table Society to fly the team to Vancouver for an East-West Intercollegiate championship game should Western win the eastern championship. The big beef is that the Dana would not be included.

Winnipeg.— Students from the University of Manitoba broke into the ceremony of the installation of Chancellors to protest the adulteration of cafeteria food. Banners were waved, a trumpet fanfare given, and a startled rooster left in the lap of an equally startled dignitary.

Undoubtedly, those participating in the venture gained encouragement from the custom prevailing at Edinburgh University, where the students shower the new president with fish and refuse as a sign of affection. Said the disgruntled editor of the Manitoban, "It is small comfort that their Manitoban colleagues proved less intense and affectionate."

Baton Rouge.— Whether student government is a right or just a privilege, Louisiana University certainly has it. The Honour Council has drawn up rules of procedure to apply to a student disciplinary council. The primary purpose of the council will be to hear cases in which students have been accused of honour violations, determine if the student is guilty, and if so, to recommend punishment to the University Disciplinary Committee.

Library Delay

In a Campus Survey, described elsewhere in this paper, students have expressed great dissatisfaction with the services of the University Library this fall.

There are valid reasons for their discontent. To the casual observer, it might seem as though the library services had been designed to produce as much inconvenience as possible to the students.

The delay, the confusion, the inconvenience caused by the lack of proper facilities — all this is a very serious matter to students who must depend on the library for information.

The confusion seems to stem from the fact that the books — over half a million of them — were moved to the new wing of the Library some time ahead of the day when the new annex will be ready for occupation. This means a great deal of confusion for the Library staff and inconvenience for the students, since the service desks are in one building and the stacks in another.

The fact that the move was made so much ahead of the time that the new wing will actually be open is attributed to an unforeseen delay on the part of the contractor, who is evidently some two or three months behind schedule.

It is difficult to say with certainty who is responsible for the whole mess, although the contracting firm seems as good a candidate for the honor as any. But it is certain that some attempt to foresee this delay and avoid the resultant confusion should have been made by the University authorities. —R.D.B.

Green Grass

The recent growth in the university building campaign has fulfilled a long-felt and urgent need — a need for such requirements as more student residences and increased library space.

But this same growth has meant the campus will soon be indistinguishable from the rest of downtown Toronto with its hodge-podge of closely-packed buildings. Our atmosphere is rather that of the crowded KCR than of the traditional spacious acres of a university. We have no room.

Universities such as Western and Ubessey have planned and roomy campi of which they can always speak with pride. They can include golf courses and virgin forests, outdoor athletic facilities and green parklands in their grounds. These universities are, in fact, separate communities, individual and independent.

It would be foolish to suggest at this late date, that those who are responsible for the planning of the University might follow the plan of other universities, and build outside the city. However, there is an area just south of the University, which could be reclaimed from the slums. We hope that in the future university authorities will at least confine their new buildings to the area south of College Street, and leave us our last remnant of green grass. —C.E.H.

No Action

Several days ago an editorial appeared in this paper pointing out the need for traffic lights or some other system of traffic control at the Hoskin Avenue intersection in front of Trinity College. At various times over the past few years, other editorials, articles and letters from our readers have expressed a similar dissatisfaction with the traffic hazards that exist for students and others at this particular crossing.

So far nothing has been done by the Civic authorities, if possible.

Also, so far no one has been killed at this death-trap. We hope that the traffic lights will arrive before the First Martyr. —RDB.

Writing To The Varsity?

For Your Information

Everyone has a burning, though perhaps latent, desire to write. Here's how to get your efforts in print. The following are instructions in the writing of four general categories that The Varsity will print: letters to the Editor, Today and Comings Up, campus publicity, and original articles.

All letters to the Editor should be typed on a typewriter set for 66 spaces using double spacing. All letters should be of a reasonable length — in other words, as short as possible.

Forms for Today and Coming Up events are supplied in The Varsity office. Unless the event is of unusual importance, notices are limited to one Coming Up and one Today. The Varsity reserves the right to cancel any announcement without notice, due to space restrictions. All notices should contain only a very brief account of the event. These notices should be in the office by 4.00 p.m.

Publicity agents or club presidents who wish coverage of their meetings should contact The Varsity — either by phoning or by dropping into the office. The Varsity does not cover dances. Reporters may often not be sent to meetings of interest only to a small group on the campus. However, a short report of the meeting may be printed if it is submitted immediately after the event.

For advance notices of a meeting, general information, such as the background of the speaker, should be submitted to The Varsity a week beforehand. The Varsity reserves the right to rewrite or edit all material submitted.

Original articles are also accepted in The Varsity. Such are editorial articles on current serious topics; short humorous articles (Champus Cats), and features.

Two rules are essential for all copy submitted for publication to The Varsity. Get it in early and keep it brief.

No Christian Paper, This

The Editor
The Varsity

I would like to make a comment on the article "Champus Cat" which appeared in The Varsity on Monday, Nov. 1.

Seldom does there appear a mockery with so cutting a satire of Dr. Graham's work. Even the English newspapers, in March of this year did not carp Dr. Billy Graham as much as Rasputin; and after three months of the campaign they were singing a different tune; in fact, they praised him highly.

Would it be too much to ask that a little more courtesy and good feeling be shown to the Christians on the Campus who are deeply offended when one openly mocks their faith and a man whom they respect most highly; namely Dr. Billy Graham.

I hope that such discriminating satires will be frowned upon in future, so that the Christians may also be able to enjoy the newspaper as well as others.

J. Van Seters I U.C.

... and More

The Editor
The Varsity

The cartoon you published yesterday on Billy Graham was a very poor type of barbed sneer against a man who is doing much more creative work for mankind than your destructive cartoonist. A person might very well disagree with Billy Graham on both ideas and methods, but he has done and is doing well a lot to get our mediocre-minded, materialist society on the right foot. Surely he deserves more admiration and respect than you through your cartoonist have shown him.

Peter Marsh I Trinity.

More On Billy

The Editor
The Varsity

It seems to me the report of The True and Right Society was entirely unnecessary. If its author wants to tear Billy Graham and religion apart why can't he come out and attack them directly rather than in the sarcastic vein that this was written. I think it is a good thing to discuss religion and find out what you believe or don't believe, but to approach it with the attitude he has shown is rather underhand.

The crowds that have gone to listen to Billy Graham indicate that he must have something worth hearing. True, crowds aren't everything but why doesn't the author Join them to hear what he has to say instead of going by hearsay (and by this I don't mean listening to him on the radio.) Does the author of the article take God seriously? I doubt it.

NEATBY DISPUTES — TEMPERATELY

By JOAN SEYMOUR

A Temperate Dispute by Hilda Neatby, Clarke Irwin, 97 pp., $2.00.

DR. Neatby lives up or rather down to her title. Again carrying the torch for a liberal education, she seeks to express her conviction — "the concept of objective rational proof is not outmoded even in this age of relativity". In a collection of four essays prepared originally as lectures, she repeats her attack on education in our schools to-day, with less force perhaps, though certainly with no less insistence, while introducing a comprehensive discussion of the ideals basic to her stand.

The school's traditional purpose in education: "to dispel ignorance . . . and . . . to train the mind for control and power", do not, she argues, ignore the development of character or personality. Rather, these aims state the specific means by which the school serves the "whole child". And it is only through facts learned, that the child can achieve the progressivist's aims of "problem solving" and "critical thinking".

What good is a herd motivated purely by instinct — a situation she feels the present system of education is progressing towards, and has in fact reached.

"The essence of Western freedom . . . resides in the conception of the human person, in society . . . formed by society and yet capable of becoming and remaining an individual."

We would do well to review our knowledge of Arnold, who advocated an extensive education in the humanities, yet saw education as a socializing process.

Dr. Neatby reminds us that a true corporate spirit is achieved only when the individuals composing the group have firmly rooted means for refreshment of mind and spirit, in contemplation and fruitful occupation of leisure.

In her thoughtful and rather effective essay on teaching, she contends that there is too little academic training, and that the experts feel that it is remedied, or most certainly replaced, by recurrent professional training, sounds a familiar note. Is she not frighteningly correct when she suggests that "scorn of scholarship, suspicion of intellectual brilliance, an insistence on group thinking" may exclude from the teaching profession those capable of greatness? And is not greatness that quality exhibited only by "exceptional talent" which requires the whole man?" Inference: a liberal education for a teacher.

Dr. Neatby might well have titled her book "No Debt?" for her concluding essay, to my mind is an excellent review of the position of reason in our modern society. Surely the true end of learning, she argues, is something for the mind, and as a by-product we achieve happy and effective living. But this is a reversal of the progressivist stand: a shocking claim!

A temperate review of the present position of — and attitude to education. Dr. Neatby offers no startlingly new ideas, but provides food for thought and action, should we be interested enough to meet the challenge. "We have ignored the Debt of our Reason which we owe unto God, the homage we pay for not being Beasts", said Sir Thomas Browne. "We face perhaps, the natural consequences of this insolent denial of homage. At few periods in the history of our civilization", she concludes, "have so many men been treated so much like beasts".

Bruce and Book Week

Eminent Author Emanates

ONE second-hand chesterfield, six sharpened pencils, a pad of scratch paper and one small, thick magazine made up Charles Bruce's prescription for the writing of a novel when he spoke yesterday at Smith's Literary Luncheon. The luncheon was held in honour of Book Week.

It was originally planned that Nicholas Monsarrat should address the luncheon, but he developed a case of blood poisoning. Frank O'Connor, an American short story writer who was to pinch hit for Monsarrat also fell ill. And so, Charles Bruce, author of The Channel Shore (Macmillan's) and News Superintendent of CP came to pinch hit for a pinch hitter. Circumstances forced the literary guild into listening to a Canadian author. There's some kind of justice in there somewhere.

"Our age is one where restoration of a sense of continuity in human affairs is necessary", said Mr. Bruce. He felt that one of the most effective ways of doing this was through local history and that local history could be preserved only by story-telling, not in history texts. This is because story-telling reveals a truth of behaviour and circumstance recorded on a personal basis. Consistency is in human nature and the inconsistency only in the tools of human nature, he felt. The difference between the behaviour of a man living in 1920 and 1954, for example, can be accounted for by the difference in a 1920 and 1954 model Ford and other such factors.

Mr. Bruce stressed the importance of writing about a section that one knows and of giving the time and place a reality through research in back issues of local newspapers. Mr. Bruce himself spent seven years writing and checking his novel about Nova Scotia, the place of his birth. "More and more I'm becoming convinced that backwoods history is the only history of any country," he said. For this reason he felt that a department of regional research should be endowed in the universities of Canada. Nationality is the flower of the rock and is traced through the people we come from, he concluded.

When asked for advice to university students who aspired to be writers he replied that the only thing to do was to write, to get down to work. He advised doing as many jobs as possible in order to get the experience and knowledge necessary for writing. Journalism, he felt was quite good experience, because the main difference between newspaper and literary writing was that of pace. Mr. Bruce has managed both himself for several years.—W.M.

LET THE ENGLISH ALONE — THEY BITE

By MARY BURBRIDGE

Patrick Campbell's Omnibus, by Patrick Campbell, Clarke Irwin, $2.65.

THE contents of Patrick Campbell's Omnibus are called "articles" in the acknowledgments, and this is about as close as you can come to classifying them. Most of them are funny little pieces such as How to drink like a gentleman, Brunnhilde is Wotan's Uncle, Let the English alone — they bite, and A case for a white sick car.

Some of the articles were first written for newspapers or magazines and they all have a journalistic air about them. In one Campbell is a reporter looking for the Governor General of the Belgian Congo in the Aran Islands, in another a legman for a Press Lord; in a third he works in a newspaper library where violent arguments arise over questions such as whether a woman bitten by a lizard in a bus should be filled under WOMEN (Brave) or ANIMALS (Fallacies). The stories that do not have a journalistic setting still seem to move in the peculiar and rather drunk world that other people imagine journalists live in.

Peculiar people are the backbone of the book. They range from the devoted couple Paul and Primula (who call each other Primmy and Polly in private) to Cooney the alcoholic medical student "took in last week with the spirits-run-in" out of him. Mr. Campbell seems to have encountered a peculiarly horrible collection of women, the subjects of many of the stories. Some are attractive, most of them anything but, and they all pursue him very energetically. Some of the peculiar people are his four-year-old daughter and her friends, who occupy some of the most unusual and pleasant of the stories.

If you start reading Mr. Campbell's book expecting it to be hilariously funny, you will find yourself looking in vain, most of the time, for the joke. Only a few of the articles are the kind that make you laugh out loud — Lemon bites boy (Schoolboy K.O'd by Orange Pip); and Unaccustomed as I am, a tale of two stammerers at a dinner party. The other stories, however, are amusing in their own way, except one, Completely Filthy Lucre, which is genuinely sad.

Only The day the truth got out is a real short story, and it is saved until the end. It is cleverly written and very funny, and contains another memorable character, Norman the office boy. After reading this story you close the book thinking that it was pretty good.

Patrick Campbell's Omnibus is illustrated by Ronald Searle, with faintly funny drawings of men with huge chins and noses, and frightened or leering expressions on their faces.

Mary Burbridge is a student in fourth year Eng. Lang. and Lit. and former AM&L editor.

Pogo's Mother Steps Out

By LES LAWRENCE

The Pogo Stepmother Goose, by Walt Kelly (Simon and Schuster), New York, 1954 . . . $1.35.

WALT Kelly, the 'always surprising creator of Pogo' is up to something new in the Stepmother Goose. Com-pounded and fractured by the pun-conscious Kelly into mad parables and crazy mixed-up poetry, the stories don't sound much like the ones you heard at your mother's knee. The types from the Okefenokee swamp act in most of the productions but Kelly again demonstrates his flexible imagination by using his characters in new ways and at one point abandoning them altogether.

The first story, a "Roosian Mellerdrama" corns up the revolution and the Russian short-story in a rather obvious fashion.

But even Albert, Churchill and the boys, those born Vaudevillians cannot quip and mug the strip up to Kelly's usual standard.

The rest of the material is much better. One story is a delightful romp with half a dozen childhood tales (at once) and a jumping cow called Mrs. Montgomery. The rest reflect Kelly's popular indignation with McCarthy, witch-hunting and all unfair and unconstitutional practices. "The Town on the Edge of the End", a surprising variation of the "Pied Piper" legend, is a brand new sort of whimsical-seriousness, in which no possums appear. The curious half-poetic half-spoofing legend tells the story of certain townspeople who, piped free of an infestation of hilariously grumpy and grotesque monsters, turn their town into an even worse place of "tiptoes and shushes."

All Kelly's disturbing retinue of unpleasant characters from J. P. Malarkey to Sarcophagus Macabre turn up in The Hunt to the accompaniment of ironical nursery rhyme verse. They stage a return engagement in "Who Stole The Tarts." The text is a direct crib from Alice in Wonderland, while the drawings make it abundantly clear that Kelly is having another satiric swipe at the McCarthy Hearings.

The verse interludes, all of them in the vein of "Deck the halls with Boston Charlie" reveal Walt Kelly as a frustrated poet wreaking his revenge on the trade with verses which come perilously close to meaning something. Now if you like Lewis Carroll, James Thurber, Uncle Remus and Pogo or even Pogo, you'll get a great kick out of Walt Kelly's latest. If you can't afford to buy it I suggest you steal it from a friend.

And that's all I can tell you about this boy Pogo, and the Stepmother Goose.

Les Lawrence is a student in third year Eng. Lang. and Lit. He has studied art.

BLACK PANTHERS STILL UNBEATEN

Speaking OF SPORT

By JOHN WILSON

Although the Vancouver Lions finished out their first season in professional football deep in the WIFU cellar with one lonely victory, the football-crazy citizens of Canada's dampest town will still get a chance to shout at the East on Grey Cup day.

Officials of the British Columbia Athletic Round Table Society have finalized their offer to the Eastern universities, and plans are now virtually complete for the Intercollegiate champion to journey west for a "College Bowl" game with the University of British Columbia.

A few weeks ago, the Athletic Directorate of the University of Toronto confirmed Varsity's acceptance of the offer, dependent upon the transportation provided. Now the B.C. society has officially offered to cover the expenses of a group of thirty. The team will be flown out to Vancouver, and would probably leave on the Thursday morning preceding the game. Evidently the society has also received word from Western accepting the offer, should they win the Yates Cup. McGill, of course, is out of the picture, and there is no definite word from Queens as yet.

The B.C. society was formed last spring for the promotion of sports interest in British Columbia, and has had great success with their venture thus far. Athletic interest is high in the province, and the society hopes to put 30,000 people in Vancouver's brand new Empire Stadium for the Intercollegiate clash on November 27. Already the citizens have begun a "Beat the East" campaign, with the intention of establishing an athletic attraction to rival the Grey Cup game both in color and attendance.

The idea was first conceived during the summer, while the UBC football squad was preparing for their annual clash with McGill University. The Redmen won that game 8-5, playing a half of American rules and a half of Canadian rules. This novel occurrence came about as the Thunderbirds play the American brand of football, in the Evergreen Conference with several colleges in Washington State.

If the November 27 game is played in the same way, Varsity, Western, or Queens should have no trouble adapting themselves to the Yankee rules for thirty minutes. It is much easier for a Canadian club to play the American game than for the Yanks to revise their plays to fit Canadian rules. As a matter of fact, Queens' clever halfbacks Ron Stewart and Gary Schneider would probably run the Thunderbirds' defence ragged behind unlimited downfield blocking.

Regardless of what plan is adopted for the game, or which one of the Eastern university squads makes the trip, the whole thing will undoubtedly be the granddaddy of all football week-ends.

Soccer Teams Winners

Varsity started strongly against McMaster and scored in the early minutes of the game. Sweeney cleared to Atucha who scored with a strong right foot shot. Varsity looked set to massacre the Marauders, when they were the victims of a very doubtful decision. McMaster were awarded a free kick and scored with a shot which gave Gascor no chance.

There was no holding the Redmen now as they piled on the pressure. Williams, Leach and Hubicki were outstanding in defence, but a misunderstanding let in the McMaster left winger, to score into an empty net.

For the first time in two years, Varsity were being led during a game. This was the crucial point and the Blues showed themselves fighters. They came back determined to crush the Marauders and things began to happen. Jose Atucha converted a Leach corner, with a rocket-like header.

Mike Uzumeri, manager of the Blues, filling in for Griffiths who was unable to turn out, was playing a great game on the Right Wing. The first half ended in a 2-2 tie.

In the second half, Webb, at inside forward, got through a lot of work and scored with a beautiful shot from 18 yards. Varsity proceeded to give McMaster a soccer lesson. Right-Winger Green dribbled through a maze of Red defenders before driving in a screamer, to notch the fourth goal.

During spasmodic McMaster pressure, Gascor in goal, showed his class with a couple of very good saves. Hubicki and Leach, on the left flank of the defence, showed a good knowledge of the rougher tactics of the game, mowing down the Marauders as they came.

Ounpuu, playing with a broken nose got through a lot of work in the defence. King made it five as the game ended with a well taken shot from just inside the area. Man of the Match . . . Rod Green.

The Intermediates made it a perfect day, beating the Marauders 6-0. Goals by, St. Rose, Wood (2), Ross, Papahipi and Vos. Man of the Match . . . Hank Vos.

Trinity Squad Victors In Mud Bowl Contest

By SHELDON TAERK

Playing on a rain-swept field reminiscent of the 1950 Grey Cup quagmire at Varsity stadium, the big black team from Trinity rolled to a 5-0 victory over a damp but high-spirited Dentistry Dozen yesterday on the back campus.

In a game plagued by countless fumbles and slipping, sliding players, Toby Barwick, diminutive halfback of Trinity, managed the only semblance of a touchdown throughout the game.

After Jerry Aziz carried the ball from the Trinity 50 into Dents' territory midway in the last quarter, Trinity was unable to move further and Jim Brown was forced to kick on third down. The kick was partially blocked and the ball slithered to the Dents' 20 yard line, where the Dentists fumbled, Trinity's Hamilton knocking Dents' O'Connor loose from the ball. The Blacks took over on the 15. Aziz carried down to the three and Barwick went over on the next play. The convert attempt was missed.

O'Connor was outkicking Brown all afternoon and on countless occasions his long punts relieved the pressure of a Trinity attack. Brown, pressed into kicking service for Trinity because of the absence of one of the league's best kickers, Pete Gordon, had trouble making solid contact for most of the game and many times it was only because of a stiff front wall that he managed to get them away at all.

The game, one of the most poorly played of the season because of the elements, had little to feature in the way of a passing attack, for which the Trinity squad is famed. Trinity quarterback Whyte and Holden threw only three passes throughout, completing one in the first half. The second half produced no throwing by Trinity, who decided to rely on the fleet Aziz, who carried for four of their five first downs. O'Connor carried for Dents' only first down.

The win leaves the Red and Black machine high atop the standings in Group II, and still undefeated in three outings. The powerful Scarlet and Gold club from Victoria College is the only other undefeated team in the Interfaculty loop. The victory also leaves Trinity virtually assured of a play-off spot with only one game left, that with Forestry. The worst they could do is tie for the Group II championship.

Westerns Use Jinx Out To Beat Blues

Forces supporting the Western Mustangs in their base intentions for the Yates Cup and the chance at an All-Canadian title this year, are resorting to voodoo-voodoo and similar black arts to assure the Westerns of success. For example they are calling upon a strapping jinx, of a mere seventeen years, to keep the Varsity Blues from defeating their purple warriors this Saturday on the Mustangs' home field. These people hope that since the Blues have never, in seventeen seasons, won at Western, the jinx will persist and the Blues crumble.

While the Varsitys have no black arts at their service they do have the hottest team in Intercollegiate football at the moment and old John Metras and his Horsies may find this more than adequate. With the Western game a must win for the Blues and almost no Varsitys out on the limp all stops will be out for victory and sole possession of second place in the League.

The Varsity line that Western bucked to death in the season's opening game back on October 9, is considerably improved over the last part of the schedule and should give a much better account of themselves come Saturday in London. In the two easy games with the McGill Redmen, Bob Masterson has had opportunity to experiment with his lineup, shuffling the linemen around and giving untried players a chance to show their stuff.

The result has been most disheartening for the dreamers from Western and Queens as there seem to be no weak spots in the Blue lineup, with the second string as good as the first and that the best in the League. This is the most important game of the season yet with the Varsitys facing elimination if they drop this one.

Pharmacy Gals Down St. Mike's

One squad in the women's basketball loop is doomed. In spite of 23-16 lacing they gave Saint Mike's B. yesterday, Pharmacy is going to run into trouble. They have no coach and need one desperately.

Sharp shooter Sandra Palumbo is one reason why Pharms didn't get chewed. Janet McCabe is the other. These two seemed to carry most of the scoring and doubled up on the defensive side beautifully.

Because of Palumbo's playing, Pharm was ahead 4-2 at the end of the first quarter. Saint Mike's retaliated early in the second were still behind 12-7 at the half way mark.

Saint Mike's pushed hard in the third and if it hadn't been for their defensive work (would have been trailing more than they did — by 18-10. Their basket attempts far outnumbered Pharmacy but few succeeded in tallying.

Barbara Mitchell of Saint Mike's opened the scoring early in the fourth but the strong, disorganized Pharmacy gals kept them back to win 23-16.

The game was marked by fouls and sloppy play. Both squads showed lack of practice but Pharmacy showed, more than that, lack of coaching. Saint Mike's suffered badly on shooting while the Pharms showed poor defensive.

Sandra Palumbo tallied 12 for Pharmacy followed by Janet McCabe who got 5. Barb Mitchell was high scorer for Saint Mike's, netting a total of 7. She was closely followed by Joanne Lapette with 4.

Baby Blues Reign Ends But Shaw Trophy Stays

Varsity's Baby Blue's four year reign of the Intermediate football scene seems destined to come to a grinding halt this season. Repulsed 18-5 last week-end by a Western team that lived up to all advance notices the Intermediates will need tremendous drive this Friday to topple the now ruling giants of the loop. The protest under which the game was played offers little compensation for the ending of the Baby Blues 22-game winning streak.

This protest, or more accurately the reason for the protest, served to abruptly clarify the Intermediate football league set-up for this year. As the Western Colts and the Baby Blues were billed as the only teams actually in the league, and since Western, by dressing more men than league rules allow, denied the existence of such a league the question would appear to be settled. Therefore, regardless of the final outcome of the Western-Toronto home and home series, the Shaw Trophy, symbolic of Intermediate supremacy, will rest for another year in the halls of Hart House.

The Seconds emerged from last Saturday's tussle with relatively unreduced strength. End and team kicker John Adams suffered a pulled leg muscle while both Al Wong and John Tattle acquired assorted bruises. Al was forced to leave the game with badly bruised ribs, but all three will be fit to play this Friday. Determined to avenge their loss the Intermediates will also dress over the league limit in their all-out effort to regain top spot.

Fisher, Reid, Knox Tops In Practices

The Blues have depth and strength at all positions as they attempt to smoothe out the wrinkles for an exhibition contest with the OHA Junior A Marlboros on Saturday in Dixie Arena. However there is a slight problem in goaltenders; there are only two trying out with the team.

Temporary coaches Harry Griffiths and Jack Wheldrake appear well-pleased with what they have seen already this week, and so they should be. The most effective combination in practice thus far has been a forward line centered by ex-Marlie Dave Reid, with Clare Fisher and Paul Knox on the wings. Fisher was a mainstay of the Intercollegiate Intermediate champions last winter, while Knox was a star with the St. Michael's Junior A club last year.

Don Cossar, clever Blue play-maker of last season, centres another line with former Blues Ernie Bodnar and Johnny Akitt. Rob Logie, Tom Riley, and Ken Lawson were matching wits with Fisher, Reid, and Knox in last night's session, and put two goals behind Hugh Currie in the first half of the practice.

Two ex-Intermediates, Ted Rogers and Mert Wright, team with freshman Bill Naylor from UTS in another combination of forwards. Ex-Marlie Dave Jackson, and Bill Moreau, John Tolton, Lou Appleby, Sam Ashton, Herb Tilson, Sandy Davison, and Johnny Bark are battling it out for a berth at the blueline for Saturday's game. Such an array of talent bodes nothing but good for this winter's assault on the Queens Cup.

Remedial Results Are Out One of Each Five Failed Majority Only Mediocre

Only one-fifth of the 400-odd arts students at University College who took this year's remedial English exam failed to pass, it was revealed yesterday.

Approximately 395 arts students at UC wrote the test about two weeks ago. Some 75 failed the exam while about 20 did not write it.

The exam was compulsory for all first-year students registered in the college.

Certain first-year students from some of the other faculties were also required to write the exam, Professor R. S. Harris said yesterday. He said the complete results of these exams would be released in a day or so.

Out of the 400-odd results already posted, about 30 received A-grades. Grades of "B" "C" and "D" were common.

An explanatory notice posted beside the results pointed out that the grades "A" "B" and "C" corresponded roughly to first, second and third class honours.

The notice said that while the examiners in the Department of English were tempted to fail candidates in the Grade D category, they felt that the latter were still in a position to remedy matters themselves.

The explanatory notice said the exam was two-fold in its intention: (1) to test students on their ability to plan a substantial essay, and (2) to test ability in comprehending a passage of expository prose.

The exam was requested by the College Council and carried out by the Department of English.

Said one student as he crept up to the results, posted in U.C.'s rotunda: "I'm afraid to look!"

early bird doesn't even get a cold

By MARY ALICE HUNTER

It was a tough flight Ma, but we made it. Dragging myself out of bed, early Sunday morning, after bravely conquering a hereditary hatred of heights and arising at 6 a.m., I gaily prepared to "come Josephine in my flying-machine". Although my name isn't Josephine, I went anyway, on a breakfast flight to Brantford, with the University of Toronto Flying Club.

Whooping with glee, the pilots flew (for some reason the editors seem to object to this phrase) over to the nine planes rented by the club for the eighty mile flight. "Now don't fly away yourself, because we are bent on telling this story, even if it is for the birds. Now that you are comfortably settled down in your lecture, we ask you—have you any idea what the rental of a plane costs? Of course it's better spent than for tuition." (Thank you Mani Thaler)

There the planes sat; Canucks, Cessna, Tri-Pacer and Super-Cruiser; red, yellow, green and blue; and all with the same sickening leer on their faces. "We can fly and you can't". Suddenly a horrible suspicion came to me. What if this was all a subtle plot to kill off the Varsity masthead one by one, again control of the paper, and publish nothing but pictures of jet-pilots. Taking my courage in my hand (there wasn't enough to use two hands) I walked over to the single-engine two-seater Cessna. The pilot, Ken Kinsman (IV S.P.S.) looked competent, but what if he should go mad and fiendishly fly to a horrible death; with me along. I felt that this would be going too far for a scoop.

Much to my surprise, the pilots did not follow the traditional movie pattern of stepping into the plane, starting the engine, and disappearing with a Whoosh! into the horizon. The planes taxied awkwardly about the field like giant beetles, for five minutes. They even made the same noise as "Them".

One minute I was silently but fervently shrieking: "Help, help!", the next I was a veteran, superciliously gazing down on the poor earth-bound fools beneath, and trying not to flap my wings too obviously. At the risk of sounding hackneyed, FLYING IS WONDERFUL! The only thing that disappointed me, was that we weren't moving. It was a tremendously exhilarating sensation hovering above Toronto, but I felt it was time to get a little speed. I asked the pilot when we would begin to move, and he pointed to the speedometer. We were going a hundred miles an hour.

The incredible thing about flying is that so many of the things you read about it, are true. I had always cherished a secret belief that the clouds were really pasted onto a blue glass bowl, but believe it or not, they aren't. We even flew over them. Because or some silly regulation that it's not safe, we didn't fly right through them.

Piloting a plane seems to be quite simple—once you are up, the controls are set, if there is no wind. I flew (the plane of course) for about five minutes, and we only lost two hundred feet. For excitement, it is fun to gain altitude and then lose it quickly, thus giving the pleasant sensations of an elevator cut loose from its cables. Sometimes the plane in front would begin to go backwards, without any explanation. This seemed odd behaviour for a responsible pilot, but apparently we were gaining on them. I still claim that the pilot ahead was just confused.

At the end of forty minutes, after flying over fields and mountains (which look as if the maid has been sweeping dust under the broodloom) we arrived at Brantford. No one else had landed, so we headed for Paris (darn it).

After a hearty breakfast, we headed back over the Hamilton Hillock (I refuse to call that feeble protuberance a mountain. At four thousand feet, you can hardly even see it!).

And so we came back to Toronto. To the members of the club, many of whom are R.C.A.F. pilots, it was just the annual breakfast flight, to me, it was almost worth getting up at six o'clock. All I want for Christmas is an aeroplane.

Saunders Discusses Prophetic Novels

Dr. R. M. Saunders, Professor of History at the U. of T., naturalist, and well known author of Flashing Wings and Carolina Quest, spoke on The Prophetic Novel at the Library Evening last night at Hart House.

Professor Saunders traced the prophetic novel from the 17th Century to present day literature of the 20th Century, showing the gradual change from the early concept of a Utopia of freedom and brotherhood completely void of war with the control of the state — Edward Bellamy's Looking Backward, and H. G. Wells' Utopia to a modern Utopia found in George Orwell's 1984.

In 1984 freedom of personality is completely wiped out and is replaced by servitude and slavery in a world divided into three totalitarian states perpetually at war, controlled by a one party regimentation where any opposition was transformed to love of servitude.

Dr. Saunders ended with the question, "Do we live in the world of Wells, or Orwell?", which was the basis for the discussion which followed.

Huxley Speaks Replaces Dogma With Humanism

More than 700 people squeezed into the auditorium of the Unitarian Church on Tuesday night to hear Dr. Julian Huxley, the famous biologist, philosopher and author deliver his address "Evolutionary Humanism, and Human Destiny".

He gave a comprehensive, but rather simplified version of the modern theory of evolution, grouping it into three categories: physiological, social, and psychological.

From the factual scientific evidence he went on to what he thought were the philosophical conclusions of science, namely, that "All reality is a single process, the process of evolution, or self-transformation, which is unidirectional, or irreversible, and which tends to variety and organization. In view of this, he felt that it is time to replace absolute, dogmatic religions with scientific Humanism.

His speech was followed by a question period, in which the audience was asked to write down their questions and hand them to the ushers. Dr. Huxley was flooded with questions, and, unfortunately, he could answer only a few of them.

Dr. Huxley's address will be mimeographed, and made available to interested parties by the Toronto Humanist Association.

Harvard President Arrives On Campus

The President of Harvard University — Dr. Nathan M. Pusey — was due to arrive on the campus here today as a guest of the Harvard Club.

The eminent U.S. educator was scheduled to breakfast with Warden Joseph McCulley at Hart House this morning.

Dr. Pusey is one of the U.S.'s leading educationalists and head of one of the oldest educational institutions on the continent.

Atomic Energy Is Dean's Topic At U.C. Lecture

Dean A. R. Gordon, head of the department of chemistry and dean of the School of Graduate Studies will speak on "Current Aspects of Atomic Energy" when he addresses a regular public lecture series in University College this afternoon.

The lecture will be given in the West Hall of U.C. at 5:00 p.m. "A subject of such interest and importance, thus treated by a distinguished scientist is a noteworthy and welcome addition to a series which is traditionally concerned with the humanities," said Professor R. J. Getty.

Mr. Getty said there would be no lecture on Thursday, November 11, but that the series would be resumed Thursday, November 18.

The public lecture series was organized with a series of Classical lectures in 1926 and thus has a history extending well over a quarter of a century.

Fallis Is Speaker Royal Institute

Dr. A. M. Fallis, director of the Department of Parasitology of the Ontario Research Foundation, will address a regular meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute here Saturday night.

The meeting is to be held in Convocation hall and the subject of Dr. Fallis' address will be, "Nature's Wonderland of Parasitic Animals".

The talk will be illustrated with lantern slides and natural-colour motion pictures.

Spirit of Inquiry

Only thirty-two people turned out last night to hear a debate on the resolution, "That this house approves of religious illiteracy".

What occasioned this lack of interest? Why should such a topic attract so few people to the debate?

It would appear that the attitude of acceptance is so ingrained into our undergraduates that few of them, if any, ever seriously question the value of judgments of this society.

It would seem that the plea for more religious education is entirely unnecessary since the majority of the students at this campus accept, at least tacitly, the dicta of the existing religious forms.

We still believe that the superstructure of the accepted religion of our society is an ossified shell from which the dynamic element has been removed.

We still believe that the outward forms no longer answer the problems of vast portions of humanity.

We still believe that any attempt to increase so-called instruction in "Religious Knowledge" would result in the perpetuation of an inadequate and incomprehensive system of values.

We must believe that the perpetuation of such a system of values for its own sake constitutes a desertion of the spirit of inquiry which must guide the life of an undergraduate at this or any other university.

Simple Answers and Legal Rights

The Editor,
The Varsity.

In the last issue of Campus Comment a question was raised which, by its implications, seems to lead to one or two serious problems. Since Mr. Mayer, II P&B, has brought one side of the story to the attention of the readers of The Varsity it is only fair that I be given the opportunity to discuss this matter further.

Campus Comment is distributed to students by students in the hope that a few people will be moved to reconsider (or even consider) some of the political and economic problems of our time. Our ideal is logical and careful investigations into all our institutions and relationships. If any are found wanting then we propose what we believe to be better solutions to the problems. In short, we have the audacity to question the status quo, and we are consequently not very popular among the uninformed and the well-satisfied. For these, our views may well be considered "harmful and slanted in an undesirable direction". To paraphrase Machiavelli: a reformer always has as his enemies those who profit by the old order. This may indicate why Mr. Saunders and Mr. Mayer are so violently opposed to our views.

The more serious issues, though, concern censorship and tolerance. I admit that Messrs. Saunders and Mayer have the legal right to dispose of as many Comments as they can get their hands on — the same right that I have to take 8000 copies of The Varsity each day if I want to. (Both publications are financed by students and then left for students to pick up at will). But then the individual sets himself up as a censor for the community. He does not impose his ideas on others; he merely sees to it that no other ideas are available. I hope democratic tradition is opposed to this sort of dictatorship; Comment is put out in the belief that some of our freedoms are still upheld by our society.

Not long ago the majority of people deplored the action of students in preventing the Red Dean of Canterbury from speaking. They said this was a violation of freedom of speech. Similarly, we hope there are still some who will deplore the action of Mr. Saunders as detrimental to the broader principle of freedom of expression. People may criticize us as much as they wish. If they do not like our ideas they can ignore them. They do not have to pick up a copy of Comment; and according to generally accepted moral law they have no right to prevent others from picking it up.

Mr. Mayer, II P&B, also devoted part of his letter to the explanation of why we can expect Communists to eliminate any democratic socialists in their way. My only comment is that his theory is probably unique. No other writer on political affairs seems to have had the insight to find such a simple answer. Congratulations, Mr. Mayer.

SMC Downs Skule 15-0 Field In Poor Condition

To the casual observer, yesterday's football clash between St. Mike's and Skule Juniors might have had the appearance of anything, from a soccer to a rugger game. On a field that was unsuitable to test the true worth of either team St. Mike's managed to roll over Skule, 15-0. Offsides were called frequently as players of both teams were unable to hold their footing.

The first half was featured by St. Mike's American-type spread formation which was so effective that lengthy gains were made. The important gains, however, that, put the Irish in scoring position were nullified due to illegal interference penalties. Consequently, the St. Mike's crew were forced to be reconciled with a two point safety touch incurred against Skule late in the first half.

On the kick-off by Ollié Baird opening the third quarter St. Mike's gained another point when the Skule receiver, whose number had by this time become completely obliterated with mud, was rouged behind his own line. From this point onward it appeared that Skule became more powerful while Skule could not muster enough strength to organize a good attack. Jude Fusco and Graham O'Connor of St. Mike's slid off the opposing tacklers, thus carrying the ball to the Skule 35 yard line. From here Bill McIntyre smashed off tackle and drove over for the touchdown. O'Connor then performed the unusual by running around the end for the convert. St. Mike's now led, 9-0.

St. Mike's then solidified their hold on the game. Quarterback Ron Renzetti pitched out to Halfback Leo McGuigan who went around the end 20 yards for the major. A pass from Renzetti to Babirad was good for the convert.

Max's muses . . . This was highly-rated St. Mike's first win of the season . . . Captains Dud Kurney and Don Ashley of Skule played their hearts out in a losing cause . . . Skule supporters thought there were inconsistencies in the officiating . . . A pat on the back goes to the many St. Mike's supporters who displayed the best spirit of any college seen yet this year.

Blues' Reserve Strength Up For Western Game

Reserve strength of the Varsity Blues will be tested severely this Saturday when the Varsitys travel to London to meet the Mustangs of Metras. With regulars and stars on the limp and doubtful starters against the Westerns, Bob Masterson will have to go largely with second-stringers.

The opening game of the season back on October ninth ended in a 9-9 tie, though the Mustangs outplayed the Blues. Main reason was the weakness of the inexperienced Blue line, with the two clubs battling evenly among the backfielders. The result should be in Varsity's favour this time with the line more experienced and ready to break down the Western front wall.

Injuries are the Varsity's greatest worry. Phil Muntz, his ankle slightly banged up in last week's game is unsure of playing this week. While Bill Stevenson's elbow is improving he too is not yet sure of starting though, with Harry Wilson to fill the gap, Bob Masterson can afford to be careful with any possible injury to Bill. Defensive end Frank Pelermo also came up with an injured ankle last week, and, despite the fact that he, like Muntz returned to the game, may not have to go this week. End Fred Smale is walking around with rib injuries but shouldn't be counted out yet. Otherwise the Blues are strong as ever and should be tough in London.

Softball Finals

Due to, (this is no exaggeration) unfavourable weather, the final series in the women's interfaculty softball has been postponed until Monday of next week.

The semi-finals which were scheduled to be run off this Tuesday were rained out and Trinity field has been left in such poor condition, it will not be ready until next week.

The semi-finals which were scheduled to be run off this Tuesday were rained out and Trinity field has been left in such poor condition, it will not be ready until next week.

This means, POT will face off when PHE third year and Vic firsts will meet Saint Mike's. The winner of these two battles will run the final series which has been switched to be one game and not the best out of three. This final game will be played (weather permitting) on Tuesday at 2: p.m.

MENO TO OXFORD ET AL:

Sirs: We wish to make a suggestion concerning your definition of the word COMFORT.

We believe the definition should go like this: "Comfort (kum/fert) n. a state of quiet bliss experienced at its height in a Hoberlin Harris Tweed Sport Jacket."

Harris Tweed is a surprisingly light fabric, with a good deal of that "give" that is so necessary in a sport jacket.

And, like fingerprints, no two pieces of Harris Tweed are exactly alike. Because they're hand-woven and hand-dyed, they have individual characteristics that can't be matched. When you choose a particular Harris pattern, you are selecting the work of an individual artisan.

We would like you to drop in and try on a couple of our Harris jackets this week. There's no hurry to buy. No shortage of stock. No pressure of any kind. We just think you should know what you're missing.

And you get all this comfort and Harris quality at prices that should even astonish the hardy Scots who wove the cloth . . . from $42.50 to $76.50.

Let us not forget Harris Tweed topcoats either. They hang naturally, comfortably, handsomely. And you can toss a Harris in the back seat of the car with never a worry. A wrinkle has no more chance of lasting in this springy fabric than in a Bhudda's forehead. Endless variety of patterns, from $55.00. And just a word about our new cashmere mixtures . . . WOW! (From $79.50).

One thing we AREN'T fussy about in Harris Tweeds is the way they last so long. Every time we sell one to a Hoberlin customer he's fixed for life. We may put ourselves out of business. In the meantime, we're open till 6 and Saturdays again.

Trinity Cake Fight

—V.S.P. by Al Manning

Sophomores Win

By PHILLIP JONES

Just before 5 p.m. yesterday a grubby cluster of green-horn Trinity College freshmen stood waiting on Philosopher's Walk a few score feet from the old institution's Henderson Tower gate.

In a minute or two, the freshmen were to look much grubbier. Squeezed into the archway was a block of 30 determined sophomore "pals" three men deep. Behind was another block of sophomores similarly drawn up. The freshmen had to break through the defence.

At exactly 5.01 a shrill whistle squealed out. The 75 attacking "worms" ripped forward unleashing a deluge of tomatoes at the narrow gateway.

But as the attackers reached the vicinity of the gate, things began happening over elsewhere. Two slimy drum-falls of pigswill, (brought by the sophomores from a North Toronto farm especially for the occasion) descended on the first-year men from overhead windows. One or two die-hards tried to climb over the top of the defenders but were rudely repulsed.

For a hectic minute all hades seemed to break loose. Eggs, tomatoes, oranges and rotten potatoes flew in all directions. Attackers and defenders grunted and pushed in the muck of the archway.

Suddenly, the shrill whistle squealed out again. The annual Cake Fight was over for another year. Casualties: 150 pigswill-plattered and tomato-peppered souls.

Origin of the Cake Fight was said to go back many a year to a time when Trinity "Saints" (the female members of the College) baked a cake for their first-year fellows.

The men, returning to the college were said to have been blocked by a mob of sophomores at Henderson Tower gate. A battle ensued and soon became a Trinity tradition.

Only twice in recent years have the sophomore defenders known to have been defeated. Last year, the freshmen smashed through bringing disgrace to the defenders. And Commandoes one year shortly after war's end were also said to have ingeniously cracked the line by attaching two skunks on the end of a pole and dangling them in the faces of their adversaries.

Eyewitness

By JOE AZIZ

This is an eye witness report from within the ranks of the sophomore defenders.

Linked arm-in-arm we stood watching the 100 or more spectators on the one hand and the "worms" armed with rotten tomatoes advancing toward us. The "Worms" are the Freshmen of Trinity college.

Just prior to the attack, one of the more daring "worms", handkerchief-on-nose, carried a protesting skunk up to our lines by the tail. The skunk, however, was quickly dispatched. The signal then given, I looked into a barrage of tomatoes soaring toward us.

As they slipped and slid toward us, a torrent of garbage rained down on the "worms" from our confederates posted in Henderson tower windows over our heads.

The next thing I knew, was that I could see nothing but entangled forms battling and shoving in front of me. Then it was all over. The whistle blew and the annual Trinity College cake fight was over. The sophomores had emerged victorious again.

CUP

Runneth Over

By CHARLES HUMPHRIES

A shortage of CUP news and a general feeling of laziness forced us to turn to the pages of the Associated Collegiate Press Feature Service in an effort to discover a worthwhile story; the item which follows was the result of this search.

(ACP) — What with elections, recommendations for censure and all else that comprises the wonderful field of politics hovering about us, the Ivory Tower supplement of the Minnesota Daily passes the following verses along. The opening Stanza and the chorus were conceived by some unnamed member of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch; the remaining verses by a hireling of the Ivory Tower. It should be sung to the tune of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which may or may not be appropriate.

FIRST VERSE

Mine eyes have seen the glory of Wisconsin's jumping Joe,
He is tramping on the Communists and Gen'als, too, you know, Gen'ral Ike and Gen'ral welfare feel the weight of Joseph's toe.

McCarthy's marching on!

CHORUS

Unity within the Party!
Unity within the Party!
Unity within the Party!
We've got to march with Joe!

SECOND VERSE

I have seen him coming forward with committees at his heels.

SAC Gives Tea For Carnegie

The Carnegie Record Collection will open its annual series of recitals this afternoon with a short Mendelssohn program, on the 107th anniversary of his death.

The concert will be held Thursday afternoon at 4:30, in back of the Staff Lounge on the third floor of the Mechanical Engineering Building. It will be followed by a "tea party and buns" according to Michael Oliver, of the Students' Administrative Council. All are invited.

The series of recitals are run by the SAC Music Committee and conducted by curator Bard Bakker, flutist in the Royal Conservatory Symphony Orchestra.

They have builded him a party made of little Texas wheels,
And they gather at his altar with their clamorous appeals, McCarthy's marching on!

REPEAT CHORUS

THIRD VERSE

He has sounded forth his trumpet with a slightly sour note,
And will fling his reckless charges

just to win a single vote,
He's the only party member who will always rock the boat.
McCarthy's marching on!

Women's Basketball

PHE III came through again last night by trouncing POT Srs. at OCE by a commanding score of 48-15. Both teams started fast but Physed soon took the upper hand scoring quick baskets. Pots got back in the game with a tally by Mary Marg O'Neil. Good team play between Jane Duff and June Hasford brought the quarter time score to 14-2.

It was Physed all the way from this time on; they latched on to every opportunity and at the half it was 27-6. Pots came back for a few minutes in the third quarter with some effective passing by Noreen Cossar and Mary Bodrug. They lacked the necessary polish around the hoop and failed to snatch their own rebounds. Inger Olsen's long shots put Physed out in front 39-11 at the end of the quarter. PHE continued their attack and the game ended 48-15.

In the other games played last night Vic F.E. beat St. Hildas 23-18 while St. Mikes downed Nurses Srs. 22-13.

Gilson Is Honored By Columbia Degree

"Etienne Henri Gilson — Philosopher and chronicler of philosophers; son of the Sorbonne, enriching its classical tradition; members of the Academie Française; as neighbour in America, professor at the University of Toronto; walking with the historic minds of the ages, with Bonaventure, with Augustine, with Bernard and with Dante; scholar who bridges the centuries to replenish and enhance the civilization of our time; renowned for the brilliance of his Histoire de la philosophie au Moyen Age."

These were the words of the citation which conferred an honorary D. Litt. degree on Professor Gilson, the director of studies at the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies at Toronto.

The ceremony was part of the Bi-centennial Convocation of Columbia University in New York, on Sunday, October 31. The occasion marked the end of twenty decades of education at Columbia, and was commemorated in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, before a crowd of 10,000 people.

Also among those honoured by degrees were Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother; Adlai Stevenson; Konrad Adenauer; Dag Hammarskjöld; Julian Huxley; Archibald MacLeish; Paul-Henri Spaak; and David Rockefeller.

"Professor Gilson brought distinction to Canada and to the University of Toronto," said Sidney Smith, President of the University, who attended the Convocation in New York. "Both he and Jacques Maritain, the two outstanding French Philosophers of

Rev. Niles Chief Speaker As Campus Mission Opens

A campus-wide, week-long program to bring Christianity to the University of Toronto's 10,000 students will be thrown into gear Sunday night when a special all-faculties church service is held in Convocation Hall. Students of all faiths can attend.

Reverend Daniel T. Niles, 47-year-old Ceylon minister who has worked with Christian organizations all over the world, will preach. His sermon will initiate the third University Christian Mission to be held on this campus.

Noted as an eloquent preacher, Rev. Niles is Chief Missioner of the seven-day program, which will consist of a series of talks and group discussions to be held daily throughout the week.

Rev. Niles will be assisted by Mr. Justice Kieler MacKay, head of a general committee set up at the request of President Sidney Smith to conduct the mission, and Professor A. John Coleman, chairman of the executive committee of the organization.

According to Prof. Coleman, an associate professor of the U of T's Mathematics Department, the purpose of the mission is "to make sure that each generation of students has an opportunity to hear a reasoned presentation of the Christian faith."

Although the mission will be chiefly Protestant in nature, students from all faiths will be welcome to all events taking place during the week, "I hope," Coleman said, "that all the meetings will be well attended and will provide some strong meat and accurate information with which students can argue in the many religious discussions which abound on the campus."

The week-long Christianity campaign will cost an estimated $5,500 — much of it donated by friends of the University. The 13 Associate Missioners who will be assisting Rev. Niles during the week will be paid only for expenses.

As part of the program, ten of the Associate Missioners will visit residences and fraternity houses on the campus for impromptu bull sessions.

The Mission is being sponsored by President Smith, interested faculty members, and such religious organizations on the campus as the Student Christian Movement, the Presbyterian Fellowship, and the Canterbury Club, as well as nearby churches.

The opening service of the Mission will begin at 7:30 this Sunday at Convocation Hall, which holds 1,800 people.

"The same number I hope will be there," said Prof. Coleman.

Depersonalization of Today Topic of MacDonald's Speech

"I would go nuts if I had to work in a factory," said Donald MacDonald, Provincial CCF leader, in a talk on "depersonalization of today" to a Students Christian Movement group last night.

He stated that some people said, or implied that depersonalization of big organizations was something new to our age of centralization. However he felt this was not so. He said that before the industrial revolution there was also a mass of people with no status.

Their squires he continued treated them well just as the farmer treats his pigs or horses—so they could produce. Depersonalization was not a new problem.

The problems of mass-production and big organizations came up again in the discussion period.

Mr. MacDonald said big organizations advantageous to the nation were more efficient.

With regard to mass-production, he said routine jobs had to be recognized. He saw the solution in reduced working hours. More leisure time could be used for development of latent talents. Creative activity in certain kinds of labor may never be obtained, he said. The "rescue of the depersonalized person" would be in more hours for free development.

Dr. Nathan Pusey Visiting Toronto For Harvard Club's Fiftieth Fete

By CATHIE BRESLIN

Nathan Marsh Pusey, was an all but anonymous figure last year when he was named the President of Harvard University — one of the most influential positions in America. Today he is a colossus in the field of education.

The explanation of this lies not so much in the position as in the man himself. Dr. Pusey — who visited Toronto yesterday as the guest of the Harvard Club on its 50th anniversary — is a quiet figure with silver-streaked hair, dressed with an understated respectability that suggests Oxford as much as Harvard. He surrounds himself with a dignity and command that is quite as genuine as it is convincing. To see him, one would hardly suspect Dr. Pusey of being "something of an academic revolutionary."

At the time of his appointment to succeed James B. Conant — now U.S. High Commissioner for Germany — as president of the oldest and most distinguished university in America, Dr. Pusey was the head of Lawrence College in Wisconsin. The total enrollment of Lawrence was 800 students; it was a good college, but hardly an impressive one.

Aside from Pusey's personal qualifications and his capability as a force to direct the shifting tide of the times, one factor in his appointment was undoubtedly his relation to the Junior Senator from Wisconsin. It seems more than co-incidental that the two should have come from the same small city, and that Pusey should have been a leading figure in the local campaign against one Joseph R. McCarthy.

When asked his opinion of the latest developments in that particular crisis in the U.S., Dr. Pusey's answer was a thoughtful one. "It seems that the issues raised last year in respect to the Junior Senator have become almost completely quiescent now. I hope — and I believe — that they will remain so. The time of his widespread popular support has gone by, and he will never regain quite the same power."

"His sun," concluded Dr. Pusey, "is setting fast."

The Harvard President, since his appointment to that office, has been raised from the level of a local opponent to a national one. His prominence in the respect was not diminished by the charges that, "he is worse than a Communist; in posing as an anti-Communist, he is the Communist's best friend."

"I feel very strongly," said Dr. Pusey, "that the American universities have not given religion the attention within the university community that it deserves."

"We are experiencing now a wide-spread awareness of this need, and an attempt to counteract it. This is not reactionary; it is just an awareness of the place of religion in human life."

The Harvard President went so far as to say that any university graduate who is at the same time

London Calling

One-Eye Tells All

I am snickering up my sleeves at these schmoe who claim that my blues are a cinch to get smeared by these Horsies with the purple faces down in London. Who is there that is knowing better than me what is about to be happening on the battlefronts of the giddle iron the world over. I alone am being supreme in my craft, being as there is no better bookie than me on the Varsity Campus, in fact there is being no other bookie. So I am being unchallenged in my rule.

Before I stumble around to the topic of my sure-fire predictions for the playings on Saturday let me just blow off a little steam about the slight that is being done me last Saturday, which is being with irony the day of my great success with forecasts. These louts from the Varsity, after they are spending the whole week babbling about the big float they are honouring me with in the Homecoming Parade, are getting soused up at the last three days and are doing nothing.

Now, you are listening very close. After much consultation with my spies and other despicable cohorts I am sure of the outcome of the Queen's McGill game. My agents are giving me the word that the fix is out in that match. The McGills are going to have to wait for the Western game at the very end to win their first of the year. Queen's will take the deal by five touchdowns and some converts. There may be a single or two tossed in, but the McGills are getting borscht. Also, maybe they are getting a little bit killed.

These purples from Western are being put out to pasture after this game with my dear Blues. They are certainly having no chance to prattle about flying out to Vancouver, unless they are doing same on their new water-wings, or maybe on the bird that they are getting from the Blues this Saturday. But, so that no one is having a chance to call me biased, which I am being only slightly, I give the Westerns two touches with maybe a singleton in converts. To the Blues, in my extreme generosity I am giving three touchdowns and the distinction of being the first Varsity team to win in Western since 1936. The Blues are not being very impressed with my call. People are saying it is because I am too conservative. Some rabid Blue supporters are predicting four or five touches for their team.

I am being noncommittal on this point, and saying only that they could be right, but please to be quiet since they could upset the betting odds and cut down my take. Also I am saying to one and all that I am buying plane tickets for Vancouver. Do not ask me what for, as I am being very close-mouthed right now.

Smaller And Smaller

The increasing ability of man to see objects decreasing in size, will be the subject of the next CBC-University television programme, "Exploring Minds", at six this Sunday, will deal with the difficulties which man has overcome in developing the microscope to its present state.

The programme, which will be jointly directed by Professor Ham of the Department of Anatomy and Professor Scott of the Department of Physics, will in part show a film of microscopes from the earliest one to the electron. (The first electron microscope was built at McLennan Laboratory at Toronto.)

During the programme, the fundamental principles of light will be illustrated by dramatic means. The medium of a ballet is being used to express them, said Professor Harris, of University College.

This week's television programme is the fourth one done by the University of Toronto this year.

English Is Better At UC

Fewer Failures Of Frosh

Commenting on the results of the remedial English exam recently held at University College, Professor Harris of the English department said "My general impression is that on the whole the results are better this year than those of last year."

Of the 491 students that wrote the exam, nearly 6% got an A, over 17% got a B, nearly 39% got a C, about 14% got a D, and about 23% failed. Last year over 42% failed.

"This year the exam was more definite and systematic; there was less vagueness," Professor Harris stated. He said, however, that there was not as much difference in the results of this year and last as the 19% drop in the failure rate would indicate.

He attributed part of the improvement to the fact that this year the exam was held later. Students were warned they would have to submit an essay plan, he said.

The Department of English will provide tutorial instruction for those who failed the exam, and are enrolled in an English course at University College, Professor Harris reported. All those enrolled in first-year at UC, as well as first year members of three other faculties wrote the exam. The University of Toronto is the only university in Canada which does not require all students to take a least one course in English, said Professor Harris.

All students will have an opportunity to see their papers and discuss them with members of the English department, the professor said. He said that such a plan was new this year. The reason for the discussion was to show the student the "weaknesses in his work, he said.

Professor Harris also stated that under a new ruling of the Department of Education, the high school fifth-form English course will be slightly changed this year. All fifth-form students will have to write two essays, each over 1000 words in length, during the year.

Prof Foretells Atomic Future

"Atomic power will never replace water power in the production of electricity, but it will in ten or fifteen years be used instead of coal, which now produces most of Canada's power," said Dean A. R. Gordon here yesterday. He was speaking on "Current Aspects of Atomic Energy", as part of a public lecture series. The development stage of atomic power requires a great deal of money from the taxpayers, he said. However, this is the cheapest and best insurance we have for Canada's future, Dean Gordon added.

Dean Gordon, head of the chemistry department and dean of the School of Graduate Studies, stated that authorities estimate there will be a deficiency in fuel oil and natural gas reserves around the end of this century, and a deficiency of coal later. Reserves of nuclear fuels are comparatively much greater. Therefore, we must develop cheap atomic power to satisfy civilization's great appetite for energy, especially electrical."

Dean Gordon stated some problems of atomic engines. The first atomic engines will be expensive, but will be developed until they cost less than coal, he said.

Dean Gordon also explained briefly atomic structure and atomic reactors or piles in a simplified way.

Hindsight is No Improvement According to Campus Debaters

Hindsight is evidently not a helluvah lot better than foresight, according to the St. Mike's-Law debaters, although they rejected yesterday the motion — Resolved that: "If we had as much foresight as we have hindsight, we would be better off by a damn sight."

Speaking for the Senate Club of St. Mike's, in the affirmative, Norm Stefnitz said: "The stagnation of civilization today must progress, and to progress we must not rely upon the follies of the past." He also stated that: "Hindsight was the folly of man throughout the ages, it is the folly of man today . . . if we rely upon hindsight, we cannot 'use foresight.'" His colleague, James Daly, set forth the stand of the government: "If we employ foresight before we act, we will not have to explain our failure by hindsight."

The opposition, consisting of Lou Tepper and Norm Stoner of the School of Law, maintained that "Humanity has been and is now beset by the same problems as always, experience is simply the name we give our mistakes. Since we haven't profited by hindsight, an equal amount of foresight would still be inadequate."

No Aping of Twenty's Hacks Priestly Advises U.C. Club

Creative writers ought to stop trying to ape third-rate poets of the 1920's.

This was Professor F. E. L. Priestly's advice here last night to the first meeting this year of University College's Modern Letters Club. The club is made up of a group of students interested in modern literature and creative writing.

Professor Priestly, a member of the U.C. English Department, declared that the best way to learn writing — or to learn how to appreciate good literature — was by writing oneself.

He hoped the club would not

Acadia Withdraws

And McGill Remains in NFCUS

(CUP) — McGill Students' Council last Wednesday night agreed to pay the full 50 cent per capita fee to The National Federation of Canadian University Students.

At the same time, Acadia University of Wolfville, Nova Scotia, announced its withdrawal from NFCUS. Doug Trider, a former NFCUS Chairman and an official of the Acadia Students' Council, said "NFCUS is a paper organization with a paper membership."

Trider also criticized the lack of concrete action from NFCUS. The withdrawal of Acadia cuts the membership of NFCUS to 22 Universities. Montreal University also withdrew a short time ago from NFCUS on much the same grounds.

The McGill Council accepted a recommendation of the McGill delegates to the recent NFCUS conference in Toronto that McGill should pay the full 50 cent fee. A vote of McGill students last spring had authorized the payment of the newly increased fee should the report on this year's NFCUS Conference be favourable. The NFCUS Conference also adopted a resolution that Toronto would be dropped from the national students association unless the SAC could guarantee the payment of the full 50 cent fee for 1955-56 by next Jan. 31. Toronto students are at present paying 20 cents a student to NFCUS.

a religious illiterate could be termed a "monster."

Concerning student government, Dr. Pusey said that he considered it neither a right or a privilege, but, rather, "like all governments, a responsibility."

"There is a growing sense in Harvard of a transcendence of local and even national bounds. You might call it an international flavour, a sense of belonging to the wider community of undergraduates."

Frost Opens Residence

Kingston (CUP).—In a brief ceremony Saturday morning at Leonard Field, Queen's University, Premier Leslie Frost of Ontario declared the Cornerstone of the first men's residence "to be well and truly laid."

Dr. W. A. MacIntosh, Principal of the University, in his opening address, welcomed Premier Frost, and said that aid from the provincial government through capital grants had always been instrumental in the development of Queen's.

Dr. MacIntosh expressed satisfaction with the progress on the building, which will house approximately 180 freshmen next year. This is the first unit in a larger project.

Frost remembered how his own student days were affected by the aftermath of World War I, and regretted "the void created by a lack of association with university life and opportunities to meet people."

The premier also noted the rapid growth of school populations, and predicted that within a few years over a million students, with a greater proportion at university level, would be in provincial schools. He commended the work of educators, and gave assurance that the province would continue to aid the universities as much as possible.

GILSON Continued from page 1 our time, have had an active part in the founding of the Medieval Institute here at Toronto."

Dr. Smith described Professor Gilson as "a star in our academic crown — and a grand person, too."

"Professor Gilson's contribution to St. Michael's," said the Very Reverend L. K. Shook, President of that College, and also a witness to the Convocation ceremonies, "in setting up the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies on this campus, is one which we will never be able to acknowledge fully, no matter how long or how often we try."

"Columbia University has recognized his contribution to life and thought in America," continued Father Shook. "His friends can only be happy at the event."

This Convocation was the third and most important of the bi-centennial year. The others tended to emphasize the university picture of the United States; this one was sprinkled with foreign names and dignitaries representing Universities from Heidelberg to Pisa. Prof. Gilson was the only Canadian to receive a degree.

One of the writers in "Le Carabin", publication of Laval University students, has criticized the editor of The Varsity for making an agreement with the Press and Information Department of the International Union of Students.

This agreement has the editor sending extracts from our paper to that department in order that incidents pertaining to Canadian students might be, at least, written by them.

The editor of The Varsity is convinced that to remain aloof from these organizations which represent a significant portion of the student population of the world is arrant bigotry.

Secondly, the agreement was made with the preamble to the recommendations of the Press Commission of the Moscow Conference in mind.

This preamble reads, "The Press Commission agrees that in the editing and production of students' publications the goal is to produce an objective and representative publication which will reflect the life, activities and opinions of students".

Part two of the recommendations of the Press Commission reads, "PID is to continue to improve the level of the News Service, to make every effort to obtain news items from the widest and most representative sources."

We must admit that we have never acted in good faith in our relations with this organization and we are as open to charges of refusing to co-operate as we maintain they are.

Hopefuls

The mid-term elections in the United States of America have left President Eisenhower without control in either the Senate or the House of Representatives.

One of the most significant results of the elections will be the removal of Senator J. McCarthy of Wisconsin from the chairmanship of the Investigation Committee.

McCarthy will remain as the ranking Republican on the committee. However, his power will be considerably restricted.

It is certain that a victory for the Republican Party would have been interpreted as a victory for Senator McCarthy. How this recent development is to be regarded is in doubt.

Some will blame the defeat on the splitting of the party over the McCarthy issue. Others will lay it at the door of John Foster Dulles and his foreign policy. And still others will consider it a rejection of the Republicans' domestic policy.

There are few who will call it a victory for the Democratic Party. It is rather a defeat for the Republicans.

The hopeful will say, of course, that the Americans have at last repudiated their customary hero-worship. They may be right.

germany and the west

By N. J. P. MELNICK

Germany is still the most interesting country in Europe to-day — if only in a bizarre way. Ever since the defeat of E.D.C. by the French assembly, we have been left with the inescapable problem of Germany. And the problem simply stated is this: Is it more dangerous, all things considered, to give them sovereignty or to deny it?

In America, where we have not the lingering memories of a war coming through our roof tops, where we still have vitality and optimism and can afford to be idealistic, any denial of their sovereignty would seem retrogressive and quite unthinkable.

The United States however is most singleminded about the inclusion of Germany within the framework of some supranational defense plan. They seem to have forgotten with astounding ease the Germanic flaws which allowed a Hitler and provided History with the blackest example of the corruptibility of the human conscience, shattering for all time the myth of progress. In fact they seem now to be set on making Germany their "principle continental ally". They have been quite unable to conceal their lack of patience and disappointment where France is concerned. Ever since the defeat of E.D.C., they have been so stunned into silence that British diplomacy has been allowed to take the initiative in negotiations. And has achieved amazing results.

The feeling against France has been strong amongst most of the "European minded" everywhere. France is seen as a stumbling block, it is said to be blindly insular and uncooperative in holding up the unification of Europe. But France is a brilliant nation of extreme individualists who are passionately fond of freedom and their country. For them to give up their sovereignty and to compromise with their national individuality is especially difficult — no matter how elevated the cause. This is particularly undesirable for the Frenchman when he views Britain's heretofore scrupulous avoidance of entering into any international economic pools and other commitments which would deprive her of any of her sovereign right and economic interests.

France's greatest fear, that of German militarism, is a most legitimate one and one which the Americans are perhaps regarding too lightly. I have recently spent several months studying and travelling in Germany and I have been impressed with the phenomenal recovery of its cities and industry. I too experienced a certain common sympathy with the German qualities of order, diligence, honesty, and discipline and can understand why the Americans would be so inclined to throw in their lot behind Germany: the first impression of most Anglo Saxons of Germany is usually quite favourable . . . especially after a surface acquaintance with it and because Germany to-day is down and is lame. It is suppressed and worried with occupation by the armies of 4 or 5 countries. But Germany has begun to stir; it is becoming stronger and with this strength are appearing many of their old familiar and less desirable traits.

For the past 400 years there has existed a political irresponsibility in Germany. There has been a distinct separation all this time between public affairs and the spiritual and cultural element of the country. The German state has remained aloof from the spirit, and this schism has grown steadily for the past 50 years until Hitler became its classical expression. Until 1933 the "two Germanys" lived in mere separation. Hitler divorced them. As a result the people still remain uneducated politically; and what is worse, the events of the last war have made the mere mention of things political, repugnant.

Although many of the German qualities that were commented on by the Roman historian Tacitus in 98 A.D. are still true to-day, the German character has undergone a radical change. For centuries Germany has been the battleground of Europe. It has been ravaged, pillaged, and destroyed by rampaging armies time and time again, and in the last 35 years it has experienced the hunger, suffering, and privation that followed their defeat in two world conflicts. The German people are, because of this, a vastly insecure, serious, and worried people, lacking self-assurance. They have always been restless, now they tend to be opportunists . . . they are ever volatile and dangerous.

Sense Of Humour

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Christianity has notoriously been one of the most narrow-minded and persecuting of all religions. Some of this narrow-mindedness has been shown in letters criticizing the Varsity for publishing an article lampooning Billy Graham. Surely the same right which allows these offended Christians to express these views in print will not be denied by them to the cartoonist.

Is Christian faith built on such shaky foundations that it cannot afford a sense of humour?

I do not believe that the cartoon or the article was meant as a slur upon Christians or upon Dr. Graham. But even had they been so meant I feel that one is entitled to express his views no matter whom they offend. How can Christians expect their treatment of non-Christians to win them the latter's approval?

Every Sunday, for example, a group of "Christians" known as the Lord's Day Alliance forces its views upon non-sympathizers. This group has made the insipidity of Toronto's Sundays a byword. If we heathens must have your way of life crammed down our throats at least, Dear Christians, give us freedom of expression in the Varsity. Writing letters to it is all we've got left to do on Sundays.

Yours irreligiously,
Pogo.

Fully Justified

The Editor,
The Varsity.

In "The Varsity" of Nov. 2, Mr. J. R. Mayer implies that a person who attempts to dispose of a number of copies of a campus newspaper he doesn't like is fully justified in doing so if "the vast majority of the public" feels the same way. Leaving aside the problem of how Mr. Mayer has succeeded in studying the minds of this vast majority, one must come to the essential question: doesn't he think that this public is capable of deciding for itself what action to take? There seems to be the underlying fear that some people will probably read the "Comment" unless they are deprived of this opportunity.

Obviously what they need is a guardian, an Omniscient Spirit, who knows what is best for everybody and walks away with the bundle of the "Comment" when nobody sees it. Here, perhaps, you happen to overlook the danger involved. Resorting to the last attempt to cut your opponent "off the air", as it were, may easily give the public the undesired impression that you were not able to counter your opponent's arguments in any other way.

Scandinaviana

"To create surroundings which satisfy the needs of modern man and simply and naturally fulfill practical and esthetic requirements — and not least to teach people to realize the value of such surroundings . . . has been our ideal, and, however imperfect the result, this ideal has inspired us." From the catalogue for the exhibition — Design in Scandinavia, at the Museum, this sentence expresses, fully the atmosphere generated by the exhibition. Resulting from the co-operative efforts of a group of American and Canadian Museums which have formed a special circuit, the exhibition was completely designed and selected in the four Scandinavian countries: Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Finland. It includes displays of objects for everyday use — cutlery, glassware, china, contemporary handicraft work, fine work in ceramics, glass, silver, wood, textiles, and also furniture, lighting fixtures, rugs, also some photographs of the Scandinavian countries, and Scandinavian homes. The high quality of design and execution contrasts with that of most articles produced on this continent for the popular market; our similar climate and other living conditions make this comparison striking.

Even more so than in Canada, the climate has forced the focus of living in Scandinavia to the private home. A consequence has been the development of a critical home market for everyday articles. Furthermore, a smaller market has not allowed the development of true mass production as distinct from hand crafted products. Non-profit design associations in the four countries provide close communication between artist-designer, manufacturer and the consumers, and also help disseminate new ideas. All these factors contribute to a standard of design that must make most Scandinavian homes superior in comfort and beauty to our own.

The common tendency of the designers is to allow the material to dictate its form and finish. The laminations of plywood are exposed to give character to wooden trays and bowls; cup and saucer of bone china are undecorated, the free-flowing forms are complete in themselves. Furniture is a delight of abstract form from without and of comfort from within. The demands of quantity manufacture, aesthetic satisfaction, and useability are combined to determine the final product. All of you, especially the engineers, should see this exhibition.

THE DORSEY BROS.

This isn't one of the Royal Alexandra's better weeks. The current vaudeville show, entitled "The Fabulous Dorseys", put together by Gerald Peters of Memory Music Hall notoriety and consisting of one-half Canadian variety acts and one-half the Dorseys' package show, is prevented from being a complete debacle only by the musicianship of those same fabulous (that may be the right word, you know) brothers, Jimmy and Tommy, and the orchestra behind them.

It took some saving. That first segment of Canadian entertainers is a good example of what had vaudeville sounding its death rattle. And the Dorseys are an equally good example of what put some life back in the old codger.

Jimmy and Tommy, re-united after many years of intra-family feuding, are everything entertainers should be — talented, inventive, relaxed, with a generous dash of showmanship. By the time they wind things up with a Dixieland session, that is vigorous if nothing else, you begin to feel that you weren't lured into the place under false pretences. Which is a good kind of a feeling to leave a theatre with.

Not that the Dorseys take many chances in this show. They hew to a line of their own established hits. Tommy leads the band first in such numbers as Sunny Side of the Street, Opus No. 1 and Song of India, all T.D. trademarks. These are the well-known arrangements with little deviation, except in Boogie Woogie, which features a splendid piano solo. You'll be happy to know that the Dorsey trombone, is as silky as ever.

Decorative monkeys made of teak wood. Designed to be hung from the ceiling or wall. They were made by Kay Joensen, Copenhagen, and are part of the Scandinavian display in the Royal Ontario Museum until Nov. 27.

Jimmy, plus saxophone, takes over for Green Eyes and then presides in the two-beat seance. It's all mighty familiar, you see, but who's complaining?

Lynn Roberts and Bill Raymond are the band's vocalists and are just mediocre enough to reach the top of the hit parade some day. Miss Roberts, it must be said, is exceedingly beautiful which always makes up for a multitude of faults.

That second segment had to be a strong antidote for the earlier portion which was spotty, to say the least. First came Dennis and Maxine, dancers. They're very ordinary. Frank Kenny, a xylophonist is extraordinary — he plays Stardust badly, and that's a real achievement, not even Liberace can do that.

The Marquettes manipulate their marionettes with a certain amount of dexterity but little distinction and Jerry Leader emulates Danny Kaye with an encouraging lack of success. He should know better.

Special mention must be made, however, of Joe Battaglia and Joan Fairfax, both of whom are excellent and worthy representatives of Canada in this international revue. Joe, the 13-year-old winner of the recent Red Feather talent contest, is a precocious little singer, very good but with exaggerated gestures. Miss Fairfax looks and sounds well.

This twice-nightly effort lasted through Thursday evening. This information is for Dorsey fans. Next week: The Caine Mutiny Court Martial. That's for theatre fans.

Mendelssohn And Marshall

The Mendelssohn Choir concert in Massey Hall last Wednesday turned into another Lois Marshall night. The soprano received an ovation even before she sang Godfrey Ridout's Cantiones Mysticae. She performed the songs with her usual musicianship and floating top notes. The major work on the program, Brahms' German Requiem displayed Miss Marshall's hallmarks, intense religious fervour and an eerie, almost disembodied voice quality. George Farrow, baritone, had the dubious privilege of singing against Miss Marshall in the Requiem. He was competent.

The choir, under Sir Ernest MacMillan, was, understandably, at the beginning of the season, not all that could be desired. They did produce some good crescendi and diminuendi in the second chorus where the balance was particularly good. Their loud passages were always rousing. Throughout the evening, however, there was a tendency to lose the inside parts, and sloppy attacks and finishes sometimes resulted in a disconcerting succession of sibilants.

The orchestra managed some surprisingly lovely effects especially in pianissimo violin passages and in the viola solo. On the other hand the string section was usually a trifle tinny to do justice to Brahms' mellowness.

For the Canadian premiere of Williams' Fantasia on the Old 104th Psalm tune the orchestra and choir were joined by pianist George Brough. Together they provided a spirited finale for the concert.

h h. five o'clock concert

Many people braved the rain and wind of Toronto at 5.00 o'clock, Wednesday, to hear the recital of Helena Biloshesky at Hart House. The young violinist has been studying with Eli Spivak since her arrival in Canada from Poland. She is now enrolled in the Artists' Diploma Course at the Royal Conservatory of Music.

Miss Biloshesky opened her programme with the first movement of the Tchaikovsky violin Concerto. In the most favorable circumstances this is a work which would break many experienced performers. This violinist showed only occasionally the effects of opening with such an exacting number and struggling against the sometimes erratic rhythms of her accompanist. With a well-controlled and rich tone Miss Biloshesky began the concerto. The excellence of her tone was not maintained, however, in the passages of technical difficulty. Most admirable were the young violinist's intensity and sensitive phrasing in the melodic sections. An otherwise well-played Cadenza was marred by unclear harmonics and unfortunately in the dramatic close of the movement the violinist's task was made impossible by the necessity of following her accompanist, Miss Shipman, to a hazardous end.

The Nocturne in C sharp Minor, transcribed from a piano composition of Chopin was a pleasant interlude in a programme of violin gymnastics. The intonation and tone of Miss Biloshesky were at their best in this number.

The Caprice No. 24 of Paganini was another very difficult work of showmanship. The double-stopping was excellent and one had the feeling that the Caprice was more within the grasp of the young artist than was the Tchaikovsky Concerto. Miss Biloshesky's playing of Kimsy-Korsakoff's flight of the Bumble Bee was precise and even brilliant although she and her accompanist once again failed to come to terms.

Although Miss Biloshesky's performance was not technically impeccable she showed skill and musicianship which certainly assure a promising future.

Critic in the Dark

Rear Window

Grace Kelly is an exceptionally beautiful woman, even when seen through Jimmie Stewart's telephoto lens. Jimmie uses said lens in his recent movie, Rear Window, showing at Shea's Theatre. In this picture he plays a photographer who has spent his years snapping shots in trouble spots around the world, and Miss Kelly is the love of his life, trying to make him forget his travel fever so that he can settle down with her. Jimmie, incredibly, hesitates.

At the time of the Rear Window incident, Miss Kelly has plenty of time to work on her project, with Jimmie, stuck in a wheel-chair, his leg broken and in a cast. This immobility likewise confines the movie's action to his apartment and whatever can be seen through its rear, picture window. In the interest of realism, Rear Window avoids giving the audience behind the scenes peeks, restricting the view to normal vision, showing nothing more than what is seen by Jimmie or his lady.

This requires the show to rely on the ancient technique of the Silent Era, pantomime. Making the matter more difficult, most of the pantomime is shown at long range, setting an unusually heavy load both upon the speaking actors and the interest of the movie in general. I find it a pain to watch foreign language pictures when I have to rely on the English titles with the babble on the screen meaning nothing to me, and even newsreels are sometimes boring, despite the lively narration that goes with them. Rear Window, largely pantomime though it is, has no titles, really no narration, and holds the audience right to the finish.

One reason for the great interest of the show is the crew of characters brought into focus by the telephoto lens. Flitting about the apartment house court, from window to window, the camera shows, first a developing dipsomaniac, a light-footed and lighter brained dancer whose taste in boyfriends runs to large bank accounts with grey hair, a struggling composer who hits the gravy and is hit by the friends that cluster around it, a newly-wed pair that are very retiring, and last a poorly married couple that provide the murder for amateur sleuth Jimmie to solve.

All this is worked with exceptional vividness, which may be attributed by some to the director or to the story, but I felt that it was just the easy brilliance of the two stars that achieved the air of reality.

Restricted as the Rear Window was in its area of action, there was no need for Cinemascope or any of the other saddle-spread photography now in vogue. Happily Hollywood stuck to the old style 'miniature' screen, but they used colour. To me it seemed that an even stronger effect could have been gained by shooting the movie in straight black and white but this is minor and doesn't take anything away from the picture.

Following the Caine Mutiny is a rough job for any movie, but Rear Window should do as well as Shea's as its brilliant predecessor.

BLUES AGAINST THE MUSTANGS

Speaking OF SPORT

BY MOISHE REITER

Four weeks more and Football is over on this campus. The four weeks will give us time to watch the Blues knock off Western, Queen's, then Queen's again and, then off to Vancouver for the Canadian title. This may sound like wishful thinking, the odds being against Varsity to win even this Saturday, but there's more to the Blues than they've shown this year. If the Western Mustangs are expecting to play the same team that tied them in the first game, they are to be surprised. The Blues are improved and need to win.

Skirts and Hoops . . .

... once went together, that is until a man named Naismith found a better use for hoops. Now human flagpoles dunk basketballs through netted steel hoops and Benny of the famed One Eye makes a fortune on contests of this skill.

Varsity Blues of the basketball court aren't waiting for football season to close. They've been at work on a project for bringing the Wilson Cup to Hart House for this year. Practising three nights a week with Dal White the Blues are starting to shape up as a powerful club and, if they can turn out the tall men they need, Western and Assumption may have to give up their joint ownership of the championship.

With most of last year's good team back and several older and a few new men out this season, the Blues have much to build with. There is an abundance of fine small men and Varsity looks to be the best outfit in Intercollegiate ball as far as guards are concerned. Pete Potter and Leo Madden are back after a year as stars with nearly Canadian champs Tri-Bells and another Tri-Bell, and a former Varsity man as well is John Braithwaite, as good a ball handler as the College League will see. Returning after a year at McMaster is Don Fawcett, a Varsity star of two years back who is one of the better defensive, and for that matter one of the better offensive men on the Varsity club.

While the team is good on paper and known to be good in play there is one great trouble that their ability can not overcome. Good as they may be, they still have to play half their games on the Hart House splinter and the other half on decent-sized courts. At home the small court enables them to use their effective zone defense which few opponents have managed to break. Then let them go away for a game and they have the zone pulled apart.

The trouble is that the team will have to be quite outstanding to master a varying defense adequately. Without a good defense for the big courts they can only lose, unless they come up with the team of the century. It's too early now, but from the lineup they may do just that.

Small Stuff . . .

... Trinity's Black Panthers, currently the class of Interfaculty Football, play two games over the weekend. Waterloo is for Friday night and Saturday morning on the field outside Little Memorial Stadium, they take on Huron School. Squash team goes to play Western in London this weekend.

... Sports Staffers are requested to report at the Office this lunch hour for a clinic and analysis of the week's papers and makeup. Please all turn out.

Interfac and Soccer

There were two games on tap in soccer action on the front campus yesterday. Dents defeated Pre-Meds 2-0 on goals by Harper and Mraz. St. Mike's and Jr. SPS battled to a one all draw. Ramos scored for St. Mike's and Kyranis for SPS. Last Wednesday UC defeated Sr. SPS 5-0 as Rintoul sparked UC with three goals. Dysart and Chinchin added singletons.

There was only one game scheduled yesterday in volleyball activity and that game was taken by Sr. UC over St. Mike's A team 15-5 and 15-12. Last Wednesday saw a full card of games slated. SPS 8 defeated SPS 7 by scores of 15-3 and 15-5. 1st year Meds had little more difficulty in ousting SPS 4 by scores of 9-15, 15-2 and 15-2. Pre-Med 2A defeated UC 4 15-2, 12-15 and 15-8. Wy-cliffe took a set from Architecture A 4-15, 15-10 and 15-6. St. Mike's C team defaulted to Vic 8. Trinity A defeated Jr. Vic 15-7, 14-16, and 15-5.

High scores featured the two lacrosse games played yesterday. UC 1. trounced Meds 1 9-3. Watson was the big gun for UC getting 6 goals while team-mates Riley, Patterson and Stephen added singletons. Kerr, Urquhart and Jones scored for the losers. St. Mike's A team handed Trinity A's a set-back by virtue of their 14-9 triumph. McKinnon was the big gun for St. Mike's as he scored 6 goals. Wheeler netted four and Russell added three more. Tighe added the lone tally. For Trinity, Webber and Patterson each scored three goals. Riesbury scored two and Goodwin one.

Varsity Faces Western Jinx Must Win, Tie to Stay Alive

The jinx of tradition and injuries favour the Western Mustangs in the game at London tomorrow, but One-Eyed Benny and a surging team-spirit favour the Varsity Blues. A loss tomorrow puts the Blues out of the betting and even a victory assures them of nothing but a chance at the title, but all these Blues want is a chance. They'll do the rest.

The great weak link in the first game with Western was the Varsity line, and that has been improved greatly since that opening game. If the Westerns have any ideas about ploughing through the line the way they did back in October they ought to know that the Blue line has grown up and is ready for whatever comes at them. At centre John Wismer and John Prendergast are a strong pair while Bob Waugh and Earl Ford at the guard spots have been distinguished all season and now that

All Varsity sports writers, both male and female, are requested to report to the Varsity office to-day at 1:15. This will be an important meeting to analyze past work and place assignments for the following week. A clinic will be conducted in page make-up at the same time. It is essential that all those who are at present working with the sports department be present for this meeting.

the tackles such as Al Macklin, Al Watt, Bill Beamish and Jack Strapp are producing the way they were expected to and better, the Blue line is a formidable unit. At ends, though they have lost Fred Smaile, for this game, the Varsitys have enough strength to carry them against the Mustangs. In George Stulac they have one of the best blocking, and pass-catching ends of a long time, while the ability of Don Smith is well-known.

Vic Wins Again Still Undeclared

By JOHN VOJTECH

"A team that won't be beat can't be beat." So goes the old saying and how this does apply to the football team of Victoria College. Yesterday on a field covered with mud, water and young doctors, the men of Vic surged back from a five point deficit in the remaining three minutes of the game to come up with a lucky but deserved win. This doesn't mean that the Meds team sat down on its haunches for most of the game after scoring first in the second quarter. They battled and they fought hard for fifty-seven minutes of the game, but they had played over their heads. Meds have nothing to say against their team. They came up with their finest showing of the year. Another three minutes and the victory would have been Meds and an upset would have belonged to them. The Vic team on the other hand was just a mite too powerful for the young medics and that power eventually wore the Med team down. The Meds have nothing to be ashamed of, for they lost to a better team. Lady Luck could have smiled either way in those last three minutes.

The only pass completed in the first quarter was made by Meds as John Hamilton passed to Lorimer. Other passes went astray for the simple reason that no receiver could run fast enough or stop fast enough in the quagmire once called the back campus. Another example is Meds Birkett. He had an opening in the line that you could drive a truck through, but he was unable to get any traction from the slippery ground. The efforts of his charging linemen went down the drain.

Norm Williams, Vic's ace half back gained twelve yards through the centre of the line in the second quarter by pushing, shaking and finally sliding. The first break of the game went to Meds as they recovered a Vic fumble on the Vic twenty-five. Coppolino brought them down to the three-yard line. Hamilton on a quarterback sneak went over for the major. The convert was unsuccessful.

The second half started and a spirited Meds team marched out onto the field determined to hold off all Vic thrusts. But just as Lady Luck had smiled on them, she began to smile on Vic. Led by Ebenhardt, the Vic team came time and time again into Meds territory but each time they were thrown back.

The beginning of the fourth quarter saw Vic standing on the Meds four-yard line. Frisbey, Williams and Bertram had brought the Vic team that far, but they were to be denied by the efforts of Cecutti, Wheeler and Stipeck. The Vic team tried three times to get the ball over the goal line, twice from the one-yard line, but the Meds twelve-man line kept them out.

Colts at Baby Blues First Place is Prize

To-day's Intermediate football clash rings down the curtain on another season of football wars for Varsity's Baby Blues. Traditionally the unsung heroes of inter-collegiate football the Seconds have hung up a fine record in the last three years, only to be halted last week-end by Western. The power of the Colts is not to be denied, but the Baby Blues have proven to be no small collection of boy's themselves.

The Western Intermediate squad, featuring the same Diamond-T as the Seniors, unleashed a ground attack that caught the Blues off stride last Saturday. But Toronto also has a few surprises in store for the invaders. Coach Jack Kennedy has drilled the team this past week on a defensive formation well calculated to stop the likes of Casanova and Hillier in their tracks.

The weather conditions during the last game proved a very effective damper to both Varsity's running and passing attack. Sporting the strongest passing attack in the league, Toronto could, under the able direction of either Larry Joynt or Tom Hamilton, give the Western defenders a busy afternoon. The heavy going in London also proved a major factor in holding the usually speedy Varsity backs in check. Drier conditions this afternoon will mean only further trouble in store for the Colts.

The game to-day, featuring the two strongest teams, will provide a rousing end to the season. With revenge in their hearts and the means to accomplish it, the Baby Blues will play with the same spirit and determination shown all week in practise. Ramsell, Mucci, and Hugo will be back in action for the encounter and Kennedy will go with all the strength at hand to end the season in victory.

Harrier Notes

Tomorrow morning at ten o'clock, University of Toronto harrier runners will battle for supremacy in the University Championships. This meet will serve a dual purpose. It will be the means of selecting the two Intercollegiate teams, as well as deciding the individual and inter-faculty team championships. The team championship will be decided on a low score basis for a four-man team.

Unlike former years, this meet will be open to all undergraduates, thus including those who have competed for either the senior or Intermediate Intercollegiate teams.

Herb Tilson, number one man on the Blues exhibition team, will be a favourite to win the event. Other runners who are expected to turn in a top performance are: Bill Gelling, Bill Eckersey, Peter Watson, Bruce Hughes and Gord Hueston.

The race will start at a point just south of the Bloor Street entrance to Hyde Park.

HOCKEY BLUES MEETING MARLIES

Forward Lines Are Powerful Defense And Goal Look Good

For the benefit of all you people who aren't going to be in London to watch the Blues swamp the Mustangs, Varsity's Hockey Blues are playing an exhibition game tomorrow night in Dixie Arena at 8:00. All proceeds of the game will be for the promotion of minor hockey leagues.

After only six practices the Blues can hardly be expected to make a showing against their first opposition, the Marlboros. The Marlies have been making a more than fair showing in OHA Junior A play thus far. However the enthusiasm is running high in Varsity Arena these evenings, as positions on the team will be hard to come by with such an array of talent.

The Marlboros have a very strong team; their best player is a clever stickhandler named Bill Harris, who is strangely enough a student at Varsity.

Johnny Albani in goal brings several years of Junior experience to the Leafs' farm club, while Mike Nykoluk, Mike Eliak, and a seventeen year old speedster from Leaside High School, Billy Kennedy, add to the forward strength. Al McNeil, Bob Baun, and Bob Duncan are a trio of hard defencemen who will patrol the blueline against the Blues tomorrow night.

For this first encounter, Coaches Harry Griffiths and Jack Wheldrake will dress five rearguards, ten forwards and the two goaltenders now trying out for the team. Dave Reid will centre one line, flanked by Clare Fisher and Paul Knox. The two other lines will put Ernie Bodnar, Don Cossar, and John Akitt on one, and Roblogie, Tom Riley and John Bark on the other into action. Mert Wright, Bill Moreau, Dave Jackson, Sam Ashton, Lou Appleby, John Tolton will cover the blueline for the Blues, while Hugh Curry and Con Lister will be on hand for the netminding duties.

Meet Big Blue Al

The big Blue Team this year has relied heavily on graduates from the Intermediate champions of 1953. One of their most highly rated rookies is a large and lanky tackle, Al Watt. It's a long jump from Intermediate to Senior competition but, after an understandably slow start Al has shown that he belongs in Senior ball.

His high school career was a highly successful one. In 4 years of football at Guelph C.I. Al played on 2 Junior and 2 Senior Championship squads. Although always a tackle, he probably holds the league record for the highest scoring back per carry. Substituted at halfback for 1 play after Guelph had run up a big lead, Al promptly romped to a touchdown. His other sports include curling and basketball.

Al feels that the added size and experience of the opposition is the big difference between high school and college ball. He hasn't had much trouble adjusting to the difference though and was an outstanding lineman on the Baby Blues last season. "Kilo" Watt is no midget, himself, standing 6' 3", and weighing 190 lbs.

A second year Mining Engineering student, Al is 20 and still a free man. He mentioned to this reporter that he has an unusual system for keeping in shape for football. He spends the summer on a farm, plowing. You don't think that's unusual?

Well, Al says that he doesn't bother with little details like horses or a tractor.

Swimming Women At Kingston Meet

The Intercollegiate swimming meet will take place in Kingston the week-end of November 27. This meet will include speed, diving, and synchronized contests, and the Varsity squad is expected to show well in all events; they have copped many championships in the past and have never finished worse than second.

Pat Laird, who starred for Queen's last season, will be wearing the blue and white colours this year and is expected to strengthen the Varsity team. Preparation practices for the meet will be held at the Etobicoke pool which is the official length, seventy-five feet.

Swimming coach Freddy Baxter is very pleased with the splendid turnout and the standard of swimming which has been shown this year. She was especially impressed by the inter-faculty meet held at Hart House last Saturday night, which has been taken in swimming by every faculty this year.

Competition in figures will be held at the John Innes pool on Spadina Avenue on Saturday, November 13; novice competition in solo routines will be held on Saturday, December 11. Any amateurs interested in either of these styles are asked to get in touch with Miss Baxter.

White Talks On Leisure At Skulemen's Banquet

SPS DINNER last night featured presentation of scholarships and addresses by Warden McCulley and guest speaker J. R. White, president of Imperial Oil.

Speaking on the keynote of the importance of the engineers to the nation, White stated that the most important problem facing us today is the constructive utilization of leisure time. Where the leisure class used to be a small majority, engineering improvements have engulfed it into a leisure mass.

Improved working conditions have increased production to an all time high. The engineers must accept the responsibility with what has come with modern improvements.

Prof Emphasizes Industrial Psych Profit Necessity

"Industrial Psychology" was the subject discussed at the Psychology Club's meeting last Wednesday evening. Under moderation Dr. R. C. Joyner of the Psychology Dept., Mr. O. Sorenson, Mr. D. Yule and Mr. H. Wismer, Canadian industrial psychologists, discussed the purpose, problems and opportunities of the psychologist in industry today.

The job of the industrial psychologist is "to help the organization make the profit," said Mr. Wismer. This he feels, can be accomplished only by aiding the "development of workers within the company" by using psychological techniques and by acting as a consultant to both workers and executives.

As a consultant, the psychologist's job is to help the supervisor become a better personnel manager, said Mr. Yule, by establishing a working relationship between the supervisor and the worker. Mr. Wismer pointed out that the actual hiring is up to the supervisor (concerned with meeting production standards). The psychologist has a personal problem; that of becoming "one" of the workers in order to aid in the development of the worker. If a personnel dept. ceased to feel obliged to the individual it would lose its purpose. The psychologist may have good ideas but these must gain the approval of the managers and in the end the ideas are greatly tempered to fit in with the practical aspects of the situation. However, the humanist element of industrial psychology cannot be eliminated no matter what profit motive lies at the head of industrial endeavour.

HH Caledon Hills Build New House

An all-Canadian dressing room addition will be built to the Finnish bath at Caledon Hills this weekend. Bosco Loncarevic, Chairman of the Caledon Committee announced last night.

The House will be equipped with a stove, some chairs, and a few coat hangers. "A day's work in the bush in crisp autumn weather is a healthy, relaxing experience which leaves one fresh for Monday morning lectures," said Gordon West, President of the Exploration Society, as he pleaded for skilled or unskilled workers, male or female.

No Tornado

Weather Box

"Tornado Expected. Floods, Sleet, and Blizzard." This was the weather forecast printed in last Wednesday's Varsity. We have decided that our amazing forecast did not excite the attention it deserved. In fact, we were forced to conclude that perhaps there were some who hadn't even read it. This was a situation that had to be investigated.

And so we are running another of our informative surveys. The question? Do you ever read the weather forecast? If you do, what do you think of the accuracy of the forecast?

Unfortunately, even the Varsity staffers do not seem to read it themselves. Said Michael Pengelly, Varsity News Editor, "No, never, never, never. I never read it."

At least one Masthead member reads our forecast. Bill Smyth said, "Yes, I think the forecasts are very accurate, just a little late!"

Of all the students interviewed, 66% did not read the forecast. The rest of those who admitted that they did read it, usually just laughed when we asked how accurate they thought it was. One first year student even went so far as to insult us by asking, "Is it meant to be funny?"

For all you people who do not know, the weather forecast may be found on the first page in the top right corner.

Germany . . .

economic recovery is pulling the country out of the depths of the conquered. It is inconceivable that Germany alone could ever embark on a world-conquering scheme again. But they are becoming restless and are beginning to look around.

Unhampered by defense production, German industry is able to produce what it wills, and is offering stiff competition to other western countries.

In all deference to the reservations to France, unless German vitality is corralled within some strongly regulated European unit, and soon she will I am afraid, look elsewhere for assistance, for markets, and ideals. And the only other direction is easterly in this case. Russia and her satellites would provide a rich open market for German goods, and the now famous case of the defection of the West German security chief, Dr. Otto John, is perhaps a symbol of the attractiveness of the ideology for the German intellectual and idealist.

BLUES GAIN TIE IN LONDON

Go, Little Man

Blues' hard driving backfielder Rich Bethune, eludes two agonized Western men as he nips around end in one of Varsity's ground-gaining plays. Bethune's effort contributed to Varsity's success in gaining a 12-12 tie.

Majors By Bethune, Horton Varsity Dominates 2nd Half

By MOISHE REITER

For Sale, cheap—one twelve-point lead, for use in Football games; good only up until half-time, apply the Western Mustangs, London. For the second time in two games the Varsity team gave up a two touchdown handicap in the first half; last week it was to the McGill Redmen, and the Blues were able to march back with ease to win; this time it was the Western Mustangs getting the donation, on their home field, and no one marches over Western at home. Still, playing their best of the year, Varsity Blues came back to tie it up 12-12, and fell, just one slip in the mud, short of winning.

Boy Kidnappers From Western U. Get Marni, Judy

The Blues can attribute the fact that they merely got a tie in last Saturday's game to the kidnapping of two cheerleaders, Marni Littlejohn and Judy Francis.

When the 'football special' stopped at Brantford en route to London, two Western students, posing as a reporter and photographer, tricked the coeds into getting off. When they reached the station platform, they were whisked away in a car.

However, the pretty cheerleaders were given a free ride to London, and allowed to rejoin their comrades.

These dirty guys from Western.

It was a fumbling and powerless Blue club that faced up to Western in that miserable first half, going nowhere themselves, giving the Mustangs complete right of way. Savants in the Press Box had already begun discussing how to write about the downfall of Varsity, and some fellows from Queen's, down to spot the Blues for next week's game were just about ready to quit taking notes, thinking Varsity was out for sure.

For the first five minutes it was actually an even ball game with Varsity holding the slight edge in play and kicking. But the second time the Mustangs got possession it was at their own 37 yard line and it took them only five plays to score. A 33 yard throw from Getty, back in the Diamond T, to Bob Turner brought the Mustangs to the Varsity 40, then three line plays and a long Getty to Gino Fracas pass brought the Westerns first blood—five points, converted by Fracas.

Scooped at by some, early in the season, Western's Diamond T formation, using two quarterbacks, was too smooth and deceptive for the Blue defence, crossing it up repeatedly, as Varsity tacklers hit faking Western backs, while Getty or Don Girvin slipped around in the play sending the ball where the Blues least expected it.

Varsity's one threat in the first quarter was handled cleverly by the Western quarters, quick-kicking from their own 29 right down to the Varsity 25 for a gain of 56 yards, best distance of the day.

Alert Mustang defence accounted for the rest of the Western lead, as Brian Young snared Harry Wilson's short pass at the Varsity 34 yard line, with Ralph Simmons and Fracas moving through the line for the major, Fracas converting again. These 12 points by Fracas gave him second place in the scoring race, 3 behind Steve Oneschuk whose two converts in the second half Varsity drive pulled him safely ahead.

What was said and done in the Varsity dressing room during the half-time break is not known. What happened after should make the Varsity's favourites in all their remaining games. Facing what, against the Western Mustangs on their home grounds, was believed to be an insurmountable lead, the Blues moved in dangerously right from the kickoff, driving from their own 42 right to the Western 9. Stopped there the Blues contained the Mustang attack, regained possession on their 40 and pushed strongly downfield in their first drive to the tie. Two 20 yard passes, one to George Stulac, the second to Bruce Day carried to the Western 3, and Rich Bethune went off right tackle for the touchdown.

Another attempt to trip the Blues with a quick kick showed how alert the Blues were in that second half. With Girvin in behind centre John Sopinka saw the centre's head go down and turned, sprinting back to take the quick kick even before the ball came out. The result was a (Continued on Page 6)

Pres. Smith Says "Misty Mysticism" Unhealthy For Students And Society

Dr. Sidney Smith, president of the University of Toronto, in what he termed "his declaration on behalf of the University of Toronto," stated that "it is too important for society for spiritual values to be left out of education, as one justification for the University to sponsor the Christian Mission," last night at Convocation Hall. Dr. Smith was introducing the Reverend Daniel T. Niles, the Chief Missioner, who delivered the main address.

"We all know that the University must give first place to the intellectual," Dr. Smith said, adding that the intellect tells us that there are more things than intellectual. Science, the humanities, and the social sciences do not supply the "why." "In a University of all places, we must not rule out or fence off any area of human experience... There is a compulsion to bring into the foreground spiritual questions. It is too important for the individual to be left in misty mysticism."

Dr. Niles, speaking on "The God I Like," said that you "don't become a Christian when you say Jesus is the God I like. You become one when you say Jesus Christ is the man that everyone must choose." He must become truth, which is intransigent, rather than value, which depends on human decision.

Christianity came into being, and maintains that Jesus Christ is truth by saying that He "is risen from the dead," the Reverend continued. "Your Christianity must begin at the same point."

He pointed out that "risen from the dead" meant that "Jesus Christ is here, not bound by the limitations of human flesh." He is even with the savage, "but they don't understand it... aren't able to hear. All they know is that there's an elemental uneasiness. People get converted when they realize the preacher of the gospel as an echo of something that has always been in their minds."

Christianity is the only religion that teaches God is your father. If you want to discover your humanity you must realize this, Niles asserted, and "the only place to meet him is through Jesus Christ." People, such as the Each one says that God must come to meet him, and are waiting for God to come and meet him at his place of appointment. But he won't, Niles remarked. "Of course, you have a right to say 'I don't want to meet Him,' scientist, each have their way. But you have no right to talk yourself into thinking you have met Him. There is only one place

Death Penalty Abolition Subject Of Church Debate

"Should Capital Punishment Be Abolished?" was the topic for debate at the Bathurst St. United Church Sunday night. About 150 people listened to G. Arthur Martin, QC, in the affirmative, and Joseph Sedgwick, QC, in the negative debate the issue.

Speaking first, Mr. Martin asked the question "Are we chained to the death penalty by the usual hysteria that always accompanies these customs?" He went on to quote statistics from the USA which might indicate that the abolition of the death penalty lessens the number of murders; he emphasized, however, that these indications were not completely reliable.

He disclosed that just over a century ago, the repeal of the law requiring hanging, disembowelling, decapitation, and quartering was refused in England. Mr. Martin attributed most murders to social conditions, and stressed the need of an efficient police force, rather than capital punishment to deter murderers. He referred to the death penalty as "revengful, retributive, wasteful, and useless."

Mr. Sedgwick asked the question: "What do you do with murderers if you don't destroy them?" He felt that it was a needless waste to institutionalize murderers; that many of them were beyond any correction: "Some murderers are hanged and

Toronto To Honour Famous Librarians

Five internationally-known librarians will be honoured with doctor of laws degrees at the University of Toronto's fall convocation on Friday, November 26th, President Sidney Smith announced today.

The new Sigmund Samuel Library's official opening will take place at 4.30 p.m. the same day. Colonel Eric Phillips, chairman of the University's Board of Governors, will preside at the ceremony; Dr. Sigmund Samuel, who has contributed to the building fund, will declare the library open; and Dr. W. Stewart Wallace, librarian emeritus, will give a brief address.

Librarians to be honoured at 8.30 p.m. in Convocation Hall are:

W. Stewart Wallace; A. W. S. Munthe, former head of the Norwegian National Library and director of the Oslo University Library; J. N. L. Myres, librarian of Oxford University's Bodleian Library; K. De W. Metcalf, director of Harvard University Libraries; and W. Kaye Lamb of Ottawa, Dominion archivist and national librarian.

Dr. Munthe, honorary president of the International Federation of Library Associations, will address convocation. He and Dr. Myres are coming to Canada especially for this event, at which degrees will also be conferred on 285 students who have successfully completed graduate and undergraduate courses.

Treasure Van Moves On Coming Again Nov. 22-25

The Treasure Van came briefly to Toronto on Friday afternoon. For the uninitiated, the Treasure Van is an exhibition and sale of handcrafts from all sorts of places in the world, such as Korea, Karachi, and Canada.

Mrs. Mulvaney, manager of the sale for the World University Service, came to town with a moving van full of goods. "Six hardy, eligible UC men helped unload the truck and store the goods in the basement of the University College Men's Residence," said Ron Gould, WUS representative on the Students' Administrative Council. "The articles ranged from ivory elephants to silk scarves," he said.

For the next few days the goods will be unpacked and priced in the basement. Then the show moves to Queen's before coming back to Toronto November 22 to 25. It will be held in the Debates Room at Hart House.

smelly but nice paint, passages and picture windows

By STEW PETER

It smells of paint! And, oh, the light hurts your eyes it's so bright.

There were my first thoughts (rather crudely expressed) on first entering the very first room to be opened to students in the big, new Sigmund Samuel library.

The contrast between the dimly lit dark old reading room, and the bright fluorescent lighting of the new made my eyes smart. No individual student lamp here, to spotlight your work and divide the desk, but bright overhead lighting, stage-lighting couldn't be brighter.

I felt, in fact, just as if I had stepped on stage. Students turned from their work and looked up at me; I was all wet (it was raining out). Too excited to sit down and start working (any excuse will do) I wandered around the large room.

It looks small, I thought, pacing about; only seats a hundred; not half as much space as the old male reading-room. And what about the women's reading-room! (I have never ever been in there — too young, just heard about it from old timers), and the law reading-room, too. Then I remembered; this is only the general reading-room. Let's see, there's going to be the Wallace Reading Room with open stacks (plus controlled entry) and the periodical reading-room. Plenty of space to do my Remedial English homework.

Oops! Nearly walked through the window. Picture windows, you know. The whole wall is windows. Economics IB again, more work for window-washers. Ah! but to stand there in the sun with it streaming in all about you! Too bad it's raining.

The light blond is a marked contrast to the dark—I'm talking about the furniture—table and chairs in the old room. Even the walls are lighter and brighter. There is one round table amidst all the regular rectangulars. Just like studying on the old kitchen table.

Little Saint's Arrival Foil's Frightened Thief

A thief was discovered on the third floor of St. Hilda's College Saturday night at 6:45. Wearing a black hat, a light tan wind-breaker and black pants, he popped out of room 330 when he heard someone coming; scuttled down the hall laughing nervously and ran straight down the side stairs. No one saw him leave the building.

No money was taken from the room and it was the only one the man had been in. He had opened dresser drawers and turned on the light, but had not yet found a wallet which was in a desk drawer. He was found by a girl who had not gone down to dinner.

There have been several robberies in St. Hilda's this year, and most have occurred on football week-ends around dinner time. The last time $80.00 was taken.

The police have not been able to discover how the thief, or thieves, get in as all the doors are locked at supper time and the front door is visible from the switchboard when left open.

Blood From McGill Beats All Records

Montreal (CUP) — The McGill Blood Donor Clinic broke all Canadian records for a single day by collecting 377 pints of blood in six short hours. This new figure raises the week's donations to 1,385, 79% of the 1,650 objective; thus far 39% of the student body have donated their pint.

Twenty-five of the McGill football players, being unable to donate at this time, have pledged their blood for future use, and this amount will be added to the grand total.

At this time three faculties — Engineering, Arts & Science, and Commerce — are close rivals for Bloody Mary, the trophy which is symbolic of campus blood-donating supremacy.

Unfair To Shirley Eckel

Letter to the Editor:

A week ago Monday there was a photo in the Varsity that prompted me to write this letter. The picture was called "Shirley's Molars" and was, by the way, NOT TAKEN by the credited photographer.

For three years now, Shirley Eckel has been our Drum Major-ette, and for three years now, she has been subjected to cart-wheel portraits, worm's-eye views, dental studies, and a host of other injustices by ninety-nine and forty-four one hundredths percent of the Varsity Staff Photographers of her.

Can't you just see dear old George Eastman spinning in his grave at the thought of his products being used for such misrepresentation of fact.

One can get a terrific picture of "Our Girl Shirl" without half trying. I know, because I have taken portraits of her and have found that, besides being a very cute little gal, she is extremely photogenic. My picture should prove both statements. But forces seem to have been at work almost trying to convince us otherwise.

Aw, fellas, let's do her justice for a change. Let's give her some pictures that ARE worth being pasted in a scrap book. If you can't then your editors should bar you from taking pictures of pretty girls for the Varsity, a fate that I know you would regard as being worse than death.

you can meet Him; where He is waiting. That is why we say Jesus is truth. He is intransigent, untractable. He is not the God you like. He is the God you can't get rid of. Jesus is Truth, not Value."

Dr. Niles spoke at the opening service of the University Christian Mission. To what Dr. Smith described as a "remarkably fine attendance of students." This was the opening of a seven-day program of talks and group discussions. Dr. Niles was assisted last night by Dr. A. J. Coleman, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the University Christian Mission, and the Honorable Mr. Justice J. K. Mackay, Chairman of the General Committee of the University Christian Mission. Mr. Eric Rollinson was the organist.

Woman Teacher From India Discusses Native Country

Kingston (CUP.) — Extreme contrast and the recent development was described by Mrs. Yohan-Masih of India in an address given at Queen's University recently.

A teacher of civics and psychology in her native country, Mrs. Masih attempted to explain many perplexing problems concerning the country's traditions, its present plans and policy, and its future.

India is a country only half the size of Canada, yet its population is 20 times as great. India is people, India is contrasts which make it so difficult for strangers to understand it. It knows fabulous riches and unspeakable poverty.

In the field of learning, India has produced her share of great minds, yet 85 percent of the population is illiterate. Her cities are large, booming metropolises, in which education, arts, and sports flourish. But 86 percent is made up of groups of hovels called villages.

However, within the last few years the country has undergone tremendous development and advancement. Her independence movement was begun to remedy the overwhelming problems confronting the people.

India's independence was won without arms, and relations with Britain remained cordial. The new government soon instituted female emancipation, and equality of rights, regardless of color, creed, or social position.

Old Testament Upheld By Dean

We must either accept the Old Testament or deny the divinity of Christ, said Dean W. Gordon Brown of Central Baptist Seminary yesterday. He was speaking to a group of medical students on "Can we Trust the Bible".

Dean Brown defined a Christian as a man who follows Christ. "This must include a mental" following, of Christ's attitudes, he said. "I fail to see how it is possible to argue from the words of Christ anything but His complete acceptance of the Old Testament," he said.

Politically, the system of government was made more democratic; economically, the country was made more self-sufficient; finally peace, justice and understanding between India's peoples was brought about.

In the first three years of the five-year plan, internal developments and industrialization have progressed greatly, food is unrationed, primary education has been made compulsory, millions have been moved into solid houses, and clothing has been distributed to the people. The Christian church has begun to grow and spread its influence through central India, and evangelical work is carried on, especially in the small villages.

Delinquent Youth Social Work Topic

The topic at the first meeting of the Social Work Club was "Juvenile Delinquency". Miss Godfrey, a well-known psychiatric social worker on the campus, was the speaker, stressing that 95% of Canadian delinquents were born in Canada.

She pointed out that causes of delinquency ranged from simple physical need to the complicated psychological need to be punished as a means of alleviating guilt.

The next meeting will consist of a trip to the Brampton Reformatory.

No Sex, Vice In Bookstore

"There are rats, rats, As big as alley cats In the stores, in the stores, In the Quartermaster stores"

There are no rats, or cats, for that matter in the University Book Store—which are visible, at any rate—but they seem to carry anything else. There are dissecting sets, molecular models, books by Hilda Neatby, Christmas cards, "obscure books, and obscurer (or more obscure) books. The Book Store (BS), for those who live on the periphery of the campus, is just across from University College, beside the SAC building.

There is nothing "sexy" associated with the BS that is observable by the casual visitor, although the long-suffering girls who dash off to procure books are generally quite beautiful. Also there is nothing RED, or irreligious, or profane, or sinful about the BS, so that controversy is definitely limited. However, since controversy is of the essence, or something, we shall do our best.

rightly so." Mr. Sedgwick gave an emotional appeal to a subject which he said "could not be resolved by logic," saying "Suppose it were your wife, your sister, your own daughter that was killed, what would be your feeling then?"

He also stressed that it did the murderer no good to spend twenty years or so in a penitentiary that it left him futureless and forsaken. Mr. Sedgwick closed on a moderate note, advocating that there be some choice in whether or not the death penalty be judged for a murderer.

The topic was thrown to the audience for 30 minutes, during which time Mr. Sedgwick and Mr. Martin answered questions.

Our major quarrel with the BS is that they keep telling us to come back next week. It seems to us that the least they could do is say: "We haven't got the damn thing, boy," and leave us to our fate. But instead, they keep telling us that it's sure to be in soon, and won't you please come back, sir. The nervous strain is unbearable; they tell us that it is much like being led on by a co-ed: "Well, all my nights are taken, but the afternoons are free." The officials of BS should certainly hard-boil their staff before putting them on the job.

One other important fact: the BS has no star maps—they can be procured in Simcoe Hall somewhere, according to latest reports. When we find Simcoe Hall, we shall pass along more precise information.

Pink Press

That self-sufficient, self-editing corporate body known locally as the "downtown dailies", has been doing an excellent job this year of mishandling campus news.

On the occasion of the now famous engineering incident, they saw fit to spread monstrous headlines and pictures all over the front page.

The poll conducted by the Varsity staff was given front-page treatment in both evening sections of the d.d.s.

However, we feel that the most outrageous example of flagrant abuse of news has occurred in the pink issue of one of the papers on Thursday, November 4.

Screaming headlines proclaim:

CAMPAIGN TO SAVE
"PAGANS" ON CAMPUS

The drop head cried:

Christian Mission
Will Try To Save
"Pagans" at U. of T.

This interpretation of the purpose of the University Christian Mission seems a long cry from the statement of Dr. John Coleman. Since he is chairman of the administration committee he may be presumed to know something about its nature. Dr. Coleman was quoted in the issue of the Varsity of November 5 as follows: "The purpose of the mission is to make sure that each generation of students has de nombreux commentaires. La position prise par ce représentant officiel est malheureusement peu sage, si nous prenons en considération le but de la publication: World Student News. Cette publication est soumise de propagande communiste, assez souvent difficile à discerner. Il va sans dire que l'UIE encourage fortement l'idée d'un échange de pensée parce que, jusqu'ici, la contribution canadienne a toujours été très minime. Si un journal communiste veut publier certaines nouvelles canadiennes, il le fera tous les jours dans un but de propagande. Suivant cet article in ajoutant ou omettant un mot, en associant une nouvelle idée, qui dans le contexte change complètement la pensée de l'article. Précisément, c'est ce qui arriva dans un article de World Student News au sujet du 200e anniversaire de l'Université coloniale à New-York. Il sera très intéressant de suivre les articles soumis par Toronto. Il y en aura de splendides, cela je vous le promets.

Articles

The Varsity would particularly appreciate having articles submitted which could be used as editorial articles on this page. Any subject may be written on whether or not it is specifically related to student life.

The purpose of such articles is to stimulate thought and the literary expression of ideas.

In addition creative works will also be considered for publication. Poems, short stories and feature articles are also needed.

Any and all of these should be brought to the editor in the Varsity office in the basement of the SAC building which is across the road from Hart House.

A furor rends the campus air
As co-eds go out on a tear.
With punts, and shots, and what have you,
I ask you co-eds if it's true?
Have you women gone astray?
Or have you always been this way?
Tis a case for Kinsey or Freud.
Someone will have to fill this void.
We cannot afford to take a chance
For sin will breed on ignorance.
Would you live a life of sin,
Uphold free love and drink to gin?
I do not know just what to think:
There is no harm in just one drink.
But, when habit becomes obsessional,
Some one may find herself professional.

Barbier de Seville By UC French Club

The Cercle-Francais of University College is reviving this year Beaumarchais' comedy "Le Barbier de Seville." The director, Prof. C. R. Parsons, has cast John Walker in the part of the hero, Figaro. In the acting field Dr. Walker has portrayed many roles, both English and French-speaking, on the campus, in Hart House Theatre and U.C. productions, besides his professional work for the CBC in Toronto. Playing the part of the heroine, Rosine, is Charlotte Schragar, who recently played in the U.C. Players' Guild production of "Miss Julie." The cast also includes C. R. Parsons as the romantic count of many disguises, and Fred Ward as Bartholo, Rosine's grouchy, old guardian.

Beaumarchais was certainly the most popular man of letters in the France of his time. He was not unlike his own creation, Figaro, in that he sympathized with the growing cultural forces of individualism, science, and the new ideal of personal liberty, which were motivating the rising Merchant and bourgeois classes; yet, he was forced to pander to the aristocracy in order to make a living. Like Figaro, he was past master of badinage and intrigue, and, like Figaro, he said what he wanted to say in spite of royal censorship, which attempted to suppress his all-too-apparent contempt for the ancien regime and his fervent advocacy of personal freedom. With wit and dramatic skill, Beaumarchais wrote into "Le Barbier" the motto of the French Revolution, thereby transforming a charming comedy of manners into a social satire.

The characterization of Figaro combines the traditional commedia dell'arte manservant, with the bourgeois barbier de Seville who, by virtue of his shrewd and worldly wisdom, is as worthy of respect, and indeed of social recognition as a pure-bred Bourbon. Yet Beaumarchais does not allow political polemic to overshadow his duty as a dramatist. He leaves the character of Figaro to speak for himself, and proceeds further to lift Doctor Bartholo out of his role as a witless dupe by giving him force and dimension of his own; Count Almaviva, from a cardboard lover becomes a clever and charming nobleman; and Rosine rises from the strictures of an ingénue into a beautiful embodiment of a woman in love. Thus the dramatist transforms the well-worn plot of a crochety lover, a pretty ward, and an ardent lover, into an exposition of character in action, which has delighted audiences in theatres, opera houses, and cinema auditoriums ever since the play's first production at the Comedie Francaise in 1775.

The play, to be presented for the second time in seven years by the Cercle Francais, will be performed at Hart House Theatre on Wednesday, November 10th. Seats are now available at Hart House Theatre Box Office.

DENTANTICS

A satire on "Toronto the Good". The other scenes in Act I were less entertaining. Apparently no one can usually get Legions from the television sequence.

B.A. In Drama

Here we are trying like mad to develop a Canadian theatre. Canada has reached the age of theatrical puberty, but in the field of drama instruction she is notoriously flat-chested. Students who are interested in the theatre must either resort to the back alleys of Bennett and Barrington or release their frustrations through extra-curricular activities at the University.

It is outrageous that anyone who wishes to enter the theatre as a profession, should be forced to make it a secondary interest while at University or else go to the United States or Great Britain to receive adequate training. Ideally, Toronto should have a school devoted to the teaching of all the arts of the theatre: lighting, and design, and the dance as well as acting and directing, a school which would be comparable to the Art College or the Conservatory. Such a school would require a large and competent staff of instructors, a well-equipped stage and proper studios. This is obviously a very expensive project, and therefore a school of this sort is at the moment probably impossible.

Nevertheless, it is equally obvious that the dramatic instruction offered by the Conservatory is pitifully inadequate, and that the University is infinitely better equipped and able to offer instruction in the arts of the theatre. This scheme would entail the establishment of a department of drama in the faculty of arts, a scheme which has already been mentioned by President Smith. This department could offer courses in drama as options in various courses such as English Language and Literature and Moderns to those students who are interested, and would also offer an honour arts course in drama to those primarily interested in the theatre.

Although this idea found considerable support from the staff members that we spoke to, there were many professors who oppose it on the grounds that a practical course in theatre would inevitably lead to the lowering of the course to a vocational school level. This is admittedly a danger but one which could be avoided.

Rather, the aim of such a course should be to educate students in all aspects of the theatre, and would consist possibly of intensive courses in literature, principally dramatic, taught by the Department of English; in design both of costumes and sets; in production technique, which would include directing, lighting and so forth, and studios or lab periods which would give formal instruction in methods of acting, voice production and pantomime. In addition to these, a student enrolled in this course would take optional courses in history, philosophy or language, which would provide him with an opportunity to hear a reasoned presentation of the Christian faith.

The newspaper may like the vision of hordes of Christian workers headed by Dr. Sidney Smith and spurred on by Justice Keeler Mackay, descending upon the campus to "exterminate forthwith" the "paganism" in the university.

We find it repulsive and slightly less than accurate. As a matter of fact we doubt if the organizers of the Mission are happy about it either.

Leadership

Ontario's recent major catastrophe has afforded the members of this academic community ample opportunity to display their willingness to share in the problems of persons outside its bounds.

Students of this university in great numbers, particularly in Operation Engineer, contributed very much time and energy in helping with the flood relief and reconstruction program.

It is interesting to note that a community of about 12,000 people contributed over $5,000 to the Flood Relief fund. This is indeed a notable achievement.

Students and staff of this university have manifested a slight rebirth of a concept of their role as leadership for the rest of society.

Campus Profile

By JOE AZIZ

A gay westerner, born in Virden, Manitoba is our Students' Administrative Council president this year. Mary Ellen Gibson, saw the light in time, however, and came to Port Arthur, Ontario, where she received her high school education. Four years ago she entered Sociology at U. of T.

As vice-president of the SAC she does not have a burning ambition to back any pet projects, but she hopes to see that the SAC is run with the greatest efficiency and benefit for the students.

She has a co-ordinating role, since she, with the president, sits in on all the various boards, in a directing and guiding capacity. Because the SAC occupies such a prominent and essential position on the campus, Mary Ellen feels that all the members must be especially keen on their jobs.

Apart from the SAC Mary Ellen is very interested in social work, which she prefers to do among individuals, rather than groups. She has tried in the past to form a social work club on the campus, but found that time would not permit her to do so.

Her hobbies include hunting and fishing—not unusual for a western gal, and also reading, music and sewing.

After marriage next spring, she hopes to do one year of post graduate work at Varsity in Sociology, and then to return to her new home in Victoria, B.C.

NOTES ON A LECTURE

November 7, 6:00 p.m.
CBC-TV Studio No. "A"
History of the Microscope: Prof. Ham (anatomy)
Prof. Scott (physics)

Rick Campbell — chief interrogator and guidance man. Introduction to electron microscope. Man seeing smaller and smaller things bigger and bigger. Good delivery—but he's reading.

Ballet sequence: Small girl in spotlight as under a microscope. In the enlarging process other girls close-up on girl's face. Girl came to close and ended up in shadow, but good idea.

Scott on light refraction. I hear him, but where is he. On there. Good explanation of light refraction as of waves on a breakwater.

Ham on problems of setting up specimens for observation. Slicing machine for wax to mount them on. A microton—looks like a miniature meat grinder. Water in specimen replaced by wax and then wax dissolved as it goes on a slide.

Back to Scott. Good set up at right angles to each other. Makes a connection. On to the electron microscope. Superiority of electrons to light because of shorter wave length. Result: less fuzziness in magnifying. Allows 100 times magnitude of light microscope that is up to 200,000 times. 1932 first successful microscope, made in U. of T.'s MacLennan laboratories. Scott in a different suit comes in to explain it. Prof. Burton demonstrates. Back to the right angle and illustrative micrographs. Good comparison with earlier ones from light microscope.

Mr. Woodward demonstrates operation of the latest Elec. Mic. 3 stages of magnifying. Impressive. But limitation to dead matter as it must be observed in a vacuum.

Prof. Ham on preparation of specimen. Now with plastic and a slicer that cut so thin that it takes a light microscope to find the pieces!

Scott on applications — especially significant in Cancer cells. Good camera movement from slides to speakers. Almost six and a neat ending. Snips it off with no loose edges. But that organ music again with slides. There must be something better.

Summary: Smoother than last week. More variety of movement in the cameras, just a few slips. Better interplay between Campbell and the profs. Hm-mm-yes. —Wendy Mitchener

...the necessary background for his study of the theatre.

This programme is suggested to show how a course in drama could be set up at the University which would have just as much academic value as a course like Art and Archeology, for example. There can be no doubt, we believe, that such a course would fulfill a crying need. As Robertson Davies, the Canadian playwright said when he was adjudicating the University Drama Festival last winter, "There are many very good reasons why such a course should not be taught at the University, but to any lover of the theatre the need for a dramatic school is a cry from the heart."

Elmor Bernstein

Most of the music was not good enough or bad enough to matter very much but the Caine Mutiny song was quite effective and Russ Bulchak's enthusiasm made up for his voice in the Plabum Marathon.

Elmor Bernstein

Indictment

The most serious problem confronting the music critic is the one most often ignored. Can music be criticized at all with any validity? Undeniably the question admits a negative answer. We have, however, as in many things been lulled into a "willing suspension of disbelief," to rework Coleridge's statement.

The first task of the critic at present is to recapitulate briefly the experience that the work of art had on him and the second is to comment upon this experience.

While literary critics may be able to cope with this—and indeed we have Gib-bo's confession that Longinus described a certain passage of Homer better than its author—the music critic is defeated at the outset, for it is impossible to describe musical discourse in terms of language, unless he loses himself in the romantic spirit of things where all arts become one.

Although personal analogies exist between music and the other arts, the abstract nature of music defies any objective alliance. It is a failure to realize this that results in crossed values and courts critical disaster. The most common way to cross values is to sling at least a dozen epithets around the neck of every noun. This results in little more than an exercise in vocabulary, for what do the words "soberly," "consummation" or "brilliance" indicate about any musical performance?

I believe criticism should contribute to the enjoyment of a work of art. The music critic can accomplish this in only one way. He must discourse not about music, but rather around it, commenting on the things the music cannot tell. For example, he should tell us about the historical climate of a work, its composition, its aims and its appeals.

The critic who makes universal pronouncements is the one who most invites universal laughter. Criticism was a most unhealthy invention arising probably, as T. S. Eliot observes, out of an artistic frustration. But now that it's with us we should ensure that it says something positive of its own instead of offering tepid apologies for the real works themselves.

Speaking OF SPORT

BY JOHN WILSON

They all said it couldn't happen again, but it did. The Blues registered their fourth tie in nineteen seasons in London, and in so doing assured the possibility of a three-way tie for first place in the Intercollegiate Union.

Queens, as expected, romped over McGill, and all the Blues have to do now is beat the Gaels here Saturday, while Western presumably rolls by the Redmen in Montreal. Apparently the powers that be have solved the problem of how to declare a champion if a first place tie results from the action this coming weekend. The fairest way would seem to be two playoffs, at least a week apart. Such a scheme will take the bottom out of UBC's plans for their College Bowl on November 27. Should the CIAU decide to hold a mid-week game, and have one team draw a bye, that team ought to be Queens. Western and Varsity are the ones that are having trouble deciding who's better.

But if that is the final plan, Queens could very well have an easy time of it, if the Blues and the Mustangs have to go through another sixty minutes like last Saturday. However the Blues have one more hurdle to beat, before all this conjecture becomes real. When the Gaels visit Varsity Stadium this Saturday, the stands will likely be packed to watch the mud fly, as the Blues will be fighting for the second week in a row to keep their playoff hopes alive.

From the Blue Room . . . The Varsity squash team went to London last weekend for a match with Western, and came out on top . . . Gino Fracas' twelve points last Saturday was enough to boost him one above Ron Stewart in the Intercollegiate scoring race, but still three short of Varsity's Steve Oneschuk. Western will probably give the ball to Fracas on every play this Saturday when the Mustangs meet the Redmen, while Stewart and Oneschuk will likely be engaged in a scoring duel in Varsity Stadium.

Western Colts Victors Baby Blues Lose 18-11

BY FRED GRAY

A Western Intermediate football machine, featuring one of the strongest backfields ever seen in Intermediate competition, rolled to victory over Varsity's Baby Blues with ponderous certainty Friday afternoon. Showing the Toronto observers that their first win was no mistake, the Colts handed the Blue and White squad their second straight defeat of the season, winning 18-11.

With the sting of defeat at the hands of this same team the previous week still strong, Varsity took the field with a grim determination to win. Dominating the play in the first quarter, the Baby Blues opened the scoring mid-way through the period. Having forced the Colts back into their own end, quarterback Larry Joynt hit Jack Rogers with a 15 yard pass good for a T.D. Larry converted and Toronto led 6-0 at the end of the quarter.

From the start of the second quarter the strength of the Western team began to slowly exert itself. Held at bay, on their first goalward march the Colts finally replied in a scoring way with only three minutes left in the half. Given possession on the Varsity 49 by a penalty, Western moved into scoring position on the 28 from which Walt Gray, playing in the quarter spot, passed to Bruce Parker on the goal-line for the major. Willie Casanova converted. Varsity handed the Colts the lead as Jack Hillier returned Toronto's third down kick to the dead-line on the last play of the half.

Western continued to carry the play for most of the second half. A Varsity fumble set up the invaders 3rd quarter touchdown as Dick MacDuffe dropped on the loose ball on the Baby Blues' 18 yd. line. The Colts appeared halted as defensive ends Izzy Pastushak and Al Varchulis threw the Western quarter back to the 18 on a second down pass attempt, but Casanova made good use of his blockers to gain a first and two plays later John Aitchison bulled his way through the Varsity defenders to score. The attempted convert was no good. Toronto bounced back with a touchdown of their own on the last play of the quarter. Don Mucci plunged over to notch the T.D. after Dave Creswell, Jack Rogers, and Al Wong had combined some fine running to carry play to the Western 5. The convert was no good and Toronto trailed by a single point at the end of the third quarter.

Western threatened to score again early in the final period but Varsity, led by John Iglar and Ted Lotocky, stiffened after the Purple and White had hampered their way 52 yards to the Toronto 16. Varsity's fate was sealed when John Bell intercepted a Blue's forward pass attempt and raced to Varsity's 26 yard line before being stopped. From here, the Colts plunged through the Baby Blues. Bell crossed for the touchdown. Casanova converted with less than three minutes remaining and Western held the Blues in check to win 18-11.

Co-captain Al Wong and Jack Rogers were outstanding in the backfield for Toronto, and although Varsity's line did not dominate play as in the Ryerson game, John Iglar, Santo Martini, Izzy Pastushak and Walt Schmida all fought gamely in a losing cause. The deciding factor appeared to be the Western backfield. John Bell and Willie Casanova, both of whom should figure very prominently in the Mustangs future plans, led along the ground, while quarter Walt Gray and Casanova in the tail spot of the Diamond-T could unleash a very effective passing attack when called upon to do so. The Baby Blues, long dominators of the Intermediate football scene, have a very worthy successor in this Western club.

Blues Gain

substantial gain for the Blues and set them on the march for the tying touchdown, starting at the Mustang 53. Harry Wilson came up with two plays on this side that just broke the Mustang spirit. Fate was with Blues when Wilson was trapped by Mustang tacklers hanging on his arms at the Western 35 and flipped underhand to Bethune going to the 18. A screen pass went for the major, floating through Brian Young's poised arms right into Bill Horton's waiting fingers.

Quarterback Bill Stevenson, injured at McGill two weeks ago came into the game only briefly but gave the Westerns much trouble, passing and running when trapped to bring the Blues into position. Stevenson passed and ran for 59 yards in five tries. Pain in his elbow forced Bob Masterson to pull him out to avoid any possibility of further injury. Stevenson will be needed for the Queen's game, the playoff and the Vancouver affair.

The slimy field at Western hampered a last minute Blue drive for the winning points as Rich Bethune fell in the mess while running, in the clear, for a pass, and Western got the ball.

In that second half the Blues shredded the Western line, playing excellent two-way ball. They had the Western brutes like Ted Roman threatening to punch them in the nose. It seems the Horsies were a bit angry about something.

The tie game, repeating the earlier Western-Varsity match of the season's beginning, was mentioned as a possibility at the beginning of last week, but everyone laughed it away. Those in the know called it Western with deriding what power Varsity had. This was the first time that the Blues gave everything they had, and if they had been able to show a bit of it in the first half they would surely have won. The tie raises the possibility of a three-way tie for first place providing Western beats McGill and Varsity takes the Gaels next week. BLUE BITS: One Western supporter, describing himself as unbiased, said, thoughtfully, "Those Blues were almost as good as the Mustangs—almost, but not quite" . . . The word was that Steve Oneschuk had played one of his best games ever as a Blue. It was Steve's kicking in the last half that held off all Mustang drives and gained yardage for the Blues. Steve even threw an uncalled for pass at one point. Stevenson was caught behind the line, and tackled. Falling back under the tackle, he flicked the ball to Oneschuk who spent to the side and threw 30 yds.—incomplete . . . Bruce Day had two rough play penalties called on his team. One looked deserved, the other was a bit dubious, but they helped the Mustangs . . . Four Blues sat this one out and any one could have starred with either club, Frank Palermo, Alan Watt, Harry Hall and Wally Bulchak were spectators. With strength like this on the sidelines the Blues appear to be in good shape . . . John Sopinka returned to action this week and seems as good as ever. Fastest man on the field, Sopinka befuddled the Western tacklers taking kick runbacks for great yardage. He broke up one Western touchdown move with brilliant speed and perception. With Getty just two yards from a score, Sopinka flew across to nail him with a murderous tackle, stopping him as though he had been standing still. Wait till John gets warmed up. Should be something to see next week.

Gaels Lace Redmen Sure Of First Place

Kingston, Ont., Nov. 7—Queens Golden Gaels vaulted themselves into secure possession of first place in the Intercollegiate football race here Saturday, as they opened up in the second half to trample the hapless McGill Redmen 20-0.

Sparked by their famous pony backs, Ron Stewart, Gary Schreider, and Al Kocman, who scored a touchdown apiece, the Tri-Color went on an eighteen point rampage in the last thirty minutes, after the Redmen had held them to two singles in the first and second quarters. Schreider kicked two converts and Jock Thomson booted three singles to account for the other Gael scoring.

The first half saw the McGill line charging well into the Gael backfield but hard running by Stewart and Kocman brought Queens from their own forty to the McGill thirty. Held on two plays, Thomson kicked deep into the end zone, and Ken Wright conceded the point. Late in the second quarter Bob Hutcheson conceded another point as Thomson counted his fifth single of the season.

It took the Gaels just five plays to score after the kickoff in the third frame. Quarterback Wally Mellor nailed Stewart at centre field with a flat pass, and the mighty mite scooted the fifty yards for the major, with Schreider converting.

Brian Wherrett set up the second Queens touchdown, blocking Ken Wright's kick at the McGill forty-six. After two drives by Kocman and Stewart to the eleven, Mellor hit Schreider in the end zone. The attempted convert was wide. In the fourth quarter, Thomson kicked his third single of the game, and then another Gael drive brought them to the McGill six. From there Kocman hurdled the line for the last major, and Schreider again converted.

The Gaels are now alone in first place with eight points, sure of a playoff berth. Next week's game with the Varsity Blues in Toronto will decide the final playoff spots. Should Blues win, they will cause a three-way tie for first place, assuming the Western Mustangs will hand McGill their sixth straight loss at the same time.

HOCKEY BLUES IN 2-2 DEADLOCK

Marlies Score In Last Period Fisher, Reid Score For Blues

Playing in mid-season form after only a week of practice, the Varsity hockey Blues fought to a 2-2 tie with the Marlboros Saturday night, in the Dixie Arena. The game was an exhibition benefit, with the proceeds going to aid the fifty-two minor hockey teams in the Dixie area.

The Blues held the upper hand through most of the game, drawing first blood midway in the first period when Clare Fisher notched the first goal.

Action quickened in the second stanza, as Mike Nykoluk struck for a Marlie goal to tie it up, on a pass from Sonny LaRose. The Blues followed quickly with another to regain their lead, when ex-Marlboro 'Dave' Reid made himself a pleasant evening taking a pass from linemate Paul Knox. Reid was a one-man show at times for the Blues in his eagerness to take a game from his old team-mates.

With a little more than three minutes remaining in the third period, Sneddon earned the Marlboros their deadlock assisted by Girard and Billy Harris. Hugh Currie displayed unusual coolness in goal in the first and third periods, while Con Lister took over netminding chores in the second frame.

Dave Jackson and Lou Appleby stood out on defence, while all the forwards were good, as the Blues set a promising tone for the Intercollegiate hockey season.

2-Marlboros - Nykoluk (LaRose, Onotsky)
3-Varsity - Reid (Knox)

Black Panthers Victorious Beat Waterloo And Huron

The Trinity College Black Panthers made it a thoroughly victorious weekend in London, registering two tough wins in games Friday night and Saturday morning.

Playing in Waterloo on the way to London Friday evening, the Panthers were matched against a big rough squad from Waterloo College and came out on top 11-10. Halfbacks Dave Smith and Gerry Aziz tallied touchdowns and Tony Barwick added a convert.

Waterloo's line was big but relatively slow compared to the small fast Trinity front wall, however, Waterloo had one bruiser in the person of the Flying Dutchmen's centre.

The Panthers were trailing 10-6 at half time, after Waterloo had gone ahead on two first quarter touchdowns. Dave Smith galloped thirty yards for the first Trinity major and Barwick converted.

The Panthers came back strongly in the second half with a drive that culminated in a twenty yard touchdown run by fleet Gerry Aziz. The game was rough throughout, but the Trinity crew displayed a power that should carry them into the Mulock Cup finals.

After a seventy-mile drive to London, the Panthers took the field against Huron College at ten o'clock Saturday morning. Playing on a damp field, the Red and Black managed to preserve the slim 1-0 lead given them by Pete Gordon early in the game. Huron didn't threaten at any time during the game, but the Trinity attack was somewhat stifled by weariness.

Blue Ruggerites Win In Protest

Rugger at its ruggedest made Saturday quite a day for the Varsity Rugger Blues. In their league game with the Hamilton Hornets, a high casualty rate and a violently protested score combined to make the referee call the game early for rough play. Anyway, it looks as though Blues won 6-3.

heaviest and roughest team they've come up against, and even though play was fairly clean they were obviously worried. Hard-tackling and forceful, the visitors squashed many of Blues' attacks and forced the forwards to keep together in defence.

Among those injured in action for Blues were Butt, Laughton and Dunsmuir. Cuts and bruises on both sides had tempers flaring in the second half, and things came to a head with about five minutes to go. With both sides having three points to their credit, Gamble went over for the Blues. In spite of the Hornets' protest that he had knocked the ball forward, the try was awarded, and after the visitors allegedly threatened to walk off, the referee stopped the game.

In spite of the game's unfortunate ending, both teams showed up fairly well. Both Ham and Baines made several fine runs, while Harper led the push from the line-outs. Fayle's place-kicking gave Blues their other three points in an early penalty.

Tilson Wins Harrier

Fourteen shivering men braved the chill morning aid last Saturday to participate in the University Harrier Championships. The cold weather, proved no handicap, in what proved to be the best race in recent years on the High Park course. According to coach Hal Brown, the finishing times of the first five men were faster than those of any race that he has seen in his years of coaching at the University of Toronto.

Herb Tilson won the race, as expected, though his time was short of the course record. Bill Gelling was second, Bill Eckersley third, Gord Hueston fourth and dark horse Bob Lee was fifth. These five runners were closely grouped, with their finishing times within 59 seconds of Tilson's 29 minutes, 12.5 seconds.

These five runners will be the quintet who will journey to Montreal next week for the Senior Intercollegiate meet. Coaches McEwen and Brown rate them as stronger than last year's championship team and predict another Intercollegiate win.

The Intermediate team will be made up of the runners who placed between sixth and tenth in Saturday's race. These will include Pete Watson, Doug McEnteer, Roger Wilkinson, Gord Banks and Bruce Hughes. They will compete in London against Guelph, Western and McMaster.

Softball is the word this week as the gals around the campus await the results of the semi-finals which are to be played to-day. Of course, there is the large possibility that old man weather will foul things up as he did last week, but let's hope things are in favour of the female Ted Williams' in order that the finals can be played to-morrow.

At 1 P.M., Vic will meet St. Mikes on the Trinity Field while POT and Phe III are waging the battle of the mound over at the stadium. The games to-day will both be four innings and will not stop at the usual 2 P.M. dead line, but will last until a winner is declared. Again on Tuesday, the starting hour is 1 P.M.; however, this game will go 7 innings.

In the stadium game, PHE III are favoured to come out on top over a well-balanced POT squad because of its strong pitching staff and its fast efficient infield. With good players like Rosalie Marsh, Mary Margaret O'Neil and Noreen Cossar, the Physots are not to be discounted in their attempt to get into the finals.

The other game will find Vic and St. Mikes battling it out, but the odds favour Vic both to take this game and also the championship to-morrow. The scarlet and gold nine, like their team of last year, have the strength in all department and especially so in the pitching section of the team. Mary Foster who not only stars on first when not playing on the mound is about the best pitcher to be found in the interfaculty this year. Anyone who has faced Mary at bat this season knows only too well how hard it is to get a hit from this Bob Lemon of Victoria.

The girls of this campus, not content to be spectators of sports on every football week and decided to do something about their lack of participation while visiting London these past few days. An aggregation of girls from U.C. and Trinity College lacrosse teams defeated a team from the University of Western Ontario on Saturday morning, 5-3. Because lacrosse is not a recognized sport for girls on this campus, this group is not considered to be representing Varsity. Meredith Robinson and Jane Doyle were the stars for Toronto with Jane Winchester being outstanding for the opponents.

Full House

The management of Eaton Auditorium sold stage seats and standing room for Elizabeth Schwarzkopf's concert last Thursday. By any standards the large audience was well rewarded. The Schwarzkopf voice is largely a manufactured product, but what the soprano lacks in natural vocal equipment she more than makes up in intelligence and taste. Though her technique is sometimes obvious, she knows exactly how to capitalize on her unique timbre and bell-like top tones.

The program opened with The Blessed Virgin's Expostulation by Purcell—a perfect presentation of maternal and spiritual anguish.

In the first two groups of lieder, Schwarzkopf suffered by the inevitable comparison with her compatriot Irmgard Seefried who appeared here a week previously. But in the lieder where her hearty sense of humor showed through—Die Vogel, Ungeguld and Och moder ich will en Ding Han she was unequivocally successful.

The operatic group of Voi Che Sapete, Batti Batti, and Deh Vieni Non Tardar was done with the perfect elegance and grace of style necessary for Mozart, although these lighter arias were not altogether suited to the Schwarzkopf voice and temperament.

The substitution of five songs by Hugo Wolf for a dreadful hodge-podge of programmed numbers would have been welcome under any circumstances. Since Miss Schwarzkopf is one of the leading exponents of Wolf's work this group proved the best part of the program.

A group of folk songs, the legacy of Schwarzkopf's great teacher Maria Ivogun, charmingly completed an excellent recital.

There were many comparisons to Lehmann and Ferrier heard from gentlemen in the audience. Those of us of the gender unswayed by Miss Schwarzkopf's astounding beauty will more rightly place her a little lower than the angels. Rita Ubriaco

If you have some U. of T. spirit and enthusiasm to spare, can blow a trumpet or bang a pair of cymbals, and want to pick up a few athletic credits, you should be in the Blue and White Band.

The band plays at all the Blues regular rugby games, both home and away, as well as the occasional exhibition rugby game, hockey games, laying of cornerstones, opening of new buildings, Pep Rallies, Remembrance Day service, and similar functions.

At one time a part of the Canadian Officer's Training Corps, and for a while under the leadership of Dr. Leslie Bell, the boys in the blue and white caps and capes have enjoyed a glorious tradition of bandmanship. The Students' Administrative Council took the musical reins about ten years ago, and since that time have outfitted the members in new uniforms expected to last another ten years.

The membership of the band totals about fifty, with forty-two marching at one time. The splendid formation and routines seen at rugby games originate in the mind of Stan Clark, congenial Band Master who, incidentally, also conducts rehearsals and makes arrangements for out of town trips. Stan has an interesting spectacle-in store for Varsity hockey fans this year, as the Blue and White music makers will take to the ice at half time for their first appearance on skates.

While other bands employ a Band Master and formation Master, here at U. of T., Clark performs the tasks of both and seems to gain great satisfaction from doing it. This short baton-waving leader of the marching forty-two is a student at O.C.E. and hopes to teach music upon graduation. He has helped fill the band's ranks for four years, on trombone and baritone horn, and last year as assistant conductor.

NFCUS Luxury Says Acadia McGill Approves, With 50c

Charles Cleather Addresses Baha'i

Charles Cleather, Toronto businessman, will speak at an open meeting sponsored by the Baha'i Student Group at Falconer Hall, Wednesday, 1.00 p.m. He will tell the story of Abdul Baha, the perfect example of what a Baha'i should be.

Crossing the Sahara Desert in 1935, Cleather first heard of the Baha'i Faith. He said: "In my travel in 30 different countries of the world I have developed the conviction that people are much the same everywhere. Differences of race, culture and way of worshipping God are frills, due in large part to climate". His difficulty in reconciling his belief in the basic unity of man with his observation of different peoples, each believing the founder of their religion to be the messenger of God, he feels was instrumental in his finally embracing the Baha'i Faith.

Lack of Effective Results Acadia's Lament of NFCUS

The National Federation of Canadian University Students has been dubbed "parasitic and of no practical importance", by members of the student council at Acadia University in Wolfville, Nova Scotia. The student representatives voted unanimously to withdraw from NFCUS in a meeting held last week.

"Limited finances make the sentimental value of the federation an expensive luxury," said one of the members. According to the Acadia Athenaeum the student body is completely uninterested in NFCUS because of its "questionable accomplishments."

In announcing the decision to withdraw, a student council spokesman said, "the costly administration produces insufficient returns. Possibly because the Canadian student population is too scattered and transitory for the effective functioning of a national federation."

In Montreal, however, the McGill students' council approved payment of a fifty cent fee to NFCUS.

A vote of the McGill student union held last year authorized the payment of the increased fee pending a favourable report by the delegation to this year's NFCUS conference. According to reports, the McGill delegation to the conference were solidly in favour of the increase and expressed the belief that NFCUS could do a worthwhile job if given sufficient financial support.

Four other universities will be forced to follow in the footsteps of either McGill or Acadia as the result of a decision reached at the NFCUS conference held recently on this campus. Toronto, Manitoba, British Columbia, and Dalhousie must either agree to pay the 50 cents per capita levy or get out of NFCUS.

With the exception of Toronto and Manitoba, the universities concerned must give notice of their intention to pay by December 15th if they are to continue as NFCUS members.

The Boards of Governors of both Toronto and Manitoba have rejected fee increases for the current year and as a result these universities are being given until January 31st to obtain the power that would enable them to pay the full fee in the next academic year.

Must Accept Jesus on His Own Terms Niles Preaches at Convocation Hall

Rev. D. T. Niles addressed an assembly of the University Christian Movement on "God's Action and Man's Response." Basing his talk on "The Jesus whom you slew God raised up from the dead," Niles said that we can accept Jesus or reject Him but we can not accept Him except on His own terms.

"God has come to love and to meet you in Jesus," said Niles, "and you must repent, believe and be baptised. Jesus was crucified because he forced people to answer the question, 'Who Am I?'"

Niles pointed out that you cannot fit Jesus into your way of life. God has set a framework in which your answer must be given. You must get into line with the Lord. To believe is to start walking the way that Jesus asked you to walk and you'll find Him.

In India, to be baptised means you must choose between Jesus and your family. Fundamentally, however, the church is your family. As we learn to share the lives of others we find the true Christian faith.

Once you set out on the way of obedience you find Jesus. Eye has not seen nor ear heard, nor has it entered the heart of man but the Lord has prepared the way. Yours is a great heritage.

All students are invited to meet Dr. Niles or any of the other missionaries. Application forms are given out at each talk at Convocation Hall. Last night in addition a question and answer period was held.

Tonight Dr. Niles will speak on "Life Under Pressure."

Big Plans for Weekend

There is a new idea ready for the Queens week-end, the Blue and White Society revealed yesterday. A Hat-Hop has been planned for Friday night's Pep Rally.

"Prizes will be given for the craziest mixed-up hat, and for the craziest mixed-up bloop," said the Blue and White chairman, Bill Harris. "Free tickets to the Saturday night dance will be the prizes," he added.

"An astounding number of people have been coming to our pep rallies with crazy hats," Harris said, "so we decided to see how crazy we could get."

"The pep rally, with square and round dancing will be held at the usual time at the drill hall," Harris reported. The chairman also reported that there is a big petition for the dance held Saturday night.

Queens are selling tickets for their dance at the Royal York at $3.50 a couple. However, the chairman added that the "Queens dance will have two bands, and that many Queens students are buying tickets to the Hart House Football Dance. He pointed out that Hart House would have five bands with Benny Lewis and Ellis McLintock both there.

"The Blue and White Society has also been planning entertainment for hockey games," Bill Harris said. He said that last year skating parties had been held after the games with huge mobs attending them. "We are going to have a trial skating party again this year," he said. "The first game will be December 3, with Montreal playing Toronto here, and there will be free skating from 10.30 to 12.30. He said that last year there were so many there that the ice was ruined, but that they would try to have harder ice this year.

"Perhaps the most popular function of the Blue and White Society, the annual Christmas Tree, will be held again this year," Harris stated. He said that it would be on December 16, the Thursday of the last week of classes in the fall term.

"The Christmas Tree will be held again in the Great Hall," said Harris. "There will be the usual exchange of gifts, President Smith will be there, and singing provided by the University Mixed Choir, and the Hart House Glee Club."

Each Man To His Job Women Want Masters Not Responsibility

Don't sit around waiting for the ideal job to come to you.

This was the advice yesterday of J. K. Bradford of the University Placement Service. He was addressing a group of Victoria College seniors on "How To Get A Job".

Bradford said that many students "search for an ideal job in vain — for the ideal job does not often exist."

Addressing the first in a series of a four-lecture vocational guidance series for members of Victoria College's 1955 graduates, Mr. Bradford said he thought economic conditions in Canada at the present time were normal.

He said that contrary to newspaper publicity he believed there was a general levelling off in the labor market and that from now on, the market would remain more or less steady.

Discussing equal opportunities for women, Mr. Bradford said he doubted women in general really did want "equal opportunities."

Women, he thought, would have to sacrifice too much for the privilege, he thought. "Few girls," he said want to look ahead to positions of responsibility."

Discussing the work of the Placement service over the past seven years — the period in which the service has been operating — he said an effort had been made to bring employers onto the campus and to keep students informed on employment matters.

Nevertheless, Mr. Bradford said, there was no substitute for private initiative: He advised students to get out and look for jobs "on their own hook."

Six ways of going after a job were enumerated by Mr. Bradford as: The National Employment Service, a close check on commercial advertisements for help, personal solicitation, private-operated placement services, friends and relatives who might be able to give a student "an in", letters of application.

Hart House Farm Gets Facelifting Platform and PA

The Caledon Farm was a busy place this weekend as members of Hart House gathered there to repair the buildings. By doing the work themselves the members saved an estimated 200 percent of the cost of construction.

The boys built a platform in the barn for barn-dancing, and installed a permanent PA system. From now on the barn will be available to any group for square dances on Friday night.

The concrete grease trap and septic tank outside the kitchen were finished and logs were cut and stacked for the hut for the sauna.

The estimated cost for the weekend was almost nil, as excess materials and weeping tiles were used for the trap and tank, and the plywood used in the barn was already up there.

Hillel To Hold Debate Trials

Try outs for a debating team to be sent to Montreal later this month will be held tomorrow at 1.00 p.m. at the Hillel Foundation.

Bob Kaplan, the chairman, said, "Last year we had far too few people try out. This year I hope we will have too many." We really want a big turnout this year."

Two finalists will be chosen from the candidates. These two debaters will take a trip to Montreal on November 28, to take part in a debate against a Hillel team from Sir. George Williams, Montreal.

The winning team will have a return match in Montreal sometime in January against the winner of the debate between teams from Queen's and McGill. Of course, Hillel has high hopes of being able to return to Montreal in January. If this is the case the chairman will be allowed to accompany them, making a team of three.

Kaplan said, hopefully, "We expect about 20 people out to-morrow. Last year we had a very poor turnout, I look for an improvement this year, however."

Copying Men?

With Bermuda Shorts

By SANDRA SKY

Have you ever had a man follow you into the ladies' dressing room of a fashionable New York department store? If so, then you probably encountered the same situation that this Varsity reporter did, one afternoon in September, as I blindly felt my way into the entrance from behind a pile of the latest imitations of Dior creations.

With the dresses draped over my arm to eye-level, I was scarcely in a position to take note of the woman at least, I took it for granted that she was a woman who was sharing the tiny cubicle with me. My first glimpse of her was at floor-level, as I stooped to pick up several garments that had dropped from the collection.

Imagine my surprise when I was confronted not by a pair of slender ankles, but by two bulky tweed legs, whose lower extremities were encased in a pair of heavy brogues. A fearful glance upward was no more reassuring. The space immediately above the sock was occupied by two slightly knobby knees, and then the costume continued in the form of a pair of gray flannel knee-britches (to use the bourgeois term). A Harris tweed jacket and the back of a close-

I needed no further explanation. In endeavouring to appear the smart New Yorker, I had neglected to wear my glasses, and had undoubtedly wandered into the men's . . . ah . . . quarters, which I remembered were not far from the dressing rooms.

Quickly zipping my skirt, I started to bolt for the door, when a feminine voice said, "Are you looking for something?" Whirling about, I found myself in the company of a being, who, for all her rather odd attire, was very definitely female.

On being questioned she informed me, in a surprised tone, that she was garbed in the height of fashion . . . namely Bermuda shorts, and a man-tailored jacket. "They're all the rage, here," she continued, smoking a small white pipe studded with rhinestones. "At first, hotel owners and public officials fought against it, but I guess they're resigned to it now. Do men like it? I guess they must, because Yale and Harvard students are wearing Bermudas with sweaters and tweed sports coats."

Having recovered from the initial shock, I thanked my acquaintance.

Physics Pictures Dreary or Cheery?

By R. BERRIN & E. A. CAIN

Many a sombre college hallway brightens the students' path to academic heights with pictures. The pictures, portraits, engravings, maps, charts, or what have you, are to impress, interest, elevate and encourage any possible stirrings in the intellectual life of the weary student. Take for example, the pictures in the Physics building.

Here the dreary dull-brick walls are made cheery with pictures. The stair-walls have artistically arranged portraits of prominent physicists to inspire or depress you with their erudition and your lack of it.

The Physics Building can boast of two hundred and ninety-three or three hundred and twenty-eight pictures (more or less) on its three floors. Also books, statues, some interesting equipment and physics problems are displayed for the edification of budding theorists and physicists.

A few Newtonian items, a statue of Isaac Newton, and his books are prominently displayed on the first floor, near the south entrance. These are the gifts of the University's benefactor, Dr. Sigmund Samuel, whose latest gift, the library, will be officially opened in a few weeks. The books are two volumes of the 1726 edition of "Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica", embodying his laws of motion and the idea of universal gravitation. (You know avoirdupois.)

A picture of physics equipment in Croft Chapter Room recalls the good old days when the Physics Department was in U.C. With the construction of a Building in the 1920's, the portrait collection began.

The pictures were for the most part assembled by Sir John Cunningham McLennan, head of the Physics department till 1935 and for whom the new building was named after. A fine painting of he and his wife, Mrs. McLennan is included in the collection.

A seemingly endless array of pictures represent men from every age in the history of physics; Greek philosophers to modern atom-field theorists; Aristotelian peripatetics to autographed photographs of modern peripatetics. (For the uninformed this last category includes professors who stalk from wall to wall while lecturing.)

There are group pictures of naval men who took specialized radar courses during the last war.

Several pictures of the British Association for the Advancement of Science which met in Toronto many years ago provide additional inspiration and wall coverage. A series of pictures present the presidents of the University; another, the heads of the physics philosophers, educators, mathematicians, astronomers, chemists, pharmacists, theologians, and, of course, physicists. Scott the explorer is presented, accompanied by a fellow explorer, C.S. Wright (also pictured), a graduate in maths and physics of U of T.

Women are scarce in the halls of physics; pictures of them at any rate. Madam Marie Curie is the only one honoured by hanging on the wall. Mme. Curie, among her other accomplishments was the first woman to be Professor of physics at the Sorbonne.

On the walls of the Physics Building hang pictures of physicists; on the walls of the Mining building hang pictures of . . .

Daring Dolls' Desperate Deed Dupes Dudes

Saskatoon (CUP)—It has been reported, that it happened Monday night, and though it seems atrocious, I assure you this is right. When the sun passed from the sky, and darkness did begin, a sortie of every daring girls came out of College Inn.

Before they left their rooms that night, they all their lights did douse, and once they hit the street they headed right for Flegel House. They were out to see if it were true, or just a tale so tall, that Marcel LeBlanc slept with nothing on at all.

Poor girls! They would have been saved an awful lot of grief,

African Racial Problem Domestic or International

The Status of the South African Coloured Population — a Domestic or International Problem — is the topic to be discussed to-night at a United Nations Club meeting. Mr. H. Rund, professor of Applied Mathematics, will address the group.

Professor Rund was born and educated in South Africa and has since studied at German and other European universities. From his work with the South African Civil Rights League, a non-partisan organization sponsoring human rights, he has become thoroughly acquainted with his country's social and political situation.

This is the first of two lectures on the South African racial problem to be delivered by Professor Rund to the UN Club. To-night's talk will consider whether the problem should be under UN jurisdiction or whether it is a purely local affair. The second lecture will deal with the steps toward a solution.

The meeting will be held at the home of Miss Elizabeth Scantlebury, 154 Davisville at 8 P.M.

20 Chess Brains To Take On Whiz

"Check mate!"

This is the cry which perhaps 20 University of Toronto chess addicts hope to shout Wednesday night here, when they take on former Hungarian chess champion, Geza Fuster.

James Forward, who is organizing the "simul" said all university Chess Club members would be invited to match their wits against the master.

The tourney will be held in Hart House. Debates Room at 7.30 p.m., Wednesday.

Fuster is currently residing in Toronto.

Dear Gilda;

I am glad that you are enjoying your stay at University. But you seem to be taking care of yourself. Tony must be a nice man to have covered you with the blanket. I'm sure that you didn't get a cold. There are a few things that I would like to tell you, since you didn't come home for Thanksgiving.

First, don't have more than ten or twelve draughts of beer because you might get sick. It's the same as if you had 12 glasses of milk; don't you think you'd be sick then? And please don't raise your skirt more than two or three inches above your knee in public; I think it used to shock people in my day, but perhaps times have changed. Above all, dear, please don't think I'm interfering. I realize you went to University to have a good time, and your letter really seems very mature.

It reminds me of my life at school, where I took Household science just like you are. I remember one night we went on a hay-ride. What a night that was. I was with a boy named Joe, and was he ever nice.

Well, anyway we were out about 2 in the morning — we'd had a party before and I found a drink called rum, which was very nice; it's not like beer—even less of it makes you sick—and it doesn't keep you running back and forth as much, if you know what I mean, dear. You should try it some time. As soon as we got on the hayride, Joe tried to rush me — that's what they called it in my day. But there to-night. All those interested in gaining a clearer understanding of this situation are invited to attend.

Final arrangements for the UN Caledon week-end will also be discussed at this meeting. Students from universities throughout Ontario and Quebec will gather at Caledon this Friday for a week-end of relaxation and discussion of International Affairs.

Mr. Sol Rae, Chairman of the UN Division of External Affairs will be the guest of honour at the week-end. There is still room for any students interested in participating in the Caledon activities. They are asked to attend the meeting to-night or contact Miss Scantlebury.

Postal Authority Says Chain Letter Big Fraud Scheme

(Exchange) Lures of easy money-through chain letters have hit the campus at the University of Minnesota.

But the get-rich scheme is being worked with a variation on the 1930 fad. These letters are not being sent through the mails but are being passed from hand to hand, thereby avoiding danger of prosecution by the U.S. federal government for violating postal laws.

That's what those who pass the letters and who send money think. But its still fraud say postal authorities.

Here's how the "sell yourself to wealth campaign" (as the current fraud is called) works. And the instructions are quoted from the letter promoting the scheme.

"Pay the person selling you this letter $5." In his presence mail $5 to the first name on the list. Your total cost is $10. The seller will supply envelopes and stamps.

"Make two copies of this letter, eliminating the top name and adding yours at the bottom. Thus, the name which is number two becomes number one and your name becomes number II."

were too many people around. With things like that, dear, full enjoyment should be taken out of it. Besides, I had jeans on and a girl doesn't feel lady-like like that.

I met your father that night too. The next day he called me up and we have been going together ever since. He was terribly narrow-minded at first, but he gradually got over it. He didn't think I should go out with other men after we got engaged, but after all, a girl's got to have her fun while she's young. And that reminds me; there are some things I should tell you about, but I won't hear because your father might get hold of the letter and you know how he is. Your new red sweater must look nice, dear. I hope you won't stretch at people too often, because they might get the idea that you're not a nice girl, and we at home know you are. It reminds me of the time I got a V-necked blouse and wore it to a formal. I've never been so popular in all my life; everyone but your father proposed to me that night. I was frightened though because the blouse kept slipping and I was afraid I might catch cold. I think it is a good idea to get a blouse two sizes too small; at least it stays on that way. Well, I must go. Mr. Jones is coming over to pay a visit in a few minutes and I want to be ready for him. Write and let us know how you're doing. love, mother.

Canadian Students Will Help Finance $33,750 India Health Centre — Gould

A new $33,750 health centre to be built at Patna University in India is going to be partially financed by Canadian university students, it was revealed here last night.

The Canadian share of the project will amount to $6,250, said Ron Gould, local chairman of the World University Students' organization. Students at the University of Toronto will donate a substantial percentage of this amount, he said.

The project has top-priority with Canadian WUS this year. It will accommodate some 10,000 students at Patna University and will be modelled after a recently-completed, Delhi health centre which was also partially supported by Canadian WUS in 1954.

The health centre at Patna will operate on a student insurance scheme. It will have examination rooms, up-to-date medical and x-ray equipment, a laboratory, a ward for non-infectious cases, a room for minor operations and a small canteen.

Chairman Gould stressed that the Canadian contribution to the centre was not a "gift of mercy" but rather that it was meant as an incentive "to help them to help themselves."

Half the cost of the project—about $16,250—will be carried by a grant given by the provincial government of Bihar—the Indian province in which Patna University is located.

National and local branches of India's WUS will finance the balance of the cost—about $11,000, Gould said.

Plans for Canadian participation in the project were drawn up recently at the three-day national convention of Canadian WUS here. Gould said that the University of Toronto hopes to raise about $5,000 during a week-long SHARE campaign in February.

Half of this amount, he said, would go "un-earmarked" to WUS headquarters at Geneva for use in a bag-full of other WUS international projects.

Canada sends a total $15,000 overseas to Geneva every year for WUS distribution.

Indian University students recuperate in a health centre similar to one planned to be built at Patna University, India, this year. Canadian students will be asked to contribute to the project during February's SHARE campaign.

if they were only in the habit of reading all the Sheaf. They would have seen, as we have printed many times before, that one Marcel LeBlanc has left us, for a foreign shore.

But, alas, these girls they did not know, it seems very clear, or else they would not have ventured forth upon a night so drear. And I am told that these girls made, a very happy throng, and as they wandered down the street they loudly sang this song. We are the girls from College Inn. We don't smoke, and don't drink gin.

We don't beef and we don't grouch.

We don't like parties, but we're hell on a couch.

Now the boys seem to like a panty raid.

They catch us in bed, and make us afraid.

They go running off thinking, they're such sports.

We'll see how they like it if we steal their shorts.

With a Hey! and a Nonny, and an old heave ho!

In at the window, we will go. Now please don't think that we are rude.

We just want to see if Marcel sleeps nude.

So with a wiggle, and a giggle, and a snap of your girdle,

Get in at the window, it's the last hurdle.

Once inside, we'll our dirty work begin.

Then we'll GO! GO! GO!

We're the girls from College Inn.

Sanctimonious Guardians

Our friends, the editors of Campus Comment, have taken a roundhouse blast at all and sundry whom they believe to be "stunned into silence" concerning the proposed Students' Union.

The customary combination of idealism and practicality which has characterized the most successful of the Socialists of our age has completely disintegrated in this article into a concatenate web of half-truths, misinterpretation and lack of information.

Throughout the article reference is made to the "pressing problems" for which the Students' Union was the proposed solutions. Only once and then only vaguely is any specific mention made of what these problems were and are.

The writer finds it strange that Victoria was criticized for going ahead with its Students' Union. In point of fact it was the erection of the Vic Union which constituted the first nail in the coffin of the concept of the all-University union.

Continuing on to discuss the inability of Hart House to satisfy the needs of its members the writer is apparently unaware that the chief factor in the quashing of the Union was the fact that Hart House would become an "eight million dollar white elephant."

If the writers of the Campus Comment are trying to become the "self appointed guardians of the public good" let them come forward with recommendations which carry the weight of reason. Furthermore let them have the full available knowledge at their disposal to combine with an adequate definition of the terms they bandy so freely. Then, perhaps we shall hear from them what "actions are consistent with the ideals they so sanctimoniously proclaim".

Until that happens we will retire to our little glass house and throw stones.

Healthy Scepticism

During this week a committee of interested people is sponsoring the University Christian Mission.

This series of meetings and bull sessions is under the official patronage of the president of the University along with other distinguished citizens.

It is interesting to note that the purpose of the mission has been defined by the chairman of the executive committee in terms of making sure that each generation of students hears a reasoned presentation of the gospel. The president of the University "justifies" the mission by saying that religion is too important for the individual to be left to misty Mysticism.

The comments of these two gentlemen demand, by reason of the position they hold, to be considered. However, we are prone to ask one question.

Where is the man who said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me"?

Where is the man who spoke in the paradoxes of the beatitudes? And where is the man who came to his end without friends and without the social approval his followers have today?

What "reasoned presentation" prompted his immediate disciples to "go into all the world"? By what "reasoned presentation" were they persuaded to go to their death?

We will just stick to healthy scepticism.

lost, wandering creatures

By M. F. QUINLAN

ever answer any problems?

Mere outward forms, to be sure, are "inadequate" and "incomprehensive", and if Religious Knowledge was limited to these forms alone; there would be no good in continuing its teaching. But how explain these outward forms? Do not these very words imply the presence of an inner something, an inner source of these forms? Simply because modern society for the most part has lost sight of this inner spirit, shall we jettison the whole system? Why not make a renewed effort to penetrate these forms? Are they wrong in themselves? Ritual is part of man's nature; he expresses his beliefs in some concrete way to bring them closer to his human nature. The forms are not in themselves evil; the evil arises when they replace that which they are intended to represent, and that is our fault.

Regarding this spirit of inquiry the modern way seems to consist in flatly rejecting all traditional forms, any kind of orthodoxy. We must have complete liberty of thought, keep an open mind. But an open mind is like an open mouth; it should close on something solid once in a while.

True, the spirit of inquiry is indispensable. To it we owe so much in the way of scientific progress in this age. But the tendency today is to disregard the past completely, throw out the "old-fashioned" and "mediaeval" ideas. Start in afresh. With what? Are we "liberated" college students to ignore the accumulated wisdom of the hundreds of years on the grounds that we must maintain our "intellectual integrity"? Is every student to choose his own kind of religion? What will be his criteria if he has been taught nothing of theology?

Many religions of the present day do not provide intellectual matter for the inquiring mind to work on. Then why not submit the wisdom of the past to his own judgement, submitting it, however, with all humility on his part, for who is he compared to the hundreds of great minds of the past centuries?

We must not lose the spirit of inquiry. But neither must we lose the thought of the past simply because it is past, nor reject all orthodox systems simply because it is orthodox. An orthodoxy represents a set of values, without which man is a lost, wandering creature with nothing to guide him.

Wasters

The Editor,
The Varsity.

"Do you want a sandwich?" a student asked his friend in the J.C.R., where they were having lunch. The answer was "no". "Well here it goes", said the student, and threw the sandwich into the waste-basket.

A girl ate only the soft parts of her sandwich, and threw away the crusts. Another girl threw away an egg which she thought was not hard enough.

And these wasters are called students. You would think that they are old enough to know better, not to be like children, who don't know the value of a piece of bread.

There are millions of people who go hungry to bed every night. I remember seeing my brother eating from a pot of cold potato peels after a scanty meal. That was just a few years ago, in Europe. But can Canada afford to waste its food, just because it is so much blessed right now?

Siegfried Neukirch, II U.C.

Christmas

The Editor,
The Varsity.

This week there is, across our campus an attempt to increase the Christian activity among students and faculty alike, by the Christian Mission. We must hope that after its end there will be increased Christian thought and action in our faculties and colleges.

It seems to us that our thoughts should turn first to the times in our lives when Christ should be the centre and is not.

One such time is Christmas. People have the idea of celebration but have forgotten to some extent the real reason for the celebration. Some of our society fails, year after year, to see behind Christmas the light of the star over Bethlehem, and the Baby Jesus in the manger.

On the campus there are several groups trying to put forth the idea for us to bring Christ back into Christmas. We sincerely hope that such an idea will gain the support of the students.

Intellectual Content

You are quite right. The screaming headlines about the mission in a downtown paper last Thursday was a misrepresentation in totally bad taste. However, if "paganism" is taken in its root meaning of contempt for civilized values, the daily press provides prima facie evidence that paganism has not yet been banished from the Canadian scene!

My own view is that a basic need of Canadians is to do some hard thinking about the intellectual content of the Christian faith. If the members of the university fail here, our nation is lost.

Mr. Niles' primary purpose in his address is to spur us all into serious thought. From his eastern background, the approaches Christianity in a way which is quite unusual, for most of us. By his use of parable, by his extreme statements he is trying to raise questions which will help us to look at Jesus Christ from a totally new aspect.
